If anyone has a different interpretation, he should be quite sure about it. It was said, "Oh, they can authorize them to change it." But the conference report authorizes the imposition of every order and price structure and regulation which was in effect from the last day of June. It authorizes the imposition of a great many regulations that I do not even know about. I shall not give my approval. The OPA shall not have my consent to restore every regulation which it previously had in effect on the 30th of June. I do not know what other Senators will vote for, but what I have just stated is what will be done under authority of section 18 of the conference report. If that is not the intent, subsection 2 (e), relating to meat, flour, or coffee should be stricken from the bill, and the Price Administrator should issue new regulations and new orders that comply with section 8 of subsection (e) of the proposed measure, so as to provide that controls shall not be established on meat or milk or products related thereto until after August 20.

Our conferees would, nevertheless, have the Senate of the United States, as soon as the President signs the bill, roll back all prices to those which prevailed on June 30, 1946, except those relating to meat, flour, and coffee.

There is another reason why subdivision (2) of section 18 ought not to be incorporated into the law.

I am advised that the language of the subdivision may conceivably validate every OPA regulation which was then in effect, not as an OPA regulation but as a regulation which has all the effect of congressional enactment or congressional approval.

Certainly the Senate has no such intention. It has never scrutinized all of such regulations nor does it have any intention of so doing.

In conclusion, I wish to ask the Senate if we are ever to get back to a free economy. Are we ever to get back? If so, when will we have decontrol? Will we have it next year? There will be another emergency just like the one asserted today. There will be the same inflationary forces at work then that are at work now, whether the Congress passes the present OPA measure or not. And whether they are at work then will not make any difference. The fact that we have had OPA off our backs for 3 weeks does not in any sense counteract the inflationary forces which are at work today. The Nation now faces a $285,000,000,000 debt, greater than we ever thought we could possibly carry. So long as the Government continues to depreciate the value of the dollar inflationary forces will be at work.

Mr. President, why do we want to be permanently regimented? Do we want to have shackled upon our backs a permanent price-control program? Is America afraid to go back to her traditional free-enterprise system? Have we not demonstrated that, without these price impediments, we can obtain maximum production? Has it not been admitted by all of us that if we obtain maximum production it will be the best way, under a price-control program, to fight inflation?

Mr. President, I conclude with the reading of an editorial. I am not sure from what newspaper it has come, but I should like to give the newspaper credit for it, and would if I knew its name. The editorial reads as follows:

THE AGONY GOES ON

A Senate-House conference committee has decided to prolong the OPAgony for another year, with remedies to ease the pain of its final demise.

The measure is expected to get congressional approval this week.

And I suppose it will receive it.

President Truman is reported ready to sign it, reluctantly, as the best bill he can get.

Paul Porter, the harried head of OPA, says a lot of damage has been done. He says many of the eggs in the price-control basket have been smashed. He says some of the eggs that have just rolled out of the basket can be recovered.

Mr. President, if it is such a poor Price Control Act why do the OPA officials want it? Why do they want it if it will not do them any good?

It is unfortunate that OPA is getting a new lease on life in any form.

OPA died a Lazarus-like death June 30, and since then the good sense of American housewives, the good sense of American businessmen, and the forces of a free, competitive economy have operated—as they always do—to check and balance the markets.

What a wonderful statement. The truth of it has been proven by the figures which I have already read into the RECORD.

I read the remainder of the editorial:

Butter went down 4 cents a pound last week. Poultry fell off 6 cents. The black market virtually went out of business.

Organized buyers' strikes were a flop, according to a survey of the New York Times. But the shopping skill of housewives, coupled with the end of hoarding, was extremely effective.

The housewife learned during the war how to turn to substitutes. She varied her family's fare with many beneficial, low-priced items. Her experience is a valuable family asset today and a potent weapon against inflation.

Now the new OPA bill again will substitute artificial controls for the natural laws of supply and demand over much of the Nation's economy.

And we will probably have to go through the agony all over again next year—if, indeed, the habit of control-by-Washington has not by that time become permanently entrenched.

One thing, and one alone, as we see it, can cut the Nation free of all these controls: Production.

Production such as we haven't had since war's end.

Production which has been held back by strikes, greed, selfishness, ceilings.

Sometimes one wonders what America is afraid of. America, the giant, lagging along like a pygmy.

America worrying first about deflation and then inflation.

America talking about depression when there is enough pent-up demand in our own country alone to keep every factory chimney spouting smoke for 5 years.

America, afraid of its own strength.

America, still toying with the phony idea of an economy of scarcity.

America, suspicious of its mighty productive capacity—when every other country in the world, including Communist Russia, is striving and straining to emulate our production methods.

We hold in our hands the cure for all our economic ills—and we turn supinely to Washington.

We cry for help. We cry for protection. And how the bureaucrats love it. How it puffs up their sense of self-importance.

We need a new definition of freedom from fear. Freedom from fear of ourselves.

We need a reaffirmation of faith and self-reliance. They were the virtues of our forefathers. They made this country great. Their opposites, fear and dependence, can drag this country down.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for the time which I have been allowed to consume. If any Member of the Senate wishes to ask me a question, I shall be glad to try and answer it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that I think he has presented a very masterful argument in behalf of the viewpoint which he sustains.

I wish to ask a question for my own information. The Senator has presented figures respecting meat production and meat prices. Under the terms of the pending conference report, if a decontrol board honestly and sympathetically administered the proposal, would it not be the Senator's conclusion that there would be no renewal of meat controls?

Mr. WHERRY. First, Mr. President, I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that I appreciate his complimentary remarks.

In answer to his question, I may say that I believe the machinery necessary to control the situation is at hand. If the statute is honestly administered by the OPA, and if it views the situation in the light in which it has been presented, it will be compelled, under the formula, to decontrol meat.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Permanently?

Mr. WHERRY. Permanently, or within a 30-day period.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, again I wish to say that the distinguished Senator from Michigan has placed his finger on the crucial question. He did it this afternoon before any other Senator did it. I should like to have the honor of having done so myself.

If we judge the future by the past, we will not obtain the kind of an administration as that to which the Senator and I have referred. My theory is that the pending measure is a control measure, and control will be in effect for another year. One more reason for it being in effect is that the OPA wants to pay subsidies because—well, I shall not say why. Senators can figure it out for themselves.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REED. I wish to say that I subscribe to the statement which was made by the able Senator from Michigan with respect to the magnificent and effective address which the Senator from Nebraska has made this afternoon. He has covered the subject completely and thoroughly.

I wish to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether in his opinion, with a 3,500,000,000 bushel corn crop almost assured, with a winter wheat crop almost harvested, with a spring wheat crop now being harvested, the aggregate of which will be 1,140,000,000 or 1,150,000,000 bushels and with a billion and a half bushels of oats available for human food, animal feed, and for famine relief, there is the remotest need for the restoration of controls on grain?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I say to the distinguished Senator from Kansas that I wish to thank him also for his remarks.

In my opinion, there is not the slightest need for control of grain. I was informed recently by one of the top flight men in agriculture that if the controls had been left off, and the buying countries were compelled to buy on the world's markets instead of under ceiling prices, the only thing we would have to worry about in this country would be the placing of floors under grain instead of establishing ceiling prices by the 15th day of September.

Mr. REED. I agree with what the Senator from Michigan has said. I agreed in a conversation with the Senator from Maryland, who is on his feet, and who is one of the conferees who has done at least a conscientious job, that if the Decontrol Board provided for by the pending measure honestly administers it in good faith, it will probably be the best way by which to handle the problem.

I think the Senator from Nebraska will agree with that statement. But I ask him if there is a single page in the history of the administration of the OPA, and in any utterance of Paul Porter or Chester Bowles, which would give Congress any right to assume for a moment that the pending measure, if enacted into law, would be administered in good faith.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in answering the distinguished Senator's question, I answer from my own experience. There is not. I just do not have faith.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. If the distinguished Senator from Ohio were on the floor, I should be glad to yield to him. I am through with my statement, and I should be glad to give him an opportunity to ask me any question he desired to ask.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. We will all agree, of course, that we cannot draft any legislation which can be guaranteed to prevent malfeasance or nonfeasance. When the provisions in regard to the Decontrol Board were under consideration and were being drafted, we tried to throw every reasonable safeguard around the plan we could think of. We tried to insist that the Board should be an independent Board. We endeavored to make such provision as would set forth unmistakably that principle, and, as far as possible for us to do in a legislative way, to lay down that requirement.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not know whether the Senator was on the floor when I made my opening remarks, but I shall always believe to my dying day that when the conferees on the part of the Senate went into the conference, after the experience we had had with the first bill, and after the instructions given the Senate conferees, after the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio that the Senate conferees could not have kept meat decontrolled and milk decontrolled, the Senate conferees should have come back to the Senate for further instructions. Furthermore, they should have demanded from the House conferees, because they had reached an impasse, that they take those two provisions back and have a vote in the House. If our conferees had done that and had then come back and said, it could not be effected, that it was not possible, that the House conferees voted the Senate conferees down, I would say our conferees had some justification for bringing this compromise measure back to the Senate. But they did not do that.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course, some things you can do in conference and some things you cannot do. We did suggest to the House conferees again and again that they go back and get an expression of opinion from the House, but we were not in a position to demand that course of them.

Mr. WHERRY. I fail to understand. If I had been on a conference committee and found that I could not retain decontrols, after the Senate had put them in by a vote of 2 to 1, and after it was the second bill we had sent to them, I would have come back for further instructions, or resigned as a conferee.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, all those were, theoretically speaking, possible actions, and it may be that a return for fresh instructions would have been desirable.

Mr. WHERRY. That is my opinion.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. We could not, however, demand that the House conferees go back, but we did insist on our own views. Then, when this Board was being set up by law, we did try to see to it that, so far as possible, it would be an independent board, that the members would be men of high standing, men of independence, men who would be more or less independent, not connected with the operations in the past of the OPA.

Furthermore—and I think this is a matter of considerable importance—we also tried to see to it that these men would have nothing else to do. If members of such a board, or any other kind of administrators, have general administrative duties, and in addition have powers to decontrol or recontrol, it can readily be seen they have a combination of duties which causes some to be slighted or deferred in order of precedence. So we did see to it that these men would be charged with one thing only, that is powers of decontrol and recontrol.

Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska, would the Senator have preferred that there be a roll-back of meat as of the date of the passage of the bill? I assume not.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to answer the Senator's question. I am not in favor of a roll-back; I am not in favor of control of meat at all. I think that is what the Senate conferees should have stood for, because the Senate voted 49 to 26, nearly 2 to 1, that meat should be decontrolled.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I voted that way on the floor, and I voted that way in conference as long as I had a chance of success.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator should have kept on voting that way.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. It was not possible to put over the Senate's position, and we reached the stage when we decided on a disagreement. Possibly the thing to have done was to disagree and come back for instructions. But from my experience as a conferee, when a bill comes back because of disagreement, no one knows what will happen, and therefore, whether our judgment was wise or not in seeking a return is a matter of risky speculation. We thought it our duty to try to get the best bill we could in conference. I happened to make the suggestion in regard to the 30 days, which later was changed to August 20, because that provided something of a turnaround period. Then, when we set up our standards, as we did, these standards are so definite and so far-reaching that no recontrol or decontrol board could put the controls back, if the conditions were met, unless they violated their oath of office. I think there is a considerable amount of weight to be attached to the fact the program laid down for the new board is a very specific one, going about as far as legislation could outline.

Mr. WHERRY. I have a high regard for the Senator from Maryland. He did a good job, especially for poultry. The vote to decontrol meat in the Senate was 49 to 26. I will always believe that if the House conferees would not accept that, the Senate conferees should have had the House vote on it. If they had voted on it, they might have concurred, and it would not have been a subject for compromise. It was so far reaching, and we had had so much debate about it, there was such an understanding about it the last time we passed the bill, I think it was the duty of the conferees to come back to the Senate, if they could not get it agreed to, and ask for further instructions, whether they should compromise or stand by the specific decontrols adopted in the Senate.

Mr. President, I think I am absolutely sound in that position. If that is not to be done, what is the use debating a bill for 30 days, what is the use of taking the time of the Senate, if the conferees are going into the conference and wreck the bill?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator aware of the fact that when we passed the joint resolution we provided for recontrol?

Mr. WHERRY. I will answer the Senator from Ohio in this way: When we passed the joint resolution, there was a specific exemption for decontrolling meat and poultry, there was a specific exemption for decontrolling milk and butter.

Mr. TAFT. Let me read to the Senator what the bill contained when it passed the Senate:

> Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall establish, such maximum prices with respect to such commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in the judgment of the Secretary are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

When we had the bill before us on the floor of the Senate, I asked the distinguished Senator from Kentucky whether in his opinion that applied to commodities which were specifically decontrolled, and he replied that in this opinion it did. The Senator from Nebraska was here. No one raised any question as to that interpretation of the Senator from Kentucky. So that as a matter of fact the bill has always provided for recontrol, and the modifications made in the conference committee were not in fact substantial changes in the effect of the joint resolution as it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to say, just as forcefully but as courteously as I can, that the bill does not provide that; and I have just as much right to my interpretation as the distinguished Senator from Ohio has to his. There are two specific decontrols in the joint resolution, just as specific as decontrolling cotton is in it. I guarantee cotton will never be controlled. If the conferees had stood fast by the meat decontrol amendment and the milk decontrol amendment, regardless of how the Senator may interpret it, they would never recontrol it under the joint resolution as it passed the Senate. That is my answer.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator says so, but it is not so.

Mr. WHERRY. I have just as much right to my opinion as the Senator has to his.

Mr. TAFT. It says "agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed"——

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; the Senator is trying to read in from another section.

Mr. TAFT. "Is in short supply, and that the"——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor. The Senator is trying to read into the decontrol of meat, which was passed in the Senate by a 2 to 1 vote, a section which is outside of the specific decontrols. I do not care whether the Senator from Ohio or the distinguished majority leader interpret it that way or not. Every man who voted to decontrol milk and butter understood and voted to decontrol milk and butter, and Senators voted to decontrol meat, and the Senator from Ohio knows it, and so does the Senator from Kentucky. I think it is a very poor defense now to back up a conference report by saying that there are not decontrols in the measure, regardless of the fact that we put them in.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield. But I want to say another thing. We thought when we decontrolled meat we had it decontrolled. We did not have it decontrolled at all, according to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. What are they going to do with this? How are they going to interpret this measure? How can they interpret an act about which the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky do not even agree now? I guess they did finally get together, but they did not agree on what the decontrol provisions were. How will they interpret it? They will do just what they want to do. The Board will do just what they want to do, and will do just what the President tells them to do.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to say that I agree that the Senator's last statement sums up the whole thing he has been discussing for 2 hours, that when all is said and done they are going to do exactly what they want to do in administering controls.

Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have had letters on this subject from some of the ablest men in the United States, and I should like to suggest to Senators that in a period of 30 days plans cannot be made which will produce the results which are necessary in the United States. There is not a man in this Chamber who would put his money into a production enterprise for 30 days, not knowing what the Decontrol Board and the Administrator of OPA are going to do.

Mr. WHERRY. That is true.

Mr. HAWKES. Without even raising the question of good faith, I say to the Senate that the uncertainty represented by the language of this measure will retard production, it will injure the American people, and they will go right back to the same black market and all that we were in when we passed a bill which really meant something.

May I go one step further and say while I am on my feet that I read to the Senate on the night of the vote on the last OPA bill the story of what happened in France in 1793 and 1794, when they even got to the point where they cut the heads off the citizens by the dozen, and there is a list of them in the RECORD, for going into the black market and refusing to produce and abide by the price regulations. I want to say to the Senate that today at this minute a new bill is ready for introduction in the legislative body of France pronouncing the death sentence upon anyone who deals in the black market or who fails to abide by the laws in regard to the production and sale of foods and necessities of life. Think of that, Senators! They are back to the same thing again. And why are they back to it? Because they are failing to obtain production through the control and the regulation of the individual.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. President, I have sent for the record. I did not have it before me when the distinguished Senator from Ohio read what he said he thought was a provision in the former bill to decontrol meat and milk. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to page 10, sections 7 and 8 of the bill, which the Senate passed. I read section 7 as follows:

(7) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to livestock, poultry, or eggs, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock, poultry, or eggs.

Section 8 is as follows:

(8) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to cottonseed, soybeans, or products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans.

Section 9 makes the same provision respecting milk and food and feed produced in the processing of milk.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I can realize that for the period of 30 days until August 20 is a very short time. No one questions that fact for a moment, but we were seeking to secure the best terms available.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator asked me a question——

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Let me suggest first——

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator asked me a question and I will answer him now. What is proposed to be done will lead all the elevator men in the country to believe that they have until August 20 to get rid of the grain at the price at which they bought it. That is not what we have done at all. By section 18 there are put into effect immediately all the orders, prices and regulations that OPA had in effect in the last week in June, and that means that if today a man has grain which he bought at the price at which the Senator from Ohio said he bought it for, and the President signs this measure tonight, he will have to take the ceiling price of the last week in June until he gets relief and he can obtain relief in 30 days if I understand the procedure with respect to application for relief. So it will cause the elevator owners and the feed merchants to become involved in a chaotic market which will force many of them into bankruptcy.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I do not follow the interpretation of the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. No two individuals would interpret the measure the same, I presume. There are 96 men in the Senate who would no doubt interpret it in different ways.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. May I be permitted to comment for just a moment?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Much stress has been laid on the fact that the members of the Decontrol Board may not do their duty. How can we guarantee that they will do their duty? How can we guarantee that any official in an administrative office will always perform satisfactorily all of his duties? But what have we done by way of direction? We have set up standards, and we require findings of fact. It purely would not be within the caprice and the discretion of the Decontrol Board to do whatever they wanted to do, if in conflict with the standards set up and without the necessity for making of findings as to facts. If the members of this Board determine upon findings and follow out the standards which are set up for them, then they must be doing what ought to be done. It does seem to me that it is very much better to require findings and to require standards than not to have any such requirement. That is what we have attempted to arrange for in this particular matter. I do not see how, when we attempt to make provisions as to the performance of duties by public officials, that we can do better than set up standards, require findings, or do otherwise than set forth requirements. What else can the legislative branch do?

Mr. WHERRY. I will answer that question. Congress ought to decontrol meat and milk. We ought to tell the OPA officials that that is what they are to do, and not leave it up to them. The provision in that respect should be made by statute.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I voted that way.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not complaining. The Senator asked me the question, and I answered him.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. It was not possible to secure full approval of the Senate's position.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it was.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. That adherence to the Senate's position was not possible if the conferees disagreed, and then no one could tell what would eventually result, that is, whether the Congress would ever agree upon a bill, and, if so, what would be its provisions and what would happen to industry because of such delay and confusion.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I was very greatly interested in the Senator's comments respecting section 18, and it is with reference to that that I desire to ask him his judgment. I note the language in that section:

SEC. 18. (1) The provisions of this act shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, and (2) all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this act had been enacted on June 30, 1946.

I wanted to ask the Senator two or three questions to enable me to understand clearly his position. Am I to understand that the Senator construes the language I have read, particularly the reference to price schedules, to mean that if the conference report is approved and becomes law, the prices we will say of grain and of livestock and of poultry and of milk products which prevailed on June 30, 1946, will go into effect immediately?

Mr. WHERRY. That is my understanding of the conference report.

Mr. DONNELL. That leads me to the further question. Back on page 4 of the report, paragraph 8, subparagraph (A) contains the following language:

(8) (A) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable prior to August 21, 1946, with respect to livestock, milk, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock or milk; with respect to cottonseed or soybeans, or food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from cottonseed or soybeans; with respect to grains for which standards have been established under the United States Grain Standards Act, as amended, or any livestock or poultry feed processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom.

The question I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska is this: Obviously there appears to be a conflict between the two sections. Section 18 would seem to put into effect all price schedules in effect June 30, 1946. On the other hand, the section I have last read would indicate, as I have quoted from it, very clearly that no maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable prior to August 21, 1946.

Now I want to ask the Senator, Is it not a general rule of statutory construction that a court will endeavor to harmonize all portions of the act?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Would it not be true, therefore, that it would be a permissible construction for the court to hold the language in section 18 to be a generalization, and the portion on page 4 to be a particularization, to quote substantially from my distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON]? Would it not be permissible therefore for the court to hold that while section 18 provides generally for a reduction of price schedules, as to the particular things stated, from which I have quoted on page 4, there shall be no reduction of maximum prices until August 21, 1946, and would not that, under the settled rules of statutory construction, be the normal construction for a court to place on this legislation?

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the distinguished Senator I will say that we are the ones who are called upon to pass upon that when we vote upon this report. I agree that there is that provision on page 4 which the Senator read. I agree that section 18 provides for a general price control, that is, it is general in that it puts into effect all the prices of June. But whether it is controlling, or whether the other portion is controlling, or whether the time will come when we have to pass upon it, it is my theory that in the next 20 days the act will be construed in such a way that section 18 will be controlling, and that the only relief that can be obtained is through some court action, and if it shall be construed that the language on page 4 is controlling, then section 18 should be stricken from the measure entirely. Does the Senator see what I mean?

Mr. DONNELL. I see the Senator's point, and I can well understand it. I can see where there is obviously an apparent contradiction between the two sections. On the other hand while it devolves on the Senate to decide now at this time what this measure means and whether we are going to support it, yet it seems to me that in deciding it we should employ the well-established rules of statutory construction, and that if it be possible to harmonize the two sections along the lines I have indicated, namely, that section 18 is a generalization which, as to particular matters embraced in earlier portions of the measure would not apply, it would seem to me that the Senate would be justified in assuming that that is the correct meaning of the proposed legislation.

Mr. WHERRY. I submit to the distinguished Senator from Missouri that, even though we accept his premise and his conclusion, what the Senate should do is to write into the act what we mean, and only what we mean. We should not make it impossible for any segment of industry to rely upon a court for a judicial decision to determine whether section 18 is applicable, or whether the section on page 4 is applicable. The proposed law will create complete confusion. My experience, in the light of section 18, leads me to believe that OPA will say that not only did Congress intend that price control should be reestablished, but that it intended to validate every price regulation and order written by OPA, when we make the act effective as of June 30, 1946.

Mr. DONNELL. If OPA were to take the position that section 18 would restore the prices on grain, livestock, milk, soybeans, and so forth, mentioned on page 4, how could OPA explain away the provision on page 4? I see the Senator's point, but does it not follow that in determining whether to approve the proposed act which is now before us for consideration we should take into consideration, not the apparent conflicts, but the well-established rules of statutory construction, under which it would appear that both the provisions of section 18 and the provisions on page 4 can be harmonized?

Mr. WHERRY. This brings up the very thing mentioned by the Senator from Ohio. There were two specific exemptions in the former bill, and yet in another section in the bill there was a provision that no maximum price should be established. The distinguished Senator says that there can be recontrol. What is controlling? Is the general section controlling, and can recontrol be established regardless of the two special exemptions, or are the two special exemptions controlling? My opinion is that if we leave section 18 in the joint resolution, that is exactly how the OPA will construe it. It will establish prices as of June 30, and they will involve everyone who operates in the grain market or in the livestock market. Those will be the prices at which they will have to sell between now and August 20. That is my opinion. The OPA will go to court and will have every reason in the world why its interpretation of section 18 should be controlling.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I find myself in agreement with the Senator from Missouri with reference to the question of statutory construction. But I wish to make this point with reference to the practical situation which will be faced by those who have purchased grain in the markets since price control was removed. Let us assume that the Senator's construction is correct. Let us assume that there is no legal objection to any man who has made grain purchases going into the open market and selling the grain for any price he can get. As a practical matter, where will he find a buyer after this provision becomes law? Who would undertake to pay a price above what may be expected to be the ceiling in the period between the time this act becomes law and the time when the Decontrol Board may operate? This seems to me to be the only possible answer—and if the distinguished Senator from Ohio agrees with me, I hope he will give me his opinion on this point: The only answer I can see will rest in the power—if there be power—in the Government, by another subsidy or the equivalent of a subsidy, to make up to those people the difference between the price they paid in an open, uncontrolled market, and the price at which they could have bought the product later in a controlled market. If that cannot be done, I can see no alternative to taking a heavy loss, directly attributable to this legislation.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in connection with this matter?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. No subsidy can be imposed unless it was formerly imposed. The joint resolution specifically so provides. So the only way the OPA could take care of the situation would be by increasing the price which may be charged. That is what I understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to say would be done in the case of grain. But I do not find that assurance in the case of other commodities. The problem today is no different from what it was a week ago. It is exactly the same. People have been buying commodities, although they knew that Congress might restore price control. The situation on the 10th of August will be no different from that on the 20th of August. The situation is very undesirable, but it is no different in kind from what has been the case during the entire intermission.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I am in accord with the Senator from Ohio. Everyone who has made a purchase or sale in this period has been on notice that the Congress could not make up its mind to come to any conclusion as between the two Houses, or any conclusion that it felt 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue would approve. After all, that was the trouble. In my opinion the conference report is not a meeting of minds on the basis of compromise between the two Houses of Congress. It is a face-saving device for 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. After listening to the arguments as to the interpretation of section 18 and the provisions on page 4, it seems to me that we are called upon to vote on something with respect to which there is a conflict of opinion which can be settled only by a court in the application of a statutory rule of construction. We are in a position where something must be done by August 20.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is impossible to have a construction by any court within that period of time. So we say to the people, "Allow the construction of the OPA board to take effect. You will deal at your peril. We in the Senate cannot agree as to what the law means. Go ahead and act, and if you are wrong you will be sued by the United States Government." Is not that exactly the position in which we find ourselves?

Mr. WHERRY. I think that states the position exactly.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, these provisions were in the original law. This question could have been debated fully at the time the original law was enacted. Exactly the same problem rose at the very beginning in connection with the original bill. It may be an objection to the entire joint resolution, but the problem existed at that time, and was discussed to some extent.

Mr. FERGUSON. The fact that it was in the original bill does not make any difference now. We now find ourselves confronted with this question, and we are saying to the people of the United States, "Make your choice at your peril."

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to make this observation: There is a great deal of talk to the effect that those who have been making purchases and forward orders, and who have been filling the pipe lines with goods were doing so at their peril. I think that is an utterly fallacious and completely dangerous doctrine. From the moment of time when the President vetoed the bill there was no presumption that there would be another bill; and under my view no American citizen should suffer for what he did during the interim.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Colorado. That is exactly the way I tried to put it. He has done it forcefully, and his suggestion is crystal clear as to the position which I take.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. HILL, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. REVERCOMB conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate for 1 week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

WHY OPA SHOULD NOT BE REVIVED

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. First of all, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed an article entitled "High Lights of Compromise for Price Control Revival," as set forth in one of the Washington newspapers.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGH LIGHTS OF COMPROMISE FOR PRICE CONTROL REVIVAL

Here's what the price control compromise does:

1. Restores price and rent until June 30, 1947, but with sharply curtailed OPA discretion, and divided authority.

2. Sets up a new three-man Decontrol Board, which will have powers to reestablish controls. The Board could override OPA and the Secretary of Agriculture to remove controls on any commodity. It could restore controls on any of the basic foods and other items previously exempted by the Senate.

3. Ceilings on 5 of these commodities—meat, dairy products, grains, cottonseed and soybeans—will go back August 21 unless the board decides otherwise. These items must remain ceiling-free until that date.

4. No controls can be imposed on poultry, eggs, petroleum or tobacco unless the Board orders. In no event can the Board recontrol these before August 21.

5. In addition, the Board has the same broad power to order removal of ceilings on other commodities it was granted in the recently vetoed bill.

6. Subject to the Board's final say, the Secretary of Agriculture, rather than OPA, would decide what farm commodities can be controlled.

7. OPA's rent-control authority is continued unchanged.

8. Subject to the Decontrol Board's overall orders, OPA would continue to set ceilings on industrial goods. But its discretion would be sharply curtained by the bill's new pricing formula.

9. Both rent controls and industrial price ceilings would be restored on the day the President signs the bill. OPA is expected to issue interim regulations covering the 30 days allowed for workng out the higher ceilings required by the new pricing formula.

10. This formula requires OPA to set ceilings for manufacturers on an industry-wide basis, reflecting their average 1940 price for each product, plus increases in cost since. OPA could refuse the increase to manufacturers already receiving costs "plus a reasonable profit" if the increase would not aid production, or if it would reduce production of equally needed items.

11. OPA still would retain considerably more discretion than under the Taft amendment. For example, it could make "reasonable adjustments for conditions resulting from abnormal volume of production."

12. OPA would have to give wholesale and retail distributors ceilings reflecting their "current cost of acquisition of any commodity plus such average percentage discount or mark-up as was in effect March 31, 1946."

13. Subsidies largely for holding down food prices trimmed from the $2,000,000,000 asked by OPA to about $1,000,000,000. No food subsidies could be paid after next April 1.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the "Nebraska Bomber" [Mr. WHERRY]. He has done a great job today, just as the second bomb at Bikini did this afternoon at 4:30. The report from Bikini is that it destroyed practically everything, and those who heard the sound over the radio sensed something almost uncanny.

I think it was the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who was absent in Europe while we were living through the period of readjustment between the demise of OPA and the present, who asked a question which indicated to me that he had a sense of fear as to what the consequences might be of not continuing OPA.

As I listened to that discussion there came to my mind the illustration of an eaglet which was captured when only a few days old. A chain was fastened around its leg. Through the months it would go as far as the chain would permit. Eventually the eaglet grew into a mature eagle, but it had lived through a long period when it was chained. One day the chain, which had rusted, broke. It made no difference. The eagle had been chained. It did not know how to fly. In recent times we have seen nation after nation chained in its thinking by government action. Never before have we in America permitted ourselves to be chained. We never permitted it until the war came. Then we said, "It is a war necessity."

But, Mr. President, month after month has passed since the war ended. I call attention to the fact that the question involved in the pending conference report may not necessarily seem of such great importance to those of us here, because we are not merchants, we are not farmers, we are not producers, we are not manufacturers. We have not had to deal with the 107,000 directives of OPA, which took 90,000,000 words to write. We have only had them thrown at us from time to time, as we have had to take them up with various members of the OPA or before our constituents.

So, Mr. President, I say that if we consider the understandings which were had at the time when the OPA came into being, we find that it was strictly understood that the OPA would not operate after the cessation of hostilities. There were other understandings which it would be very interesting for us to review, but I shall not take time to do that now. I shall simply state briefly my own conclusions.

I have lived through these 4 weeks during which we have had no OPA, and I have heard the Bowles and the Porters and their political kinfolk, as all America has heard them. I wish that everyone in America could have heard the distinguished young Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] today, when he gave us the facts of the case. I shall not restate them now.

During the war we found that our great people were willing to be chained during that period of time in order to produce for the 15,000,000 men who were fighting our battles. However, just as soon as the war ended, thank God, the inherent American spirit manifested itself, and our people no longer wanted to be chained. When the chains came off, as a result of the President's veto of the OPA extension bill, the men who were supposed to be the leaders of thought, psychologically and otherwise, did nothing but plug the radios with expressions of their thoughts of fear and of the inadequacy of the American people, the American merchant, the American farmer, the American producer. I wonder what President Roosevelt would have thought if he could have heard his political kinfolk preaching the doctrine of fear. He said to us, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

Mr. President, I have made these remarks in leading up to a submission of my own reasons for opposing the conference report, this compromise measure for price-control revival. Unless I am convinced to the contrary by what is said on the floor of the Senate, I shall vote against the conference report. What I have heard thus far today does not convince me to the contrary.

Indeed, the word "compromise" is a good word to use to describe the conference report. It would compromise the American system of private enterprise. I believe it would create chaos in industry and agriculture and would place the strangle hold of state socialism upon us. I do not say that idly. State socialism means what was so well described to the Senate by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], when recently he referred to the historical incident in France. Under state socialism, the state regulates every activity of the human family. Thank God, we in America revolted against such a system when the war was over. But now it is proposed that we have it again. The real question now is whether there is any need for it. Mr. President, has the need been demonstrated? During the debate, Senators have been arguing about technicalities of this "compromise." But the question is whether there is any need at all for the system proposed by the pending measure.

After listening to the undisputed facts which have been presented today by the Senator from Nebraska, I ask you, Mr. President, Is there any need for what the conference report proposes? Is there still an element of fear, caused by fear propagandists, lurking in us? If there is, let us cast it out. Let us remember how we were able to get along very nicely before we had OPA.

Mr. President, I desire to present, point by point, my own conclusions and my own reasons for opposing this hodgepodge, patchwork legislative proposal.

1. OUR EXPERIENCE DURING FREE PERIOD

What has happened during more than 3 weeks of freedom from OPA has proved the soundness of Americans and the American system of free enterprise. Our experience during the time since the OPA has been out of existence has strengthened me in the conviction that, in spite of the hamstringing effects of OPA in the past, we have enough strength, honor, and integrity in the American economy for a complete revival of private enterprise and all-out production. During this time of more than 3 weeks Americans have breathed the free air of genuine competition.

Mr. President, let me say, to digress for a moment, that since the OPA went out of existence, I have talked to merchants in my own State. Today an important milk producer telephoned to me. I say that we of the Senate personally have lived without the clutch of government gestapo on our shoulders, without having the price of every commodity fixed by Government, without the storekeeper being compelled to pay a fine of $25 if even one commodity in his store was sold for a fraction of a cent above the so-called legal price, without the threat hanging over him of being haled into court.

We personally can scarcely realize what has happened since we have been free from OPA control. Our merchants and our storekeepers and our farmers and our producers are again breathing the free atmosphere of what is rightfully theirs. Let us remember that they are the sound, clear-thinking segment of American society.

Mr. President, there has been a sigh of relief and joy throughout our whole economy, throughout industry, commerce, and agriculture, as private enterprise has gotten into production in the American way. Today my son-in-law came to Washington from Boston, where he has been teaching. He said that not until the OPA went out of existence were he and his family able to get meat, and that since the OPA has ended they have been able to get meat—at the prices shown today by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, the price rises which have occurred in the free period following the death of OPA have been negligible. Generally speaking, the increases in prices since OPA ended have amounted to approximately the subsidies which formerly were paid by the Government.

Let me say that I wish that the statement which has been made today by the Senator from Nebraska could have been heard by all our people, so that they might understand what he has said, namely, that by getting along without the OPA we are avoiding the diabolical practice of paying $2,000,000,000 a year in subsidies, as we did last year.

In this connection, let me ask this question, With American purchasing power at $170,000,000,000, with production coming into its own in every line, unhampered by Government directives and restrictions, with the Government debt mounting so tremendously because of Government spending, is it not just common sense, as well as good economics, that we do away with all subsidies except in the few cases, such as copper, lead, and zinc mining, where it is imperative to provide an incentive to stimulate production?

2. DANGER OF RENEWED BLACK MARKET

Mr. President, not only should we end the OPA because the American economy has ample strength to get along without it and because we must stop paying useless subsidies, but also because the OPA, if continued or extended by the pending conference report, will reintroduce the terrible black market. We in Washington knew about the black market. Here in the capital of the United States black markets ran rampant. Eighty percent of the meat sold in the United States was sold on the black market, until the OPA went out of existence. All of us realize what the black market has meant to the morals and health of the people.

No one can estimate what it means to the rejuvenation of America to get rid of something that produced such a crime wave, for that is what the OPA and the black market produced. It caused some of our best citizens to become criminals, and they set a horrible example for the rising generation, the youth of our country. It has been an extremely bad influence for them to see respectable men, who have to live, violate the law.

However, in recent weeks, as a result of the death of the OPA, that situation has changed. The importance of doing away with those conditions cannot be minimized. Once before we learned that lesson, namely, when the bootlegger operated during prohibition. It is reliably reported that the black marketeers who profited so much from OPA maladministration and ineptitude are using their influence to have OPA reinstated, just as the bootleggers strove to prevent the repeal of the prohibition amendment.

Mr. President, we must realize the importance of these matters and influences which I have been discussing, these evil influences upon the future life of America. We must consider them.

3. TESTING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. President, my third reason for opposing the conference report and for wanting a further breathing spell for America is that during this further free period, we shall be able to test further our great American people.

I have faith in our people, although the Bowles and Porters and their economic kinfolk do not.

Mr. President, go to your merchant. I do not care who he is, or what line he handles. Ask him how he feels about the situation. Talk with him. If the subject is groceries, meat, hardware, or clothing, find out how he feels. You will note that the fear which was formerly in his eye has now gone. Previously he thought that he might be in danger of making a petty mistake, and if he made one, he would be held up as a criminal to the people of the community. On the other hand, he would be told to pay. And, Mr. President, how many thousands of merchants were required to pay when they made an unintentional mistake.

Senators, the OPA gestapo came as close in its operations to the gestapo of Europe as any gestapo ever came. If Congress had an opportunity to investigate in some of the States, it would find conditions which smell to high heaven—and I know whereof I speak. Do we wish to return to that condition in free America? Think it over!

Mr. President, I have faith that the American people will be proved not to be a bunch of gougers and chiselers. It will be proved that they will be satisfied with a reasonable profit. It will be proved that they can meet the challenge of production, unhampered and unchained. It will be proved that they can get all the goods they need at fair prices, and of good quality, by allowing the law of supply and demand to operate in a free, competitive economy.

4. CURB BUREAUCRATIC POWER

My fourth reason for opposing the conference report is that, by rejecting it, we will be thwarting the power-drunk ambitions of many of the OPA hirelings who want to remain in office indefinitely, with their stranglehold on the American people undiminished. Those are strong words.

I wish to pay a compliment to many of the men in the OPA who have proved themselves to be real servants of the people, and real honest hard-working persons. However, I could present a list of other persons who have shown utter disregard of a servant's position and have possessed the master complex which was demonstrated at every turn of the road. We will prove that we do not intend to be the blind foils or tools of collectivist superplanners.

Mr. President, how did other nations go down? They went down by disregarding the mandate of the legislative branch. When the administrative branch became super, when it began to rule the lives and the actions of the people, the nation then started to sink.

Controls like OPA are justified in war. In peace, however, they are never justified in a free America.

We will prove that we will not be stampeded by terrorist propaganda of the OPA fear-mongers. When the OPA goes out of existence, with it will go thirty-odd thousand employees and America will be saved an expense of $150,000,000 a year. Thirty-odd thousand employees of the OPA will be turned back into the private economy of the country.

5. ADEQUACY OF FREE ECONOMY NOW

Mr. President, my fifth reason for opposing the OPA extension measure is that there never was a better time than now to test our free economy. It will be remembered how fear was injected into the minds of the people throughout the country by the use of every possible means, such as the radio, the newspapers, and others. If we kill the OPA we will wipe out chaos.

It will also be remembered how the dairy industry and all manufacturing industries were compelled to resort to the press and to tell the American people that they would keep faith. They have kept faith. The retailers, the wholesalers, the small businessmen and the big businessmen have kept faith, and they will continue to keep it.

Mr. President, at what other time than the present will we be better situated to test our free enterprise system? The time is here to rid ourselves of the dampening influence of OPA. Never will we be better situated than we are at the present time?

I inquire again, When will the time come which will find us better situated to test our free enterprise system? Like the eagle, we have been chained, but we know now what to do. We will walk out to the end of the chain and beyond. Mr. President, the OPA situation is one which the American people will not long stand. We are freemen. We are not like the eagle even though we agreed to be chained temporarily during the war. But when the war was over we broke those chains. We are once again freemen, and we desire to continue on our way as freemen.

I accepted in full the implication of the Senator from Nebraska who inquired, If we put ourselves under the influence of OPA, what will be the situation a year from now? Consumers who are listening should ask themselves the same question. What will be the situation then? If we submit to OPA for another year it will result in weakening our resistance to OPA.

It is not idle fancy to say that that is what some folks want. I am not saying that all of them want it. But any one among us who has his eyes open knows what is taking place throughout the world. At the present time two great ideologies are in conflict. One is represented by Russia and the other is represented by America. Russia tells us plainly that the two ideologies are in conflict, and that only one can endure. Two methods have always been found; one, to conquer the territory ouright; the other, to weaken the enemy and create a division. So perhaps there is something more involved than the mere question of whether the small extra amount which we pay for our meat or our butter is to be paid by us for those commodities or paid indirectly by the Treasury as a subsidy.

6. LATER OPPORTUNITY FOR RESTORATION OF CONTROLS

Mr. President, my sixth reason for opposing the OPA extension measure is that later there will be ample opportunity after a further breathing spell period, for Congress to take care of any undue price rises which may occur during the coming months. It is now just 3½ months or so before the November elections. If Congress were to adjourn late this week, or by the middle or the end of next week, it would give our free economy a minimum of about 15 weeks to demonstrate its soundness without the exercise of Government controls. At any time thereafter, between the middle of November and the end of December, Congress could, if necessary, be called back into session in order to meet any case of inflationary prices which may possibly have developed in the meantime.

7. NEED FOR UNDERSTANDING NOW

My seventh reason for opposing the present OPA extension measure is that it is imperative that an understanding be reached between the various groups of America and that the distrust, the suspicion, and the hatred which has been bred by OPA be eliminated.

If we get into the picture a proper understanding, we will dispose of those men who profited by OPA-created misunderstandings, and by class differences. When men work in harmony, the greatest results are attained. In any office, in any home, in any manufacturing plant, if men are at sixes and sevens the result is the impairment of efficiency. On the other hand, if harmony prevails, results increase.

Mr. President, I have given a simple analysis of what is wrong in America today. It is time that we awakened to the challenge and ask ourselves who is begetting this condition.

8. NEED FOR JUSTICE FOR FARMERS

Mr. President, in no single sphere is there greater need for more understanding than there is for understanding between farm and city folks. OPA has perverted the idea of economic justice to the farmer by imposing on him orders and directives which deny him his cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

In the last 13 years, 10,000,000 people have left the farms. Why? Because the hourly wage on farms did not compare favorably with the hourly wage of the city laborer, to name one reason.

In my State, farmers have been averaging approximately 50 cents an hour for their labor. Consider how unfavorably that compares with the compensation on an 8-hour-day basis that town folks get. Does that sound like chiseling or gouging—if the farmer gets a mere 50 cents an hour for his labor?

If we get rid of OPA, we shall be restoring the basis for economic justice for the farmer, as well as for the small businessman, the factory owner, the retailer, the distributor.

But, Mr. President, simply getting rid of OPA will not do it. We have to get into the picture the understanding of what is involved in this whole matter, understanding the 50 cents an hour to the farmer for farm labor as compared with $1, $1.25, or $1.50 paid to city labor. So now we will come to a little appreciation of why OPA propagandists were able to get this fury of fear started throughout the land, and get big editorials written in the newspapers and articles by columnists exploding fear like the atomic bomb in Bikini today.

Almost 4 weeks have gone by since OPA expired. Have any of these folks acknowledged they were wrong? Has Bowles or has Porter? We have heard the editorials read today by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. Some of them are coming through. We told them that America would be adequate, but we were unheeded.

By eliminating OPA we shall be laying the basis for understanding between the farmer and the city man. We know that if the farmer ever stopped producing and went on a strike, the situation would be grave indeed for the welfare of America. We shall make such a strike completely impossible and unnecessary if we have the courage of our convictions now and rid the country at least for a breathing spell of OPA.

I want to cite the example of butter as an instance wherein the farmer is simply getting his cost of production plus a reasonable profit. It takes 10 quarts of 4 percent butterfat milk to produce a pound of butter. Out in my State farmers have been getting from 6 to 7 cents a quart for milk. At 6 cents a quart, that adds up to 60 cents a pound for butter. The Government subsidy on butter, when OPA was in effect, was 14½ cents per pound. Add that sum to the farmer's return—60 cents plus 14½ cents—and you get 74½ cents per pound of butter.

To the average citizen, that may seem like a high price. Why? Go downtown and buy a box of Fanny Farmer candy or some other candy and pay $1.50 or $2 a pound for it. Buy any drink of liquor, and it will be 60 or 65 cents.

Some may say they used to buy butter at about 45 or 50 cents. That was before the farmer's feed prices and everything else went up. Now the price of butter has risen to approximately 70 cents. I think that today it was below that. Immediately, someone wants to hit the fellow who produces it. I want to get rid of that idea right here, because that presents the opportunity for all the "leftist" thinkers, for all the "Reds," for the Communists, to put in a wedge, and that is what I want to get rid of. The only way to do that is to have an understanding of the situation.

Rumor has it that some of the labor leaders have been here telling the Government again what should be done. They should get an understanding of this butter situation, the meat situation, the cheese situation. They should collaborate with those who produce them.

I said the other day, in speaking about conditions, that people should ask how much butter we eat. I suppose there is not a man in this Chamber who eats half a pound of butter a week. If the subsidy is 14 cents, that means 14 cents, over and above what was paid, before, for two weeks, or 28 cents a month, and 12 times that is the increase for a year.

But you have been paying that into the Treasury, and the Treasury has been paying it to the farmer. That is why the argument of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska today was so illuminating. I hope it added light, and that the facts can go out to all our people. I should like to see this fine group of newspapermen who sit in the press gallery take hold of this and be enthused with the thought that they are "bringers of light" to the people of this country, so that the people can get the real truth. We are told it is the truth that makes men free.

9. NEED FOR ADEQUATE LABOR POLICY

A ninth and concluding reason for opposing the OPA extension bill is that we shall be laying the basis for a sound labor policy in America. So long as the employer is denied his cost of production plus a reasonable profit, he lacks an adequate basis for insuring fair and correct returns for labor. That again some might question, Mr. President, but it is fundamental.

If a manufacturing plant cannot get cost of production plus a reasonable return, it cannot pay labor reasonable wages. We have heard the discussion today indicating how that arrangement could be interfered with under the present compromise joint resolution, if it were to become law.

If I were in the councils of labor, I would not come to Washington to pressure the Government and the President to keep a stranglehold on the producers of goods. I would urge my national representatives to give the green light to private enterprise—to give the food producers and the machinery producers and the appliance producers of America the chance to get into all-out production, free of Government directives, so as to produce a vast supply of goods for our own Nation and for all other nations of the world.

If I were in the councils of labor, I would not aid and abet the poisonous fear propaganda of OPA's minions—questioning the integrity and the character of the farmers, the wholesalers, the distributors of America.

By opposing this OPA extension bill, I believe we are paving the way for a return to a natural economy under which labor and management can bargain collectively while management gets its cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

These, then, are nine reasons for opposing the OPA extension resolution.

Mr. President, because the subject has already been so fully covered, I ask unanimous consent that a brief statement coming from the meat packers in the Western States asking that the Senate reject the conference report, be printed following my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The meat packers in the Western States hope the Senate will reject the conference report on the OPA extension bill and send it back for the purpose of decontrolling livestock and meat.

We feel the proposed Price Control Act restoring price controls to livestock and meat August 20 will only create confusion and chaos in the industry.

For the next month the industry will have to be on a day-to-day basis as far as purchases of livestock and sales of meat are concerned. This would particularly apply to many meat products which it takes time to process and in which time is required either in aging, freezing, pickling, or other methods before meat is used in the final product.

With such a sword hanging over the head of the industry who would buy with prospects of reduced price at time of sale. This present bill would not allow the industry to operate on a practical basis but only to operate in a confused manner which would deny the industry the opportunity that it now has to get its operations back on a law of supply-and-demand basis.

Also livestock will be rushed to market to beat the August 20 deadline causing disruption of orderly marketing and many immaturely finished livestock will be sent to market. This will tend to create a shortage in future months when they normally would have been marketed.

Meat markets over the whole western country are becoming filled with meat, prices are dropping, and if this industry was allowed to go ahead without such a threat over it, we are sure there would never be any reason for placing controls back on livestock and meat in the future.

We hope the Senate will reject the conference report and insist that the controls be taken off livestock and meat and the industry given an opportunity to demonstrate that it can furnish meat to the people at reasonable prices. If the bill goes through in the form recommended by the conference committee, we consider it a victory for the black market.

It is time for all of us to realize and admit that the actual cost of living is on the black-market prices and not the fictitious ceiling prices posted by the OPA. The Senate vote on the floor of 49 to 26 in favor of decontrolling of livestock and meat indicated that the Senate took this into consideration.

Legitimate packers of the nine Western States cannot operate another year under the intolerable and restricted conditions imposed upon the industry by the offices of the OPA and Economic Stabilization.

Is the Senate willing to assume the responsibility of the return of the black market with all of its evils and under the OPA cause practically every retail market in the country to be again converted into a speakeasy?

WESTERN STATES MEAT PACKERS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
By E. F. FORBES, President.
JULY 23, 1946.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, following what I have already had inserted in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement in relation to production and distribution of butter, showing the improved condition since July 1.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF BUTTER IMPROVED SINCE JULY 1

According to official reports from the United States Department of Agriculture the production of butter for the week ending July 11 was 23 percent lower than the same week 1 year ago. Carefully prepared statistics from the American Butter Institute, after a study of production reports from 211 member companies in various States, reveal that production during the second week of July was 20 percent less than 1 year ago. During the first 6 months of 1946 the production of butter, as revealed by official documents from the United States Department of Agriculture and from reports from members of the American Butter Institute, was 30 percent to 35 percent under the same week in 1945. Thus over-all production has improved at least 10 percent, even during this brief period and at a time when total milk production in the United States is below that of a year ago.

Telegraphic reports dated July 17 from two large butter processing companies operating in several Midwestern States follow:

"Our butter production week ending the 13th increased 10 percent over week ending July 6 in normal years these 2 weeks would be about even production everything indicates that butter production will continue to grow under a free economy and still sell at ceiling plus subsidy or under."

"Production of butter through diversion from other channels into butter showing substantial increase in our production plants. Assembly operations in Minnesota and Iowa which have been at a standstill due to higher markets for cream and other products converting back to butter in substantial way. Butter values around the country already showing effect of greater supply; prices moving down."

Practically unlimited consumer supplies of butter are available in all principal cities. Retail prices for butter have ranged from 69 cents to 85 cents in most every instance, with the average retail price being considerably less than the legal OPA price on June 30 plus the 15-cent Government subsidy paid directly to dairy farmers and canceled by the expiration of OPA on July 1. Consumers formerly paid these subsidies through taxes. Since the farmer has received the direct price in lieu of subsidies, butter production has been increased.

The consumer price for butter on the free market has been considerably less than that charged on the black market and supplies are distributed equitably to all consumers in all parts of the United States. The black market in butter, which handled more than 50 percent of the supplies prior to June 30, has been almost entirely eliminated.

Mr. WILEY. I also ask to have placed in the RECORD a telegram from D. K. Howe, president, American Butter Institute, respecting increase in butter production.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., July 22, 1946.

RUSSELL FIFER,
Washington, D. C.:

With price controls removed butter production increased 10 percent in four large creamery groups second week July. Contrary to customary seasonal trend this indicates natural economic forces correcting unbalanced dairy situation which existed under OPA. Please note average dairy prices to date not above OPA prices plus subsidies. These conditions prove wisdom of decontrol of dairy products with resulting sane price situation and elimination of confusion and uncertainty and stimulation of production which was goal of postwar planning.

D. K. HOWE,
President, American Butter Institute.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, we have heard many times that the OPA measure was a compromise measure, and that it will do the job it has been hoped it would do. I remember clearly that American industry was quoted over the radio as stating, as I have said heretofore, that the disposal of OPA would not start a ruinous price raising spiral; that it would give a chance for America to be renewed and strengthened in its vitals. Mr. President, almost 4 weeks of free economy have definitely proved that industry was correct. I believe firmly that it would be a mistake once more to strangle the economy of our country by putting into operation any kind of an OPA set-up.

Economic common sense demands that if we want production we must let the people of this country be free as they pursue their course in the same manner as they did before the war. Economic common sense and fair play demand that the Government must not play favorites with its citizens when, under the guise of an emergency it interferes with the production of its citizens. That is just what happened time after time under OPA. Economic common sense demands that subsidies must be done away with. We can save $2,000,000,000 a year by not paying subsidies.

Mr. President, for the reasons I have stated I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am strongly opposed to the conference report. The sentiment of the farmers of my section of the country is overwhelmingly in opposition to the OPA measure as it comes to us at this time. That is true especially of the farming area. I have received word from Kansas that the people think this would be a destructive measure. I am glad to say that the Representatives from the State of Kansas in the House of Representatives voted solidly against adoption of the conference report yesterday, and they reflected the sentiment and wishes of the great body of the agricultural producers of the State.

I hope the conference report will be rejected.

MODIFICATION OF RAILROAD FINANCIAL STRUCTURES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WHEELER, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. REED, and Mr. MOORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPLANNING AND REBUILDING OF SLUM, BLIGHTED, AND OTHER AREAS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. O'DANIEL obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me so that I may ask that the amendments of the House to Senate bill 1426 be laid before the Senate?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1426.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1426) to provide for the replanning and rebuilding of slum, blighted, and other areas of the District of Columbia and the assembly, by purchase or condemnation, of real property in such areas and the sale or lease thereof for the redevelopment of such area in accordance with said plans; and to provide for the organization of, procedure for, and the financing of such planning, acquisition, and sale or lease, and for other purposes, which were on page 5, strike out lines 16 to 23, inclusive, and insert:

(k) "Public low-rent housing" means low-rent housing constructed by a public agency for families of low income, at rentals which (including the value or cost to tenants of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) shall not exceed one-fifth of the highest net family income of families eligible for tenancy in such housing, as herein provided. The dwellings in public low-rent housing shall be available solely for such families of low income whose net family income does not exceed the maximum net family income falling within the lowest 20 percent by number of all family income in the District of Columbia, as such maximum net family income shall have been determined, or from time to time redetermined after public hearing, by the District Commissioners. At the end of 1 year after the enactment of this act this definition shall be reexamined by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia and a public hearing shall be held thereon to determine whether administrative or interpretive difficulties or unsatisfactory progress in the provision of low-rent housing requires a modification thereof. Upon the conclusion of such hearing the Commissioners shall forthwith make recommendations to Congress whether said definition should be modified and, if so, to what extent.

On page 14, lines 17 and 18, to strike out "Attorney General" and insert "Chief Justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia"; on page 29, line 22, to strike out "3 years" and insert "1 year"; on page 30, line 3, to strike out "3-year" and insert "1-year"; on page 30, line 25, after "Act", to insert "The National Capital Housing Authority shall keep regular books of account in accordance with standard auditing practices, covering all properties operated by it, showing detailed construction costs, management costs, repairs, maintenance, other operating costs, rents subsidies, grants, allowances, and exemptions; such books shall be subject to annual audit by the General Accounting Office, and the annual report of the National Capital Housing Authority shall include a summary of all transactions covered by such books and shall be made available to the public upon request."; on page 31, strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and insert:

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALLEY DWELLING ACT

SEC. 18. (a) Section 4 (b) of the act known as the "District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act," approved June 12, 1934, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"(b) On and after July 1, 1955, it shall be unlawful to use or occupy any alley building or structure as a dwelling in the District of Columbia."

(b) Section 6 of such act, as amended, is further amended by striking "1947" and inserting in lieu thereof "1955."

On page 32, line 6, after "Act.", to insert "Any life-insurance company organized under the laws of the District or formed or organized under an act of Congress is authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to make loans or advances for the purpose of making repairs, alterations, additions, or improvements to homes or other buildings on improved real estate upon which it then holds a first lien to secure a loan previously made, without additional security: Provided, That no such loan or advance shall be made in a sum in excess of $2,000: And provided further, That the amount of such loan or advance when added to the balance due on the original indebtedness shall not exceed the amount originally secured by the first lien."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. There is but one controversial amendment made by the House. It will be recalled that the slum-clearance bill was passed by the Senate several months ago. It has been under study by the House for a long time. The question has been with respect to the definition of low-cost public housing. The House refused to accept the Senate language on that subject and inserted language which in reality was the language of the committee of the Senate when the committtee reported the bill, which language was stricken from the bill on the floor of the Senate. The House took the Senate committee's language rather than the language of the Senate.

If we were to send this bill back to conference, in all probability we should lose the bill. There is so much of value in the bill, generally speaking, that I have conferred with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who has been very much interested in this particular phase of the subject. He joins with me in the thought that it is best for us to take the bill as amended, with the idea that before the amendments would come into operation we should have ample time in which to amend the law.

I, therefore, move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Who signed the conference report?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is no conference report. There was no conference. The House studied the bill which came from the Senate and amended it in certain particulars. It passed the House day before yesterday, and has been messaged to the Senate. I could move to send the bill to conference, which I do not propose to do. I am moving that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope the Senator will not insist on his point of no quorum, because I did not wish to take the time of the Senator from Texas for that purpose.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Would the Senator be willing to defer consideration of his motion until some of our Members can be present?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

I thank the Senator from Texas.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am glad to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from New York, all of whom in times past have been interested in this line of legislation. The language of the House amendments is not exactly the same as the language of the measure as passed by the Senate, but in my judgment it is language which the Senate can well afford to accept now, with the view of amending the bill at a later time if it does not work out. So much of value in the way of slum clearance is provided for by the bill that I am forced to conclude that we had better accept the House amendments.

Therefore, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that it is the Senator's opinion that if the bill were sent to conference, in the first place the House conferees probably would insist upon the House amendments, and, in the second place, the effect might be to kill the bill entirely.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my judgment; I believe it would kill the bill.

Mr. TAFT. If that is the Senator's opinion, I think the House amendments should be concurred in.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Nevada if I correctly understand that he has moved that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate very long, because I have discussed the subject of OPA heretofore and tried to make my position well known and clear that I am unalterably opposed to OPA in any way, shape, manner, or form. About 4 weeks ago, just before June 30, I recognized the fact that there might be some reason for extended remarks to be made concerning this measure because OPA was scheduled to expire or to die a natural death at midnight on June 30, and, while it seemed hopeless to be able to delay extension of that legislation long enough to cause OPA to die, I took a chance and did speak. I am not wholly responsible for the death of OPA, but I do claim credit for what little part I did play in causing OPA to die a natural death at midnight on June 30.

In taking the floor at that time it seemed to give renewed hope to many of our American citizens who had lost faith in their Government and lost hope of ever getting rid of OPA and some other New Deal bureaucrats and bureaucracies. The telegrams began to pour in from every nook and corner of this grand old Nation of ours, from those citizens. The telegrams came from citizens who did not belong to organizations which maintained lobbies in Washington and paid representatives to defend their interests or protect their interests. They did not come from those who had sufficient money to buy railroad tickets and come here and ask that OPA be abolished. They came from the rank and file of what I like to call the common citizens of this great Nation, because I am a common citizen myself; was born in the direst poverty, and was brought up rubbing shoulders with the common folk of this great Nation. I know their honesty, their hopes, their aspirations, their desire to do their part in maintaining our Government and protecting our Nation. Those telegrams came from families that had given their sons and their fathers and other relatives to the great cause of freedom in the recent war.

So I took occasion to read part of those telegrams on the Senate floor. I termed those telegrams the voice of the people. For a few hours I read those telegrams. Since then telegrams have continued to pour in to me, and I have many thousands of telegrams from the rank and file of the citizens of this great Nation expressing their disapproval of OPA, their hope that it would be killed, and their great joy in its death. They express the hope that it will never be revived.

Mr. President, I see no reason at this time to engage in lengthy debate, because there is at this time no deadline to meet. June 30 has passed. OPA died and is still dead. Lengthy debate can do no good now. It looks like it is simply taken for granted that this Nation must have a new OPA. I do not think anything can save us now from the infliction of that great calamity on this Nation by the reenactment of OPA. Nothing can save us but God Himself. I do not see for the life of me, Mr. President, why God would want to save us from that fate in view of the way Congress acts. He may have pity on us anyhow. I hope so. I pray that He will provide some means whereby this law will never be reenacted. That would have to be a miracle, however.

Before discussing the bill in detail I want to state again that I am a Democrate—not a New Deal Democrat, but a Jeffersonian Democrat. I come from the State of Texas, where we have many good Jeffersonian Democrats who are sick and tired of the New Deal dynasty which has almost ruined our Nation. I have always been a Democrat. I was born a Democrat. I lived in Republican States where I had to take the abuse which was hurled at me by a majority of the people because I was a Democrat. But I survived that. I finally wound up in the great State of Texas, which is Democratic. I found that my views on democracy coincided with those of the majority of the citizens of Texas. The good citizens of the great State of Texas in large numbers requested that I abandon my life in private enterprise, that of farming and ranching, and become their governor. They made good. We straightened out a few of the political kinks in the State of Texas while I was governor, and then I was sent to the Senate. So my record is complete as a Democrat, from the time I was born up to the present time.

I do not intend at this time to eulogize the Republican Party, but I do wish publicly to congratulate a young statesman on the other side of the aisle, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who rose above political affiliations today in the delivery of a statesmanlike message on the floor of the Senate, proving conclusively that he places his country above his political party. I think we shall hear more from that young statesman, because it requires a great deal of courage for a man in his capacity to stand up against great odds and contend for what he knows is absolutely right and best for the American people, even though he may not be supported by certain other members of his party.

The Senator from Nebraska made clear in his discussion today many points, two of which were outstanding. He made clear that it made little or no difference what was written into this measure if it should become law, because we know from past experience that those who administer the legislation pay absolutely no attention to what is written in the law. They are above the law, in their own estimation, and they administer OPA according to the way they think it should be administered. The Senator from Nebraska made that point perfectly clear, and I concur in his opinion.

He inadvertently brought out another fact, not specifically stating it as such, but making it perfectly clear that the issue before the Senate at the present time is purely and unequivocally a political issue. I do not know that every Member of the Senate would interpret OPA, as the conference report stands before us now, as a political issue. Each Senator has the right to interpret it as he pleases; but I interpret it as purely a political issue.

Regardless of how much I dislike to see it, OPA is recognized as a Democratic bureau, because the Democrats are supposed to be the controlling factor in our Government. The OPA monkey is on the back of the Democratic Party. Everyone should know that if he does not. I know it. I do not know that any Republican Senators have ever thought about it. I have not talked to them about it, but I consider that the political thing for the Republicans to do until the next election is keep the OPA monkey on the backs of the Democrats, because it will be a great factor in the coming elections. Consequently Republican Senators who have not given this question much consideration may be seriously thinking in favor of OPA, but it is my contention that whether they are serious or not, they are certainly doing their party no injustice in trying to reinstate OPA.

I would not accuse them of trying to sell out their Nation for the sake of their party. I do not think they would do that. But political strategy—and I do not believe anyone has accused Republican Senators of being entirely lacking in political strategy—would dictate that course. On the other hand, as I have stated, it is our baby, and we cannot turn it loose without losing the votes of all the Communists, Reds, radicals, black marketers, labor-leader racketeers, and a horde of other undesirable citizens who have swarmed into our party and are trying not only to ruin our Nation but entirely to destroy the democracy handed down to us by the great founder of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson.

That is the situation. It has become a political situation in my opinion whether anyone else so interprets it or not. That is the way I interpret it. That is the reason why we have this fight, which has gone on for many weeks. We have the OPA, and the Republicans want us to keep it. That is the reason why I publicly congratulate and commend the young statesman from Nebraska. I will not go into details by naming other Senators on that side of the aisle. I am doing pretty well when I congratulate one Republican.

Apparently the situation is so political that the people of the Nation will have to put up with it. We shall have to endure the destructive influence of OPA. We shall have to go without meat and butter, and get along with very few clothes. We shall have to do without a thousand and one things which the citizens of this Nation want now, the production of which has been thwarted or entirely stopped by the machinations of the OPA and other New Deal bureaus of this Government. It is bound to come. There is no way to stop it that I can see, except by a miracle. That was what almost stopped it before—that and President Truman's veto. I shall never understand why he vetoed the bill. It is not necessary that I understand it. I am glad that he did so. He certainly was either purposely or inadvertently doing everything he could to save the Democratic Party when he vetoed it. I hope that he vetoes the OPA measure the next time it comes before him, because I think it will get there. I do not see any way to stop it.

Mr. President, I do not know why nearly every Member of the Senate seems to think that we must have an OPA. There is no reason to have it at all. We got along without it for 150 or 160 years. Then we had it for a little more than 4 years, and it got us into a terrible condition. Now we are without it, and slowly and gradually returning to the American way of life. Slowly and gradually—yes, but gloriously. Down in east Texas the lumber industry is beginning to operate again. I have received word from Mr. T. G. Tilford down at Nacogdoches, and Mr. W. L. Johnson and Mr. Willard W. Johnson, over at Palestine, and what they say is borne out by a telegram I have received from Mr. Gene Ebersole of the Lumbermen's Association of Texas. Without OPA the lumber for housing was beginning to come through. On Monday, I rose to ask the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] if he knew of the situation in livestock on the San Antonio markets. I was reliably informed that cattle sold Saturday on that market were slightly under the maximum livestock ceiling prices of the former OPA, which meant that the Government has been wrong in their position, for this not only saves the payment of subsidies but makes it possible for retailers to sell their product at former ceiling prices. Today I have a telegram from the manager of the Fort Worth Stockyards, Mr. W. L. Pier, who advises me that meat prices are dropping steadily due to supply and demand. The St. Louis Butter, Egg, and Poultry Exchange advises me, by telegram, that prices are steady and that supply and demand are beginning to operate. From down Florida way, the secretary of the Florida Feed Dealers Association, Mr. R. D. Jackson, informs me that meat, milk, poultry, eggs, and feed are all related and have been adjusting their prices since the death of OPA and he expresses grave fears if this new legislation is enacted. The same thought is echoed by Mr. Victor C. DeWein, president of the Illinois Feed Association. And the Texas Grain and Feed Dealers Association have expressed their continued opposition to any continuation of OPA policies and practices.

So we do not need OPA at all. But there seems to be a general impression that we ought to have it. Some Senators will perhaps say, "It is all right to have it if we can write an amendment into the law with our names attached to it." Some persons think it is all right if they can administer it, but that it is all wrong if the law is amended, or if someone else gets the credit for it.

So we now have before us an OPA measure. As was stated on the floor of the Senate a little while ago, there are 96 Senators, and 96 different interpretations of OPA.

Mr. President, as I was saying, it has been said on the floor of the Senate that this measure might have 96 different interpretations by 96 Senators. It is just a mass of words and a mass of confusion. But that will make no difference to the OPA, because the OPA will interpret it just as it wishes to do, and will go merrily on its way. The present situation reminds us something of the folks who, in ancient times, thought they could build a tower that would take them to heaven, so that they could go to heaven without being good while they were on earth. But they got so confused that they simply could not understand one another, and so they could not go ahead with that work. So that project was never completed.

This legislative project resembles that building project. There is so much confusion about it that no one understands anyone else, and we have another Tower of Babel. I hope the result will be that this legislation will never be completed and will never go to the President for his signature.

The OPA was first established by the late President Roosevelt. Shortly after the New Deal decided to strip the United States in order to supply foreign nations, through lend-lease, the theory of price control was brought into the picture. Executive Order 8734, which established the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply in the Executive Office of the President, was issued April 11, 1941. Now that the New Deal is still determined to strip the United States of the foodstuffs and other things essential to our economy, in order to give those things to foreign nations, we are still faced with price control. On March 11, 1941, the lend-lease bill was signed. One month later, on April 11, 1941, President Roosevelt issued the Executive order which set up price control.

As long as the New Deal stays in power, Mr. President, in my judgment we shall have a constant effort to take away from the American people the things they should have and the things which our country can provide, and to give them away, and in that way to attempt to justify control of the American people in all their activities, and in that way to deprive them of the things that are produced in the United States. If the attempt is successful, those things will be given for the benefit of other people who not only do not appreciate them, but who abuse our Nation and our people.

As I have said, that Executive Order—No. 8734—was issued by President Roosevelt on April 11, 1941. The first paragraph of the order says:

> By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, and in order to define further the functions and duties of the Office for Emergency Management with respect to the national emergency—

Note that, Mr. President—> as declared by the President on September 8, 1939, for the purpose of avoiding profiteering and unwarranted price rises, and of facilitating an adequate supply and the equitable distribution of materials and commodities for civilian use, and finding that the stabilization of prices is in the interest of national defense and that this order is necessary to increase the efficiency of the defense program, it is hereby ordered:

Then the Executive order continues. That shows very conclusively, Mr. President, that the only reason for ever thinking about controlling prices in the United States was that we were in a state of national emergency preceding a war which most of those in authority knew would come.

Later, after the President instituted price control, he sent a message to Congress, on July 30, 1941, requesting the Congress to enact legislation stabilizing the prices of various commodities and rents. In that message he specifically stated that—

> We are now spending more than $30,000,000 a day on defense.

That is the way he characterized the request, and it was understood to be in its entirety a request for legislation on account of the national emergency which existed and the war which was to follow.

When that message reached the Congress, it was debated on the floor of the Senate. No one ever mentioned or even suggested on the floor of the Senate, to my knowledge, that it was to be an all-time affair, that we were to have the OPA and price fixing forever. It was understood and it was considered to be a war measure, and was so stated by many of the Senators on this floor. It was particularly stated by the then Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark]. Senator Clark of Missouri said on January 10, 1942, as shown at page 237 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a moment on this matter, but I feel that I should like to express my opinion about the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and, incidentally, on the present state of the bill.

Listen to this, Mr. President. Senator Clark, of Missouri, was stating, I think, the opinion of every Senator on this floor:

> Mr. President, this is a bill which is absolutely, or should be absolutely and peculiarly, a war measure. As I see it, the only justification for the Government of the United States ever to authorize a policy such as price fixing, which is entirely alien and antagonistic to our whole theory of government and of business and of our way of life, is as a war measure.

No one ever thought at that time that after our brave soldiers, both men and women, fought in all the different fields of battle and whipped every one of the Axis powers and every one of our foreign enemies, and drove them to their knees in absolute, unconditional surrender, we would still have fastened upon us, long after the war ended, this iniquitous price-control measure.

I have many other quotations which I am prepared to read to the Senate, but I think I shall not take the time of the Senate to read everything which was said, so far as I could find it, with reference to the fact that the OPA was entirely foreign to our American way of life in peacetime, and that it was adopted only as a war measure.

Mr. President, on previous occasions I have called attention to the wisdom of the Members of this great body, the Senate of the United States. There is no doubt that we have wise men here. But in discussing this OPA, they get involved in the details of a great many words and sentences and paragraphs and language that has various meanings. They discuss all that around and around, until, as I have said, they get so confused that no one knows what the provisions mean.

Mr. President, the issue today is not the further salaries of some 33,000 OPA political job-holders. The issue is not one between the President and the Congress, or between Republicans and Democrats. Today, we stand facing two possible courses of action, and the issue we face today is which of these two courses shall our Nation pursue. For the vote that we cast in this matter will commit our Nation and its people and our children and their children to an economic policy which shall determine the lives of those citizens yet unborn. The issue in this vote is, therefore, between two theories of economy; private endeavor or collectivism.

By our actions on this issue we shall determine if this Nation is to continue under the system of free enterprise or under a program of collectivism. For the economic forces of the past decade have brought us to a position where we must now restore our system of individual freedoms or virtually deny our form of constitutional democracy and take, along with economic planning and direction by Government, the revision of all our system of political and ethical philosophy.

For individual freedom of action in the economic field cannot be suppressed except by suppressing it also in those fields of human interest which are not economic, which otherwise would be used as a medium for nullifying the control sought for in the economic field. Religious and social freedom cannot exist in association with economic collectivism. History has yet to show a single instance of economic concurrently or subsequently by suppression of every form of freedom of action and individual liberty.

Therefore, Mr. President, the issue today is whether we shall continue to live under the system that has given us freedom and dignity—or whether we shall vote to overthrow our system of government. For when we vote to pursue a course of economic collectivism, we inevitably cast our vote for a departure from democracy and toward political collectivism as well. Such a political collectivism in the other nations has been identified by various labels. In Russia it is called communism, in Italy it was called fascism, and in Germany it was called nazism. It existed in feudal form in Japan. Today it has become a sort of materialistic credo for the credulous who permit their wishes to overcome their knowledge. In the United States it became the New Deal, and the citizen gave way to the platitudes of political promises nor heeded the rumble of the distant drum. And today we are at the day of decision; today we have reached what the navigator has come to call the point of no return. We must embark on a course of collectivism or we must correct our course to regain the safe passage of democratic free human endeavor. Our vote on this issue will decide. The men in this Chamber today will become either the heroes of future generations or the forgotten pallbearers of personal liberties.

Collectivism is that form of social organization that creates dependence upon government and discourages individual initiative and self-reliance. In its economic aspects it is characterized by either control or ownership of the facilities of production and distribution. In its final form the facilities of living also are owned and controlled by Government. It substitutes for the voluntary division of labor and assigned or allocated division of labor, this being an essential concomitant of controlled production, for the control of production necessarily carries with it the allocation of employment. And because production cannot be controlled unless distribution is also controlled, collectivism also substitutes for the free exchange of goods a controlled exchange involving rationing, quotas, and allocations. And for the institution of private property, guaranteed under our charter of authority, the Constitution of the United States, collectivism substitutes the concept of publically owned property or privately owned property politically controlled.

Briefly, Mr. President, let us examine the implications of such a departure from democracy. Such a political control over economy is basically a question of ownership of production facilities. It involves the question as to whom shall it be who will furnish the capital resources required by the economy? Shall it be private citizens through the accumulation and investment of their savings in private enterprise, or shall it be the Government through the accumulation of capital resources by taxation for the creation of public and political ownership? Private ownership secures the investments of citizens through the hope for gain, through the hope for private improvement. Returns are based on the investment of capital necessarily thrift and conservation of the fruits of their labors. Government ownership demands the investments of citizens through compulsory taxation. Returns are based on public services determined by the political bosses in power. These private earnings of the citizens are used, theoretically, for the benefit of the collective citizenry, but such a theory must be tempered by the realism of political expediency. Thus, governmental control or ownership is inexorably based upon the taxation of the citizens for the benefit of various politically potent minorities.

How shall this departure from democracy effect our production of goods and services for the citizen? We need not look to the records of Germany or Italy or Russia or Japan, for the answer—for here in America we have the example of the New Deal for examination. The question must be answered: Shall we work toward economic production or politically controlled production? The size and complexity of present-day production units are already so great as to tax the intellectual capacity of man to grasp, assimilate, and deal with. If these characteristics of size and complexities have become so marked under our system of private enterprise, what would be the effect upon them of public enterprise or of national economic control?

Prior to the New Deal, our people had moved toward the regulation and decentralization of our economic patterns. Regulation and control are two very different functions. Regulation functions from the outside and fixes in advance the rules of procedure impartially and applicable to all. Control penetrates into the interior and becomes a part of managerial authority. Regulation and decentralization was achieved through the Sherman Antitrust Act, the Clayton Fair Trade Practice Act, the regulatory laws for public utilities, rail rates, and certain periodic attempts to peg agricultural prices. Collectivism is achieved through the control granted under the old NIRA, the Wagner Act, the OPA, and the proposed bills for Federal control of our educational systems, for nationalized medicine, for federally subsidized and directed housing program, and through the various restrictions on investment capital in production work.

The question to be answered, Mr. President, is whether we shall secure production through regulation and private endeavor or through politically controlled work and Government ownership? Will proper understanding and a healthy development of our economic life come from massing the control of these activities together into ever-larger aggregates under centralized governmental bureaus politically organized, or by diffusion of this control throughout the entire social group of our citizenry by continued emphasis upon decentralization? If the business activity consists of thousands of individual transactions, each subject to separate judgment and decision, the composite judgment is likely to be in the right direction. Being diverse, there will only be individual failures amply compensated for by many individual successes. Those individuals, free to exercise their own judgment, can overcome potential failure by responding to environment and circumstances and following the correct course. For the flexibility of free independent endeavor not only permits but encourages such action. If, however, these individual transactions are enclosed within the frame of rigid governmental control, based on a national economic plan enforced by the coersion of law, progress will be in the right direction only so long as the small central bureaucracy who conceives and directs the plan is right. When the bureaucracy is wrong, the resulting error will be of such magnitude and intensity as to be catastrophic in effect upon the economy and the safety of the entire Nation.

Mr. President, the resulting error of the OPA is evidence in support of this analysis. Never before have our people been so close to real hunger. Never before has actual shortage of food and goods threatened our people and their security.

And as the production of goods is controlled under a collective system, so also is the distribution of those goods and services to be controlled by governmental experts. The question that must be answered in the vote to be taken is, then, who shall determine the character and quantity of goods and services to be consumed by each citizen? Who shall determine the food or the clothing necessary to the citizen? Shall it be the citizen himself and the members of his immediate family—or shall it be a bureaucratic Government by means of coercion, quotas, ration stamps, and allocations?

Under the American system of enterprise the distribution of goods and services was moving toward a correction of earlier discriminations. Antitrust laws and fair trade practices were adopted. Regulatory bodies were created to prevent debased standards in food products, dilutions, and freight rate inequities. Action was in the direction of the elimination of unfair distribution.

Under political collectivism the distribution of goods and services is controlled by political consideration. Antitrust laws and fair trade practice laws are abrogated. Food standards are debased and lowered, dilutions are ordered, and freight rate inequities are retained. Political considerations replace economic principles.

Therefore, I repeat, Mr. President, the question involved in the vote on this issue is who shall determine the character and the quantity of goods and services to be consumed by each citizen. Who shall determine the food or the clothing necessary to each person? Shall it be the citizen himself and the immediate members of his family or shall it be a little algebraic tribe of neo-economists ensconced in a governmental bureau, empowered with the authority of coercive regulations—of quotas, ration stamps, and allocations?

And as the production and the distribution of all goods must be earned by the labors of the citizen, the individual as a worker must fully understand his status in a collective economy. For the two great motivating impulses of man in the economic field are hope and fear. In America man's labors are stimulated through hope of acquiring, owning, and enjoying the fruits of his individual accomplishment. Collectivism cannot employ hope in similarly stimulating effort, because by its very nature it deprives the individual of the right to acquire and own the products of endeavor. Under collectivism the stimulation of labor has been through fear of starvation and punishment. Labor becomes compulsory. The voluntary division of labor attained under the American system of free enterprise is replaced by an assigned or allocated division of labor. Collectivism produces compulsory labor and the citizen becomes a slave.

Therefore, Mr. President, I desire to repeat the statement I made when I began these remarks: The issue involved in this vote is not the further salaries of some 33,000 OPA political jobholders. The issue is not one between the President and the Congress, nor between Republicans and Democrats. The issue is between two theories of economics—collectivism or free endeavor.

By the vote of the Senate, we shall be determining if we are to have a system of economy in America that will guarantee the citizen a right to own property or if he will be deprived of this constitutional right. We shall be determining whether we have political production or economic production. We shall be deciding if we are to have a free determination of the food and clothing necessary for our citizens or whether that selection and amount shall be determined for the citizen by a politically chosen bureau. We shall be determining if the working men and women of this Nation shall earn and retain the fruits of their labors or if they shall become compulsory servants in a politically controlled economic kingdom.

The decision to be made by the vote in the Senate on this question will determine if we shall condone the departure from democracy and acquiesce in anarchy. This vote may do to our Republic what all the legions of Hitler could never do—this communistic, cockeyed philosophy of government may, in fact, it eventually will, unless stopped, overthrow our system of constitutional government.

But to boil the thing right down to the common language of America, it simply means that the public officials who dominate this Government have lost confidence in the wisdom and ability of the rank and file of American citizens to conduct their own business.

I, for one, have not lost that confidence. I still have it in the rank and file of the American people, and I think they have done a swell job in carving out of the wilderness the greatest Nation the world has ever known. They did it without the benefit of the wisdom of the New Deal bureaucrats which, for the past 13 years, have been endeavoring to destroy this great Nation and overthrow our American form of government. I will cling to the rank and file of the American people.

Mr. President, I have always considered that an American citizen had the right to own property. After we complete the discussion of all the details and confused paragraphs of this monstrosity which is now pending before us, we will get back to the question of whether Mrs. O'Leary has lost her right to own a cow, milk it, skim the milk, take the cream and churn it into butter, and take the butter to town and sell it. That is a right we are about to give away. We are about to deprive Mrs. O'Leary of her right to own that cow, and sell the butter which she may make from the milk which the cow produces. We are taking that right away through this pending legislation.

Mr. President, when we take Mrs. O'Leary's rights away from her, at the same time we take away many other rights. Mrs. O'Leary, out on the plains, does not belong to any organization which has high-power representatives in Washington for the purpose of protecting her rights, so I am standing here on the floor of the Senate in an endavor to protect those rights for her. If she owns that cow and works hard and wishes to sell the products from that cow, she should have the right to do so.

I know what it means to live in the country and work hard. I lived on a ranch when I was a boy. I know how hard my father worked on that ranch in feeding thousands of head of livestock and in planting and harvesting the feed which the livestock consumed. During those 17 years of hard work which, in the end, netted nothing except a debt which grew greater and greater as time went on, my mother had a cow and some chickens. The milk which the cow furnished, together with the eggs, the butter, and the chickens, represented the only sources of revenue which the family had for use in buying books and clothes for the children so that they could go to school. My mother was poor and she worked out her life in poverty and hard drudgery for her children. But she had American freedom, American liberty, and the American right to work and to own property, and sell whatever she had for any price she could obtain for it.

Mr. President, these great men of wisdom in the United States Senate are right on the verge of taking rights away from the American people so that when Mrs. O'Leary takes that pound of butter to town, as well as the eggs which her chickens produce, she will not be able to get for them the price which purchasers might be willing to pay. She may meet the banker or someone whom she knows well, with wealth but with no butter, and she will be in a position to sell the butter to him. Every penny that she can get for that pound of butter means something to her. The banker says, "Well, that is a beautiful pound of butter." She has put it in a mold and it came out of the mold with a flower on top of it. It was 1 pound of butter. The banker says, "I will give you a dollar for it." He has a dollar and she needs it. She has the butter and he does not have any. But the Congress of the United States says, "No, Mrs. O'Leary, you cannot take that dollar, you must take only 52 cents, or 62 cents, or 78 cents." She may take only the amount which some bureaucrat in Washington says that she may take. And yet, Mr. President, it is said that that bureaucrat is trying to protect Mrs. O'Leary from inflation. The only inflation we have in this country is the inflation which is in the minds and hearts of the bureaucrats in Washington. I hope that they may become more inflated. I hope that they will become inflated to the busting point, and then perhaps the Congress will turn this Government back to the people and will recognize the fact that Government officials and employees are servants of the people of this country and not their masters.

We are not satisfied at this time, Mr. President, with having a bureaucrat as the Administrator of the OPA. It is proposed to have a board to consist of three members. Mr. President, you cannot change a bureaucrat by putting three of them in a pen together any more than you can change a hog or a bull on the farm by putting three of them together. They are still hogs or bulls or bureaucrats. [Laughter.] The only reason I can discover, Mr. President, for setting up this board of three members—to consist of three big fat bureaucrats—is the way the elections have been going throughout the country. The elections apparently will result in the New Dealers being turned out of office throughout the country. Bureaucrats must be taken care of, and defeated candidates must be given new berths when the New Deal is defeated.

Mr. President, we are getting back to the political phase of the situation. Yesterday, in Oklahoma, three incumbent Democrats were turned down by the voters en masse. They were candidates for the office of Representative in the United States Congress. I know one of them. He is a mighty nice fellow, and my sympathies are with all of them because they are Democrats. I do not know whether they were in favor of the New Deal or opposed to it, but I assert that the Democratic Party has the stamp of the New Deal on its forehead, and the people back home do not ask whether a candidate has been in favor of the New Deal or opposed to it; they defeat him anyway. As I have said, three candidates were defeated in Oklahoma. The people had the record of those candidates who were already in Washington, and they decided to nominate some new Democrats. It is now proposed to establish a Decontrol Board to consist of three. After a while the Board will be increased to 6, or 9, or 12, or 15 in order to take care of the defeated Democrats who are loyal adherents of the New Deal.

Mr. President, we must look at both sides of the situation. Some of the more optimistic Senators have been talking about how nice this measure will be. I will not call any names or cast any insinuations. I will not impugn the motives of any person, especially a United States Senator. I will not do that, I assure Senators. It would be against the rule. But I do assert that while some of the Senators have said we can expect this Board will do the right thing and be perfectly honest, we must not place our confidence in them. I will stand square on the basis of the philosophy of Thomas Jefferson. I shall not trust bureaucrats to do the right thing. I shall always go on the theory that they will do the wrong thing. Thomas Jefferson said:

> Do not put any confidence in men. Bind them down by the chains of the Constitution.

There are many honest men and many honest women in this country, but I am not willing to completely put my trust in the ones who will be appointed on this board of bureaucrats which will run the OPA. I may say further, Mr. President, that it is my honest opinion that no honest man would accept appointment on the Board. At least, he would not accept appointment on the Board if he had sense enough to know what would be his responsibilities. He will be placed on the Board for the express purpose of destroying our American form of government. I have already made the statement that the OPA was established as a machine for that express purpose, and the record shows that my prophecy was correct.

They have done more to overthrow our American form of Government than any other department of the New Deal. These three members of this Board, according to the new bill, which has not been passed but it looks as if it is going to be, do not even have to be confirmed by the Senate until a considerable period of time has elapsed should the Congress adjourn before the appointments are made. The President can appoint them. The President may try to get some honest men, but he is going to have difficulty because an honest man will not take the job. It is an impossible job. I do not care how smart anyone is; he may have the wisdom of Solomon, but he cannot administer OPA under our form of Government. If there is anything that is impossible, that is it. It just cannot be done, because by it the Government would take away from Mrs. O'Leary the right to say what she will take for her pound of butter. That is not Americanism. No honest man would take the administrative task of administering a dishonest law like that.

We might absolve ourselves of any bad intention by saying we are passing this law and we believe it will be honestly administered. Men may say that if they so desire. I believe it will be dishonestly administered, and I say that because it has been dishonestly administered.

I am not going to place the blame on Chester Bowles or Leon Henderson. I said from the start, and it is right there on the book, January 8, 1942, when I was talking about the first OPA bill before we enacted it, that I did not know who the Administrator was going to be, but thought that possibly before we got through with it we would have many different Administrators. There is no use blaming them. They are hired for a purpose, and if they do not perform, they are fired. They did not keep Senator Brown there very long. Senator Brown was an honest man, in my opinion. He did not stay with them very long. Some of the boys who are hired in these bureaus have to make a living, I suppose. Do not blame them. Let us look at the law, and see what kind of a law we passed.

I said in 1942 that the law laid the door open for the biggest racketeering and biggest black marketing and gambling we ever had in this country, the most terrible outbreak of lawlessness. It will be much worse under the new board. You can put the blame on one Administrator, but get three, and then on whom will you lay the blame? They are going to dodge the issue. It is not going to be a Decontrol Board, but it will decontrol, recontrol, uncontrol, control, anything they want to do.

What are they going to do? They might act themselves, and they may do so, but they are going to have a few friends around who go out to a big party and get loved up by the women, who like to speculate. They are going to have a swarm of these speculators who will know in advance when they will raise the price on a commodity, and they will get in there and buy the commodity and get the benefit of the advance. They will get a tip-off and take the profit, and this Decontrol Board will say, "We are going to control it again, we are going to put it back down." They will have the prices running up and down faster than a squirrel running up and down a tree.

It will make possible the most crooked administration of any bureau that was ever set up. It is placing the control of prices on everything in America in the hands of three men. Not only that, but it is in my judgment going to become a great scandal and instrument of corruption. I am making this as a prophesy, and if you do not believe I know how to prophesy—and I am not bragging about it, but I am glad I said it—go back and see what I said on January 8, 1942, would happen if we passed the OPA bill. Everything I said would happen did happen. Everything I prophesied was something bad, and everything that has happened has been bad, but things are going to get a lot worse.

Set up this board and give them the power and the opportunity to dodge responsibility, give them the power to run the cotton market up, to run the wheat market up, and the prices of hogs and cattle up, and run them back down again, and you destroy production, and you are going to make possible a lot of corruption. There is already a lot of it, but I think conditions can get worse and, under a law such as this, certainly will.

I believe another thing will happen. Some folks may not believe this, but I have a right to believe it, and I am a Senator and have a right to say it. I am not making any accusations at all, but I say, based on what I know, that I am firmly convinced that when the cold steel pen of the unbiased historian writes the record of the New Deal Administration, it will go down in the pages of history as the most corrupt government that ever governed any nation on the face of the earth at any time. We are seeing some signs in the newspapers of what has been done, but to use a colloquial expression you ain't seen nothing yet.

OPA is bad. That is what I am trying to tell the Senate. It is bad because it is unconstitutional, it is un-American, it is communistic, it is socialistic, and it is destroying everything Americans hold dear.

I know there are some good Americans citizens who favor OPA, and I am not going to criticize the good ones, but I am going to ask them to look into this thing a little further. You do not have to be a fool to be fooled. Some of the wisest people are fooled, and some very wise people and some mighty good citizens are fooled about this thing.

Mr. President, a Socialist could not be elected President of the United States. One never has been elected. The people simply do not believe in socialism—at least not very many of them do—to the extent of going to the polls and voting the Socialist ticket, but whenever you say you believe in OPA, you are advocating socialism in America; you are advocating that your great Government use the arm of the law to go down into the pocket of Mrs. O'Leary and open it and take out the money from her pocket and give it to some rich man on Wall Street in the price of butter. That is pure socialism, issuing some bonds and taking the proceeds of the bonds and spending them for subsidies, giving them away.

To whom are they to be given? The subsidies are given to many people, but it is my belief that most of the subsidies go to the friends of the New Dealers, the black-marketeers. How do they get to those black-marketeers? They do not write out a check and give it to them. No; they do not do anything on the level. They pay the subsidy check to the processor, which is supposed to represent the difference between what he paid for the commodity and what he sells it for; in other words, to represent his loss, so that he can sell it for less than what he paid for it.

Let us say it is 17 cents a pound on butter, for illustration. The processor gets that 17 cents a pound, he sells the butter for 17 cents less than it cost him. To whom does he sell it? He sells some to legitimate merchants, but it is believed by many that he sells the most of it to the black marketeers. How are you going to know who they are? Go to any of the grocery stores in Washington and walk in. You would not have argued with them before OPA died. If you could get a little bit of a quarter of a pound of butter, you were not going to argue about 25 cents. The merchant did not look like a black marketeer. Some of them are, we all know. Therefore, a large part of the subsidy that is paid out—most of it, I believe; I do not know the percentage, there is no way to check it, but I would say most of it—goes indirectly into the profits of the black marketeers. That is where it goes. No one can deny that. After all, a survey showed that, shortly before OPA died, 80 percent of all the meat was sold in the black market.

Many of those fellows do not make out any income tax returns. So the whole bill is just something to encourage lawlessness, and, inadvertently, to make a potential lawbreaker out of every American citizen.

Talk about juvenile delinquency. Why would we not have juvenile delinquency when the children go with their mothers and fathers to do the shopping and know that mother and dad are dealing in the black market contrary to law? What are they going to think about them when they see that disregard for law? Some do not think it amounts to anything, but it does.

I know that there are many honest citizens in this country who have simply been fooled by the laws which have been passed by the New Deal administration. You get in your automobile and start down the street, the speed limit being 30 miles an hour, and you hear the putt-putt-putt of the motorcycle police coming down the street behind you, and old fear takes hold of you right then, and you look at your speedometer and you find that you are exceeding the speed limit, and you slow down kind of gradually, not too fast so it will be noticeable, but you are violating the law, and you have respect for the law in your heart. That respect, however, is disappearing. The more you violate the law the more callous your conscience becomes. Morality appears to be at a low ebb today in this country. Lawlessness is increasing. So is juvenile delinquency. It is all nurtured and brought about largely by the corrupt leadership of this New Deal gang.

Before that, Mr. President, we had a wonderful country. We want to get it back again. But we are not going to get it back again by going in the wrong direction and passing laws like this. We do not need this law. We can get along all right without it.

Mr. President, in the heat of debate and haste to destroy our Government today by rushing through this monstrosity of a bill, it might be well to remember the signs of hysteria that gripped this body yesterday while we were considering the means of paying off an honest debt to the soldiers who saved us from foreign foes and who had been overlooked while others in the services had been paid. I became fearful as I heard Senators discuss the terrible and deplorable condition of our voluntary system. We are on the verge of going to the bow wows. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget and the big boys in the administration say our money is getting so low that we cannot pay these boys in money. No, we cannot pay them in money. We have to pay them in I O U's. We are out of money. We have to pay the boys with autographed pictures of our United States Treasury Building. Yesterday we were simply in a terrible fix. It is a good thing that the hysteria did not grab the Congress a few days earlier when John Bull, the British Government, was pounding at the teller's window here for $3,750,000,000. We had plenty of money then. If we had just been notified by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget before we passed the British loan measure, we might have paid Britain off with Confederate currency, or autographs of bureaucrats, or anything except money. Oh, no; we had plenty of money when it was going to be given away to some foreign country.

Now, Senators, look at what we have before us today. We have another measure before us today and it requires money. What are we going to do? Yesterday we did not have any. It was all gone. The printing presses had broken down. We were entirely out of money. Just after we had paid John Bull $3,750,000,000, then the boys come along and want to get the little balance that we owe them, the boys who went overseas and fought for us, and were lucky enough to get back alive. They wanted to get their money. But then it was said "Oh no, boys, we are out of money. We will take these pieces of paper with pictures on them and have bureaucrats' autographs put on them and give them to you." It was said that that measure would be inflationary. But now we have a measure before us today which requires $1,000,000,000 to be expended. The OPA admits it will require $1,000,000,000, and that means of course that it will require two or three billion dollars, because they never admit to as much as will be required. Mr. President, with what are we going to pay these subsidies? With potatoes? We have to look around and find something else to use for money. I heard someone say we had a surplus of potatoes. Perhaps we can pay subsidies with potatoes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWIFT in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I shall be delighted to yield for a question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not the Senator realize that there will never be a shortage of money so long as the poplar and the spruce lasts in northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Canada? They make good paper.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I recognize that, Mr. President, but I am not going to let the Senator from Minnesota get away with the suggestion that pulp from Minnesota provides all the paper that is used, because we produce wood pulp in Texas.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Well, that adds to the supply of money.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That adds to the supply. It took a great deal of the supply of pulp and paper for OPA propaganda, and we ran short of paper. We cannot print any more money. We are out of currency.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Short on paper?

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes; that is what is said. It was contended that we cannot pay the boys in currency because we are short on money. I guess they have some kind of paper down there on which to print the autographs. We now have a measure before us which is going to require a great deal of money if we pass it.

Mr. President, there is a way to prevent all this, to keep out of all this trouble I am talking about, and that is to vote down the conference report.

When I discussed this matter after OPA expired, when we received the House joint resolution and amended it, and it had to go to conference, I expressed the pious hope that the conference committee would not make a farce out of our legislative machinery. Well, in my opinion, the conferees tried their best to do it, but they did not quite make the grade. If our legislative machinery is going to turn out to be a farce, it is we ourselves in Congress who will conduct that operation. What the conferees labored and brought forth is now back in the Senate. It is now up to us to act. We cannot lay the blame on the conferees. We have a right to turn down the conference report. Whether it is good or whether it is bad, we have that right. So we cannot blame the conference committee for making a farce out of our legislative machinery. It is like the old man who got mad at his wife, and was talking to her. He said, "You are trying to make a fool out of me." She kind of smiled and said, "No; I am too late. You did that yourself." So that is the way with this matter. The conference committee cannot make a farce out of our legislative machinery. If a farce is to be made of it, we ourselves must do it, and in my opinion we will be doing it if we pass this OPA legislation.

Mr. President, it was brought out on the floor of the Senate today and has been brought out every day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that an enormous number of cattle and hogs, and other livestock, were being rushed into the market when the farmers found out that OPA was dead. They then began to pour their livestock into the market. The meat has now seeped through the usual channels and is coming to the meat market now. But what I want to point out is that dead cows do not eat grain, and dead hogs do not eat grain. We have been talking about a grain shortage. Part of that grain shortage was caused by the livestock backing up in the feed lots because the feeders were not willing to sell them at OPA prices, and they had to feed that livestock. That required a great deal of grain. As soon as those animals are slaughtered it stopped that much feeding of grain. That is going to give us a more abundant supply of grain to take care of the poultry in those sections of the United States where the shortage of poultry feed has been discussed on the floor of the Senate. If we permit the law of supply and demand to prevail we will do well.

Mr. President, we do not hear of the housewife paying exorbitant prices for anything. She has common sense. I wish the housewives were in the Senate and we were out there doing their work. They would fix this OPA measure. I think they have more sense than we have. They have kept prices under control. The housewives and other buyers have kept the prices of this Nation under control for 150 years. We have had 2½ years of OPA, and everything got out of joint, everything got out of line. Now we have been free of OPA control for 24 days, and a pretty good job has been done under the old law of supply and demand. The farmer and the stock raiser is satisfied because he has an open market. That is what he wants. If he simply has the hope of receiving more for his produce he will produce. He will be disappointed this year under the normal market of supply and demand, but that will not stop him. He will try it another year. But when we set down definitely what he is going to get, and he knows he is not going to get his cost of production, he is not going to plant.

The farmer is the most independent individual in the whole country. That is the reason why the New Deal is trying to destroy agriculture in this country—because the farmers are independent. They think for themselves. When I said the New Deal is trying to destroy them, I mean all the New Deal has done is to run 5,000,000 of them off the farms. First, they put them under OPA, and if they did not starve them to death, then, after the war came, they put them in the Army, and 5,000,000 or more are off the farms.

I do not know whether everyone listening to me knows of the plans of the New Deal or not. They have various ramifications, but one function of the New Deal is to destroy agriculture, and for two purposes. The first purpose is to run the independent farmers off the farms where they have control of themselves and they feel like they are masters of the situation out there, and run them into the cities where they can regiment them, and get them into certain communistic labor unions, and tell them when to get up, and when to go to work, and what wages they will get, and what store they will buy at, and how much of that they can have and how much of this they can have. They can control them—and control their votes, too. That is the reason why they are trying to destroy agriculture and run the farmers off the farms.

When we were speaking here the other day about paying the boys off with autographed pictures instead of money it was said that that was recommended by the Treasury Department and the Bureau of the Budget. It was said that we must do that or have inflation, because there is so much money in the country. I looked up the figures. There is a great deal of money in circulation—approximately $23,000,000,000. The Bureau of the Budget says, "We cannot turn the boys loose with this money. They would start spending it right and left, and bring on more inflation. We must pay them off in autographed pictures."

Then one Senator started to explain that that was what the Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury Department had said in 1933. I looked up the figures showing the amount of money in circulation when we paid the bonus in bonds. There was only about $6,000,000,000. We had deflation then, and we have inflation now. Both extremes are used as an argument against paying the boys off in cash. That shows how the New Deal bureaucrats in the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget work both sides of the street.

I could say a great deal more, but I do not see any use in delaying this game. I wished to make these few remarks so that the RECORD would show that there is at least one Senator on this side of the aisle who is against this skulduggery. There may be more, but there is at least one.

Mr. President, I believe that the conference report should be rejected. I do not believe that we need OPA. I think we could get along better without it. If we do not reject it now, how are we ever going to get rid of OPA? As one man wrote me, you cannot sober up a drunk by continuing to pour whiskey down his throat. We cannot get rid of OPA by continually renewing, extending, or reinstating it.

We are having a very pleasant time in this country now. Even some of the newspapers which favored OPA are trying to outdo each other by writing editorials showing how pleasant it is since we got rid of OPA, and how everything is going along all right. One can go to the butcher shop and get butter, meat, and eggs. The people can buy clothes, and many other things at prices no higher than they were under OPA, taking into consideration the subsidies.

Of course, many persons do not understand subsidies. The name "subsidy" is a very pleasant sounding word. It sounds almost good enough to eat, but we cannot eat it. When one buys a pound of butter the Government helps to pay for it. That means that he gets the bill from the Government, not only for what it paid, but for compound interest, because everyone knows that we shall never be able to pay the debt. All the money which is borrowed and paid out in the form of subsidies is added to the huge public debt we already have. It immediately begins to draw interest, and there are handling charges and other expenses. So we are paying part of the price at the grocery store and part of it at the Treasury Department in income taxes, and all paid as income tax also carries a substantial overhead charge.

There may be some who do not realize just what subsidies are, but their children and grandchildren will find out what they are. When you are dead and gone and a big tombstone marks your final resting place, your children will throw rotten eggs at that tombstone every time they receive a bill from the Treasury Department for taxes to pay subsidies on the butter and meat which you ate and charged up to them. Our grandchildren will not have the same love of their forefathers that we have for our forefathers. One should remember that. He had better not have a tombstone erected over his grave, so that there will be no means of identification to enable his posterity to find him.

We talk about fickle financing. There never was a stock promotion or blue-sky financing in any part of the world which in any way compares with the New Deal fickle financing. So far the New Dealers have made it stick. But the people are getting wise. Yesterday I received a telegram from a man living in Chicago. His name is Robert A. Stough and he lives at 608 South Dearborn. Mr. Stough posed the question: "If living unearned income caused 1929 crash, what kind of crash will continued Government deficit spending cause? Why not save expense OPA and black market costs?" Yes, the people are getting wise to the New Deal. But they still have support. Of course the New Deal has support. It does not get it by logic, eloquence, or common sense. It gets it by buying it, the only way it ever got anything. It prints the money or borrows it, charges it up to us, and gives it back to us, and says, "Please vote for me." The people put the New Deal in power, and it is still in power. But it is going out fast. I do not see any way to save this country until every New Dealer is run out of Washington. I should like to place a great chain and padlock on every one of the bureaus. Before closing them up I would throw in some DDT, after giving those inside an opportunity to get out and go back home and enjoy themselves. We do not want any casualties.

Let us close these great mausoleums and lock them up. Let us make this city look like the Deserted Village. Anyone who came here and wanted to know where America was could be told, "It is back there on the broad acres where the people live, and not here in this international city." That is what I should like to see. But we are not going to accomplish it by putting three bureaucrats in the place of one.

I had some additional material to read, to show that OPA does not know that it is out of business. It is still doing business at the same old stand. The people of Texas still receive letters, regulations, rules, and instructions from OPA, telling them how to operate their businesses. The OPA does not know that it is out of business. It is still on the telephone calling up housewives and saying, "Be sure to wire your Congressman to put us back in business." To use an expression of President Truman's, they are at the "battle stations." Perhaps that is the reason why Congress does not know that the war is over. Everyone knows it but Congress, and here we are in a state of war—a war with OPA, I suppose.

I have received a letter from Paul Porter, OPA Administrator, dated July 22. He is still in business. Until the OPA went out of business it was difficult to get replies from him. I wrote him a letter on June 14, and he answered it on July 22. He is catching up with his correspondence during this breathing spell.

Here is a letter from a lady in Austin, Tex. I shall not read her name, because the OPA would pounce on her and put her in jail if I were to read her name. The letter is dated July 11. It reads in part as follows:

> I am enclosing two items I received in the mail this morning, although the OPA expired on June 30, 1946. We must be paying the wages of the 68,000—

I do not know whether that number is correct, but that is what she says in the letter—

> We must be paying the wages of the 68,000 snoopers, and the taxpayers are paying for the printing and mailing of the forms and circulars. Why should we be forced to even open mail that has not any meaning?

Here are all the instructions, telling us how to operate a grocery store. There is an envelope full of material. I will wager that Paul Porter would be mad if he knew that that material was sent up here without reading. That lady was so glad to get rid of it that she spent 15 cents to send it to me.

The OPA does not know that it is out of business. Perhaps it is not. It does not seem so, judging from the way this measure is going through Congress. The OPA will be back on the job.

Mr. President, here is another letter. It comes from Oceanside, Calif., and is written on stationery of the Office of Price Administration. It reads in part as follows:

> OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
> Oceanside, Calif., July 8, 1946.
> Senator O'DANIEL,
> DEAR SENATOR O'DANIEL: Will you please take time to read the enclosed cases that actually happened in the OPA office that I managed for a year in Oceanside, where I had 3,000 rent registrations.

She goes on to record what she did while she was there.

Mr. President, I have a number of other letters and a number of advertisements. One of them reads:

> Throw out OPA, and give America back to the people.

Well, we did it. That is one thing we accomplished. We did it the hard way. I introduced a resolution, a long time ago, to abolish the OPA, but it got hid under a rug in some committee, or it fell down behind a desk, or something else happened to it. At any rate, it never got back to the Senate. However, it got passed anyhow, with the help of God and Mr. Truman.

A great many of these telegrams have come from people who seem to appreciate what I have done up here in prolonging this thing until the OPA expired, and they have sent me some mighty fine letters.

Here is one of them that I shall read, because it comes from the dean member of the Texas House of Representatives. He was in the House of Representatives when I was Governor of Texas. We did not always see eye to eye, but it is nice to get converts, and I wish to read his letter. I prize it highly. It just came to me. It is dated July 17; and it is marked "Personal and Confidential," so I do not want any of you folks to tell anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, here is the letter:

> PORT NECHES, TEX., July 17, 1946.
> Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
> United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SENATOR O'DANIEL: Though we may have privately differed at times in the matter of methods, I have never had reason to complain about your courage; or about your loyalty to the heritage which national and State constitutions sought to bequeath to the people of America.
> While your efforts against the trend into chaos, as symbolized by the term "New Deal," might be said to be opposed to the wishes of the majority, their separate spheres of selfishness, lack of responsibility, levels of inertia and ignorance considered, you have earned the self-respect and peace of conscience that associates with certainty that you have fought in behalf of the right, and the best interests of a Nation and its people.
> I want you to know that as far as I am concerned, your dimensions are singularly impressive in a field where little other is to be seen, than the yielding of convictions and character to the emoluments of office and the stress of mob rule.
> Thinking of America as it was—the framework of implements, principles, and practices upon which it ascended to the pinnacle of accomplishment—and thinking of the America of today, thrown back generations by a shameful catalog of governmentally imposed interferences and restraints, the excuses of those who stay the death of OPA, the Wagner Labor Act, and the other implements of chaos and decay, no longer, to my mind partake even of appeasement the sorriest of substance.
> I congratulate you, Senator, upon your dimensions as a statesman.
> Yours very truly,
> C. E. NICHOLSON,
> Dean, Member of the Texas House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I know something about the destruction wrought by the OPA, because citizens of my State engaged in practically every line of industry have written to me and have explained how they have been penalized and put out of business. I have talked to officials in the OPA offices in Washington, where I have found very little sympathy toward private enterprise, but where I could detect a smile of satisfaction whenever the OPA officials received definite assurance or proof that they were putting somebody out of business. I know what the attitude down there is; no one need tell me that.

I wish to read a letter which shows the extent to which a citizen in my State went to try to provide some houses, and how he was blocked at every turn of the road. It is almost unbelievable that we would have an organization of power in Washington that would do the things that are stated in this letter. The letter comes from Amarillo, Tex., and it reads as follows:

AMARILLO, TEX., April 23, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'DANIEL: What with all the uproar about the housing situation and the House action last week, you no doubt are receiving a lot of letters from your constituents telling you what you should do and shouldn't do. This letter contains neither of the above, but it is a right interesting commentary on how the various rules and regulations are working in the housing situation.

From July 1941 to early in 1942 I built approximately 75 low-cost homes on some lots I owned in North Amarillo. I didn't build them through FHA, but arranged to carry the paper through banking connections, and really sold these houses at a very low price strictly because I wanted to sell the lots. Believe it or not, I sold a house and lot, four rooms and bathroom, for $1,825, water, lights, and gas. This didn't include a garage or sidewalk or the tub installed in the bathroom. The idea was to sell these houses to men who were making a reasonable salary and had a lot of time after 5 o'clock to do what improving they wanted to around the home and later on to put up another hundred dollars to finish the bathroom. Of the 75 houses, which we sold at from $150 to $300 cash down and $19.75 per month, more than a third have paid out in full, and nobody is in arrears. The $19.75 monthly payment includes taxes and simple interest at 6 percent with no fixed charges of any kind for deed, abstract, loan, et cetera. I didn't go into this as a philanthropic enterprise, but it has been gratifying to know everybody has been happy in their purchase.

We closed down our operations when the freeze came in early 1942 and prepared to open up again in January of this year, inasmuch as there was a crying demand for houses, and the Government was asking for homes and more homes, especially of the low-cost type. I found that in order to furnish the same kind of house on the same lot, it would have to sell for $2,750, which is approximately $750 less than anybody else can or does build a house of this type. The reason for our economy is that we had our own lumber yard, bought everything wholesale, sublet the carpentering, painting, and electrical work, but furnished the material ourselves. I merely wanted to sell the lots and get a house there that would be paid for without any burden to the purchaser. I am still not a philanthropist; I merely want to sell the lots.

The first thing I had to do was to get a priority before I could buy lumber.

He was in the lumber business, but first he had to get a priority.

I read from the letter:

I took this up with the local authorities and was referred to Fort Worth where I received priority without any delay. I submitted the complete information on the house and they gave me a base of $3,500, which is $750 more than we expect to charge for the house. So far so good. The next step was that Mr. Frank Hardin, my associate and the man who handles this entire business, started through east Texas and southern Louisiana armed with a priority ready to bring back several carloads of lumber, sash and doors and other building material. He was gone 2 weeks and couldn't buy one single dollar's worth of material. The big mills merely said "nothing to sell" and the little mills offered to sell at black market in which we were not interested.

After contacting some twenty or twenty-five sources of supply I came back empty handed and with the same answers.

A man with any sense would have stopped right there, but by that time I was determined we were going to overcome the obstacles and my next move was to go into Arkansas to try to get in with some sawmill outfit where we would have a permanent source of supply. The story was the same kind, and I wound up by buying some $30,000 of standing timber, a big sawmill, kiln and manufacturing plant capable of turning out several carloads of lumber a week.

Mr. President, this letter is somewhat long, but very interesting because it explains how a patriotic American citizen was trying to construct some houses in order to help out the housing-shortage situation.

I continue reading from the letter.

This would take care of everything but the sash and doors and roofing. The sash-and-door people gave us the same answer as the lumber people, so I went to Albuquerque, N. Mex., and put a man in the sash-and-door manufacturing business.

The writer of this letter was bound to build those houses. He had the lumberyard and went out to buy a forest and a sawmill. Then he had to go to New Mexico and put a man in the sash-and-door manufacturing business.

I continue reading from the letter.

This gives us our sash and doors. I was able to maintain hardware and nails from local sources, but it still left me without roofing. Up to the present time I am still without roofing because a priority seems to mean nothing whatever to roofing manufacturers, any more than it did to lumber mills, when it comes to actually selling you what you need, but we can buy it from Sears, Roebuck one at a time if no other way.

Understand, I want to finish 2 houses a week until I have built 311 houses, which covers all the lots we own, and I have already got the deal financed through a bank in St. Louis. Now here I am with timber and a sawmill in Arkansas, a retail lumberyard in Amarillo, and the next thing that comes up is OPA says I can't own them both.

Mr. President, was not that man in a terrible fix? OPA said that he could not own a lumberyard in Amarillo, but could own a sawmill and a forest over in Arkansas.

To overcome this obstacle I get out of the retail business in Amarillo, but am allowed to sell the lumberyard by lots, although I have to help this company finance the building, "this company" being owned by some other member of my family but which, of course, is entirely legal.

He had to get the family all mixed up in organizing the different companies in order not to have them owned by the same persons.

I continue reading:

I think everything is all set and yesterday comes out the ruling that 25 percent of the houses must be built for rent, which means that out of the first 100 houses we build in Amarillo, 25 will be for rent and will require a permanent investment on my part of $68,750 (25 houses at $2,750 each) per year for 3 years and I simply am not in financial condition to go into the business of building houses for rent, which means that if this is really the final word there will be 311 houses less built in Amarillo than otherwise.

I have been a pretty strong supporter of OPA until I have noticed how the black market works in the lumber business. It isn't going to affect me if I continue building, because my mill can sell at ceiling prices to the lumberyard in Amarillo and make expenses, the lumberyard will have sufficient lumber to build and I can still dispose of my lots, but I have found the following to be the case. All over the lumber-producing States of the South there are a number of large mills which must adhere to the ceiling prices, which for example on softwood we will say averages $48 a thousand and on which price they cannot make any money. As a result they have cut down their production. In all these States small outfits have put in portable sawmills turning out 4,000 to 6,000 feet of lumber a day and the trucks from Texas, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, and other States are filling the highways in the South backing up to the small sawmills and paying $75 black market for green lumber sawed yesterday. The truckers take this load and sell it to a contractor or some black-market source for $100 or more per thousand and when it gets into the house it has cost the home buyer $150 a thousand and it's green lumber which in 6 months will curl up and the house owner has a poorly constructed home at the price which should have given him a good home.

If the big sawmills were allowed a price that they could make money on, say the price that the black market is charging, $75 a thousand, they would go into the woods and cut down the timber, increase their production 100 percent, run the lumber through their planing mills, through their kilns, and furnish high-grade lumber for $75 a thousand. When it reaches the ultimate consumer in a home it has cost him no more than through the black market and he has gotten good lumber. The big mills will furnish so much good lumber that the black-market operators will have no customers and then it is a scrap between the big mills, and if they are allowed to furnish enough lumber competition will arise among them and prices will take care of themselves without any OPA control.

I don't know why I wrote this letter, because I don't seem to be able to find any moral to the story. Maybe I just wanted to let you know how hard it is to build homes with all the restrictions which we have to overcome, and to cry on somebody's shoulder.

Mr. President, that concludes the reading of the letter. Every time this man turned the corner with a hammer or a saw or something which indicated he wanted to build a house, the OPA sicked the dogs on him.

Yes, Mr. President, that man had trouble because of the OPA in getting houses built for the returned servicemen. But a man like that will, somehow, succeed. Then, those veterans will have to furnish those houses, and the OPA, if we recreate it, will have them again. For, in this bill, under section 10, paragraph T of the bill, the entire furniture business is placed between a "rock and a hard place." Let me read a brief telegram sent to me by Mr. Leo J. Heer, vice president of the National Retail Furniture Association:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23, 1946,
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Representing 7,000 merchants doing 80 percent of annual furniture-store sales we protest the averaging provisions of section 10, paragraph T of House Joint Resolution 37 extending price control. If objectionable paragraph becomes law it could distort entire pricing structure creating serious margin depressing result for those above average and providing windfall for those below average. Total outlay by consumers as a whole for any commodity would remain exactly same with or without the averaging technique. We urge no parliamentary situation be permitted interfere with correcting the prospective gross inequity. From OPA administrative viewpoint substitution of actual individual cost of acquisition plus actual individual discounts or mark-ups is tremendously more practicable and workable in contrast to highly intangible, artificial, and discriminatory nature of averages derived in varied types of retail stores. Our consistent record of sincerity and objectivity on problem of price control as reflected in committee hearings of House and Senate evidences this has been our position from the inception of price control.

NATIONAL RETAIL FURNITURE ASSOCIATION,
By LEO J. HEER, Vice President.

I wish to read something about what other people think the new OPA bill will do. But, Mr. President, before doing so I wish to say in connection with the subject of the letter which I completed reading a moment ago, which had been written by the person at Amarillo, Tex., who tried to build some houses, that I have found the same situation in connection with every other line of industry in my State. We have large acreages of fertile soil in the Magic Valley of Texas, where we raise an abundance of vegetables, such as cabbage, spinach, onions, radishes, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. I assume from what the Senator has been saying that he must agree with what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] said today, namely, that to enact this measure into law would be to stymie production of every kind and character.

Mr. O'DANIEL.. I sincerely believe that that is the purpose of the OPA. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska, and earlier in my speech I said what I thought about his statesmanship.

But what I was about to say in connection with the destruction of private enterprise in this country is that it is to be seen how the OPA prevented the writer of the letter which I read from building houses. I have been in the Rio Grande Valley when the farmers there were plowing under hundreds of acres of the finest cabbages—I have photographs of it—spinach and other vegetables. Why? Those vegetables had matured and were ready for harvesting. Men with great large tractors were plowing under that food. Why were they doing it, Mr. President? Because the OPA had established ceiling prices on those vegetables and the farmers were able to save money by plowing the vegetables under rather than by harvesting them and putting them into crates and shipping them to the market where they could be consumed by the American public. No wonder there has been a shortage of food.

In the region near San Antonio, Tex., where there used to be a great poultry industry, farmers bought baby chicks by the thousands and took them out to the farms. In a few weeks those baby chicks would grow into broilers and fryers for the market. What did the OPA do when they found out that those farmers were raising those chickens for food? They figure out a price by which the farmers would be unable to get back their cost of purchasing the baby chicks, raising them and feeding them. Most of those families were put completely out of business. A large number of these poultrymen were returned service men, many of whom had financed their enterprise through the GI bill of rights.

I went down to interview the OPA and asked them why they wanted to put those poultry raisers out of business. They said, "Why, we don't want to put them out of business, but we want to hold the price of the poultry down so that the consumer will not have to pay so much for it." Some of those farmers in Texas received statements from various stores to the effect that they would pay more for the poultry and would not increase the price to the consumer. Did that result in the OPA saying to those farmers that they would allow them to increase their price to the dealer provided that he did not increase the price to the consumer? No. The OPA was not interested in anything of that kind. The OPA was interested only in putting the poultrymen out of business. That was their objective. Putting businessmen out of business is what the OPA was created to do. That is what the OPA was set up to do. That is what they did. Not only that, Mr. President, but throughout all Texas wherever there were little dairies the farmers were unable to obtain a sufficient price for their milk to pay for the cost of feeding the cows. There were mothers with children who wanted to buy milk and were perfectly willing to pay an additional penny or two for a quart of milk. Were those farmers allowed to increase the price of their milk? They were not.

Many of those farmers were compelled to drive their cows to the slaughter pens and have them butchered. They were put out of business. That happened in many instances all over the State of Texas. I know of one case, because I know the man involved. He received a check for $25,000 and gave up the operation of his business. He had been in the dairy business for a long time and had built up a wonderful business. He required a great deal of feed in order to maintain his dairy. He would go to the feed dealer who would sell him 100 sacks of feed but would not allow him to take home more than 25.

Then he had to come back, whenever they specified, on a certain day. He had to drive 35 or 40 miles with his truck. The tires were blowing out, gasoline was rationed, there was difficulty in getting help, and he had to make all those extra trips, when he could have bought a hundred sacks at one time; but OPA regulations would not permit it, is it surprising that I receive telegrams such as—and I quote:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 23, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

You and 50 other Senators voted to adopt Wherry amendment decontrolling dairy products. You did this because you realized that impractical administration of controls over dairy products was rapidly curtailing production and denying to the consumer the right to purchase dairy products he wanted. We have now had 3 weeks with free markets and dairy products are readily available and prices are leveling. To again impose regulations on dairy industry would cause a chaotic condition, tremendous losses to dairy industry, and irreparable damage to small manufacturers of dairy products. We ask you to kindly continue your support in permanent elimination of dairy products from any revamped OPA legislation.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,

Since termination of hostilities milk production has declined consistently. Under OPA farmers have had no particular incentive to produce milk and many herds are being sold. Since OPA expiration interest has picked up; sales prices reflect increase only about amount equal to subsidy, in some cases lower. Cannot urge too strongly your favorable action toward decontrol of dairy products if the dairy industry is to continue to produce the milk and milk products so critically needed the world over today.

Urge defeat conferees OPA bill. Include decontrol on livestock, dairy, poultry, and eggs as written by Senate. No runaway prices in local dairy market.

HENRY F. NEW,
Manager, Coastal Bend Milk Producers Association.

HOUSTON, TEX., July 23, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Dairy industry settling down to substantial program. Please do not put us back under OPA with all the confusion and unreasonable restrictions they will place on our industry. Urge you vote against conferees' report.

B. E. STALLONES,
Manager, South Texas Producers Association.

Not only that, but in the meat industry, truckload after truckload of cattle were hauled to market. They had quotas, and the buyer would say, "Our quota has all been filled, we cannot take the cattle." Then the farmer would have to haul the cattle back home, and given them some more feed, which was needed so badly, just to keep them alive until some time when the OPA would give them a quota so that they could get their cattle sold. That ran through all lines of business.

Talk about the shortage of butter. There was a man in Texas who was manufacturing churns so that the housewife could churn butter. The OPA would not let him manufacture churns. They stopped the manufacture. They stopped the manufacture of hundreds of articles that were made in Texas, when all the raw material was there for the manufacture. The farmers were unable to buy parts for their farm machinery. Did they want to save the metal, or stop the farmer from producing? Let us see what happened.

A big skyscraper was being built in Texas when the metal and other materials that entered it were sorely needed by the farmers in Texas for replacements for machinery and parts. It is my opinion they showed that the sole intent was to destroy production in America and not only to do that, but to destroy our American form of government, bring us to communism and totalitarianism; and that is what they have almost succeeded in doing. It was said that when Congress passed this bill the OPA was going to expire on June 30, 1946, and, thank God, it did. But they did just everything within their power to keep it from expiring.

They passed another bill and sent it to the White House, and it did not suit the President. He thought he would get a better one, I suppose.

Mr. President, that is the history of OPA. As if it were not bad enough, under the domination of one bureaucrat, they want to set up three of them, three in one. When they get those three set up, then you will see some high financing in this country. That is when you are going to see speculation rampant. I have no doubt that the information will leak out through different sources to the faithful of the New Deal. They will say, "We are going to take the ceilings off oats" or "We are going to take it off barley" or something else, "on a certain date." You had better get in and buy something.

There will be need of more investigating committees to investigate these scandals, if they keep on increasing the bureaus three to one. They will need more investigators than they can find in Washington; and there are many people here. Then they are going to need a lot of investigators to investigate the investigators. [Laughter.] It is just one of those cancers that grows and grows and grows, and will keep on growing until our great Republic, that was founded by our forefathers and handed down to us as a gracious heritage, is destroyed; or the American people take proper steps at the polls to cure the political cancer by defeating all those who adhere to the philosophy of the New Deal.

Why is there so much more prosperity in this country than in some of the other countries of the earth where there are natural resources and more people than we have? It is because of the system of free private enterprise that was connected with our system of free democracy, that was devised and written by our wise forefathers, and inscribed in the Constitution of the United States, the greatest document ever penned by the hand and brain of civilized man outside of the Holy Bible. We followed it as honest citizens and built this great Nation, and now it is being destroyed and torn down.

We passed a price-control bill, and then all we heard on the floor of the Senate and in other places was "There is a great big corporation making too much money." They are talking about controlling profits instead of controlling prices. With the graduated income-tax law on the books, I do not think anyone needs to be excited about any big corporation or anyone else making too much money and keeping it because they have to make a great deal in order to keep a very small amount. We have that safeguard to level things off and bring the excess profits back. If we think it is not severe enough, we can make it more severe.

If you want to control prices, adopt a 100-percent excess-profits tax. You are not going to find very many merchants or manufacturers or businessmen in this country who are going out to rob their customers for the purpose of putting the loot into the United States Treasury through the system of profits taxes.

Mr. President, that is not what this crowd wants. They do not want to control prices. They want to ruin our free economy. If they wanted to control prices, we have a lawmaking body here which could act. Why do we fool around and set up an administrative power to regulate every turn of the wheel—to regulate everything that is done—when all we have to do is to pass a law making it a felony for anybody to buy or sell any product in the United States above the price at which it was sold on a certain date? Then we would have price control. They do not want that. That is not what the New Deal dynasty wants. If they wanted it, they could get it more quickly because they control Congress. They could put prices on everything—set the price of wages, set the price of salaries, set the prices of all commodities—everything—as of December 6, 1941, or any other date—June 30, 1946, for instance. If you want to hold prices, all you have to do is pass a law. We already have the enforcement officers all over the country, in every little district and every State—State police, county police, city police, Federal police.

As I have said, that is not what they want. They want to destroy our Government. If they want to control prices, it is easy to do that. I recommended it back on January 8, 1942. What I said is right in the RECORD. I said then, "If you want to control prices, all you have to do is to pass a tax law, or amend the present tax law. You already have the Internal Revenue Bureau set up, with employees. They would not have to handle any more papers, just different figures on the papers. Pass a tax law. Let everybody go back and pick the schedule he wants to choose, or the one Congress chooses for him, before the national emergency." Then say, "You will be permitted to make this wage, this salary, this profit, to the extent you made it before we got into the war. But of everything above that your Government is going to take 100 percent."

Mr. President, that would have been easy. But there were some who did not want that passed. Although our late President, Mr. Roosevelt, said, "There are not going to be any war millionaires," we have them. He said there would not be any war millionaires, but did Congress back him up with a tax law that would prevent that? No. Many war profiteers got their profits, and got them in big gobs. Some of them did and some of them did not. It depended on whether they belonged to the New Deal or not.

That is what OPA has already done to us. We are in a bad fix. We have a deficit. The way it adds up, it is more than $276,000,000,000. But we have so many bureaus and departments and corporations, and so many hip pockets in old Uncle Sam's pants, that I do not believe there is any way for anyone to know how much we owe or how much we have, or anything else. There are some figures, but I do not believe they reflect the true situation. You see a big expenditure of money, and even though you are a United States Senator and try your very best, you cannot find out where the money is coming from, or what department is spending it. We are just throwing it around loosely and wildly, not only in the United States, but all over the world.

As I have said before, there are two positive ways of destroying an individual economically or of destroying a business concern or of destroying a government. One of those ways is to destroy productive capacity. The other is to squander or destroy or get rid of the accumulated savings.

When you have done that you will put anybody out of business, and OPA and the New Deal have been practicing and doing both ever since March 4, 1933. They have the people of this Nation now in debt in an amount of approximately $300,000,000,000. It will not be paid off in 100 years, if it is ever paid off.

I started to read what the meat packers have to say. This is a report which came to me, and I will read it for what it is worth. I have confidence in it. I read as follows:

> The meat packers in the Western States hope the Senate will reject the conference report on the OPA extension bill and send it back for the purpose of decontrolling livestock and meat.
> We feel the proposed Price Control Act restoring price controls to livestock and meat August 20 will only create confusion and chaos in the industry.
> For the next month the industry will have to be on a day-to-day basis as far as purchases of livestock and sales of meat are concerned. This would particularly apply to many meat products which it takes time to process and in which time is required either in aging, freezing, pickling, or other methods before meat is used in the final product.
> With such a sword hanging over the head of the industry who would buy with prospects of reduced price at time of sale. This present bill would not allow the industry to operate on a practical basis but only to operate in a confused manner which would deny the industry the opportunity that it now has to get its operations back on a law of supply-and-demand basis.
> Also livestock will be rushed to market to beat the August 20 deadline causing disruption of orderly marketing and many immaturely finished livestock will be sent to market. This will tend to create a shortage in future months when they normally would have been marketed.
> Meat markets over the whole western country are becoming filled with meat, prices are dropping and if this industry was allowed to go ahead without such a threat over it, we are sure there would never be any reason for placing controls back on livestock and meat in the future.
> We hope the Senate will reject the conference report and insist that the controls be taken off livestock and meat and the industry given an opportunity to demonstrate that it can furnish meat to the people at reasonable prices. If the bill goes through in the form recommended by the conference committee, we consider it a victory for the black market.
> It is time for all of us to realize and admit that the actual cost of living is on the black-market prices and not the fictitious ceiling

prices posted by the OPA. The Senate vote on the floor of 49 to 26 in favor of decontrolling of livestock and meat indicated that the Senate took this into consideration.

Legitimate packers of the nine Western States cannot operate another year under the intolerable and restricted conditions imposed upon the industry by the offices of the OPA and Economic Stabilization.

Is the Senate willing to assume the responsibility of the return of the black market with all of its evils and under the OPA cause practically every retail market in the country to be again converted into a speak-easy?

WESTERN STATES MEAT PACKERS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
By E. F. FORBES, President.

That is the opinion of the people engaged in the meat industry, and that is the opinion of people in other industries. Certain items were picked out here, and, because those interested in those items were able to convince a sufficient number of Senators that certain products should receive special consideration in the OPA measure, amendments were added to the measure and those products and commodities received what we thought was special consideration, until we found out that the Senate does not have much voice in these conference committees. It appears that some consideration should be given to the judgment of Senators as expressed by the votes on the floor of the Senate. But while some commodities were excluded from price control, why should some be excluded and others be included in the measure? If we are going to have price control, why should we decontrol prices on certain commodities when the producers or processors or manufacturers of those commodities are of sufficient size and financial strength to employ representatives to come here and explain their case? If it is right to exclude meat and butter, why not exclude everything else? Why should we include anything?

It is the old socialistic system under which everyone thinks it is right to take everything away from the other fellow, providing he does not have anything of that particular commodity, but when it comes to taking his stuff away, he says, "Leave me alone." So we have been adopting amendments which were favorable to some people and not favorable to others. There is no doubt that there was justification for those amendments. But I claim there was justification for amendments covering other articles in which people who could not come here were interested and in which the citizens of this great land who sent telegrams to me, who are "the voice of the country," are interested. There were thousands of them. The telegrams I have received from them would cover two or three of the Senators' desks. There was no concerted drive for these telegrams. The telegrams were not inspired. They came from people who received a little hope when some of us got up on the floor of the Senate in an effort to kill OPA. They wanted to let us know that they appreciated our efforts. They wanted to get back to the American form of government. That is what is wanted by every American citizen who understands the true situation. I place myself squarely on the side of the rank and file of the common people. That is where I belong. That is where I was raised, that is where I still am, and that is where I shall remain. I am perfectly satisfied to take the judgment of the rank and file of the American citizens, providing the American citizens are in possession of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

But I am satisfied that wise people can be misled, and I am satisfied that some of our best citizens have been misled by the propaganda that has been put out by OPA at Government expense, and by the bureaucrats in Washington and in other places. They swarm all over the Nation. They are to be found at every cross road, in every city and village, telling the people what to do.

Mr. President, I say it is time to call a halt, and I am trying to call the halt. We may not be successful in doing so. This measure may be crammed down the throats of the American people. I am not criticizing any Senator who takes a part in cramming it down by voting for it, because he has a right to vote for it. He has a right to do anything he wants to do respecting legislation in the Senate. He may be right and I may be wrong. But I tell you I am not wrong. [Laughter.] I am just as right as can be on this subject. I was not schooled in politics, but I was schooled in American industry and in American life. I came up the hard way on the ladder of success, and I came a long way up until I reached the Senate. No one thought when I was a little boy on the ranch that I would become a Member of this great body of United States Senators. Some of my enemies claim it was a mistake. But I am here. That is the American system, and every other little boy on a ranch or in a small town or in any other place in the United States should have the same opportunity. I want to keep the road clear all the way up so that he does not have to obtain the approval of a bureaucrat in Washington before he can have a chance to go to school or start a grocery store or run for office or do anything else. I want to keep the ladder of success open from the bottom rung clear up to the top. It can be done. It has been done. I am not holding myself up as any example. I am merely telling the Senate that every American citizen has that right.

But if we trade our American citizenship for a mess of New Deal communistic pottage our children and our children's children will never have that opportunity. It will be taken from them. They will be reduced to wearing shackles by a government which has gone down into the depths of socialism, communism, and totalitarianism. Our Nation stands today as the greatest Nation on the face of the earth, but we are at the crossroads. There are some people—I shall not mention anyone in the House or even in the United States Senate, but some people in Washington, public officials, have the idea that they are the masters instead of the servants of the people. They tell the people what to do. I am pleading the case of the common man. Most of these demagogs get up and holler and say that the taxes are all going to be paid by the rich people and by the big corporations. They are not going to fool very many persons who know the truth, because it is the man on the street, the man who labors, who pays the taxes. We have had some taste of it in the withholding tax, but I say that the taxes come from the hidden places. Mr. President, when you buy a pair of shoes, when you buy a railroad ticket, when you use the telephone, when you ride the street car, when you buy a pair of stockings or a suit of clothes or a necktie, whatever you buy, the taxes are hidden in that purchase, and it is the American people, 140,000,000 of them, who have to pay the national debt of $275,000,000,000 or $300,000,000,000 if it is to be paid.

Let the demagogs cry and shout from the housetops that the large corporations are going to be taxed and pay this great debt. The large corporations are merely the tax gatherers for the American Government. An examination of the income-tax reports of any corporation in America will disclose that back in the old days after the taxes were paid, and the taxes were very small, the net income remaining for distribution as dividends was a certain amount. As the taxes were raised the corporation simply added them on to the price of the commodities they were selling and after they collected the increased taxes from the purchasers they paid them to the Treasury. After they had collected those hidden taxes from the purchaser they paid them to the United States Treasury, and they still had practically the same amount of profit left with which to pay dividends. That certainly did not do any harm. I am not pleading the cause of the great corporations, but I believe in being honest. The records of the large corporations show that they have many stockholders who have only small amounts invested in the stock. The stock is not all owned by the great moneyed interests, as the demagogs would have us believe. There are more than 65,000,000 life-insurance policies in effect in America, with an average face value of $1,500. Women are beneficiaries of more than 80 percent of these, and these women realize as never before that the assets behind these policies should not be subject to political trends or whims. They are, in the last analysis, the stockholders who make up the "bonded interests" the demagogs scorn.

It is the individual, the citizens of the country who have to pay. When public officials and politicians, especially when they advance so far as to be bureaucrats, get into trouble, it is the citizens who have to pay. When they get us into war it is the individual citizen who goes in and fights the war. The common people are the ones who clean up the mess after the politicians get us into trouble, and they are the ones who have to clean up the mess in connection with the public debt of $275,000,000,000 or $300,000,000,000. We are still making appropriations by the billions of dollars. We are passing out to Great Britain $3,750,000,000.

When it comes to the soldier boys we have to give them autographed pictures of the Treasury. We are "out" of money when it comes to paying the boys. Only today the President signed the third deficiency bill, which included $75,000,000 for OPA's operation in the current fiscal year, and there is another $1,000,000,000 involved in this measure. Some Senators say they are against subsidies, but will vote for the joint resolution. It contains $1,000,000,000 worth of subsidies. It is time to call a halt. It is time to quit this business. It is time to get back to our American system of free enterprise and our American system of government. After appropriating billions of dollars during the war, when we ease off and get out of the war we do not seem to be appropriating very much, although we are appropriating seven or eight times as much as we appropriated before we get into the war. It is a matter of relativity. Those large sums are added to the public debt, and the public debt is drawing interest.

I have received a letter containing an analysis of this measure. It comes from the Women Investors Research Institute, of Washington. Cathrine Curtis is the president. I do not know a thing about this organization. I do not vouch for the authenticity of the information contained in this letter, or the facts stated. I read it simply as it is. I have an inbred confidence in almost everything the women do. I have great respect for the women. This letter is from a women's organization. If it had not been for the women, there would not be very many of us here.

This is an analysis of the conference report reinstating OPA. It is dated dated July 22.

Acceptance by Congress of the price control bill recommended by the report of the Senate and House OPA conferees apparently means reinstatement of all original price control powers with additional more far-reaching controls over the production of agriculture and industry than existed under the price-control system that was ended June 30 by Presidential veto.

In my opinion, the OPA measure which we have before us is one of the most vicious pieces of legislation that has ever been introduced in the Congress. The New Deal propaganda outfit has sent word over the country that the joint resolution does not involve very much control; that so far as they are concerned it is a rather bad measure; and that the President will sign it very reluctantly. They are doing so to fool the people, because this is the strongest control measure that we have ever had before us. It will permit the OPA to do anything under the shining sun that it wishes to do to destroy America; and there will be three bureaucrats to do it instead of one. They can do three times as much damage as they have done.

In my opinion this is the worst measure that has ever been put before us. Whenever the American people are told that Mr. Truman is going to sign this measure very reluctantly, indicating that it does not grant as much power as he would like to have, someone is trying to fool the people. Unless Mr. Truman wishes to save this Nation and save the Democratic Party he will break his leg to get a pen and get to the desk to sign it before it can be jerked away from him. He will be anxious to sign it. He vetoed a previous measure and got into trouble. It seemed for a time that he might never get another one. So if he ever gets anything on his desk again that has the semblance of an OPA measure, let no one worry about his not signing it—unless he suddenly reaches the conclusion that by vetoing it he can save the Nation and save the Democratic Party. He may do so. I hope he does. I have never been able correctly to forecast what President Truman may do. But he has that power. We cannot kill the measure. I am afraid that too many Senators will vote for it. I do not know, but I am afraid that we shall pass it. Then it will be up to God and Mr. Truman to decide whether or not it shall be killed. It is my prediction that if the President listens to the advice which he receives from the OPA and all those connected with it, and from the Communists, Reds, and Socialists who are supporting it, he will sign it in a hurry. They would not care if the measure contained nothing except the name OPA and an appropriation of a billion dollars. They would not care if the Holy Bible were printed in it. We can print anything in it, good or bad. They do not care. They will operate this agency to suit themselves. They have proved that. Senators need not rely exclusively upon my word for that. I have heard Senator after Senator make the same statement about maladministration and disregard for the will of Congress on the part of the OPA officials, who operate the agency to suit themselves. It has been operated in that way before.

How do we expect to bring about a change or to purify the OPA simply by providing for the appointment of a board? We do not know who will constitute the Board. The Board does not even have to be approved by the United States Senate. Of course, theoretically it does; but if we pass the joint resolution and then adjourn and go home, leaving it on the President's desk, he can sign it and make his appointments. We cannot confirm his appointees until Congress reassembles. That may not be for a long time. I hope so. The longer we can stay in recess the better off the country will be. We have been in session entirely too long, passing the wrong kind of laws, according to my opinion. I think they are wrong. They may not be, but that is what I think; and I have a right to think that way, and to express my opinion. However, I do not criticize any Senator for the way he votes. There is nothing to prevent a Senator from voting for bad legislation if he wishes to do so.

I was reading from the report of the Women Investors Research Institute. The report continues:

Congressional approval of this report also evidently will mean that all future business, industrial and agricultural programs must be planned on the assumption that price control will be a permanent part of our economy.

There you are:

Analysis of advance copies of this report indicates that if accepted without change by Congress—

It has not yet been changed; under the Senate rule, we cannot amend it—it will grant greater control powers to the "economic planners" than they were able to obtain under the original OPA bill enacted in 1942.

New board all powerful.

If the conferees' proposals are accepted by Congress without change, they will:

1. Give complete control over our economy to three individuals (the Decontrol Board) who will be unknown to Congress when it votes on this legislation.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I gladly yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. The Senator knows, does he not, that in the consideration of the conference report—which is only a conference report, and not an act of either House—we have no opportunity to amend it or change it in any way? We must either vote it up or down.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that it is my understanding that this view is correct, because even if the Senate should give unanimous consent to amending the conference report it would have no effect unless the House should agree also as conference reports are handled on the basis of what is practically a joint rule of the two Houses.

Mr. MORSE. Is it not true from the parliamentary standpoint that the only way we can change this report is to recommit it to the conference?

Mr. O'DANIEL. From a practical standpoint I believe that is correct. But as to the conference report before us, gazing at us in all its ugly viciousness, we must take it as it is or turn it down. I do not see much use in my standing here talking about it any longer. I simply wish to make my position clear. I am against it.

I continue reading from the report:

2. Compel business, industry, and agriculture to operate on 30-day schedules.

A man operating a manufacturing or processing plant, planning crops, or manufacturing anything, could not figure ahead more than 30 days. On the basis of present prices, with a Decontrol Board and a Recontrol Board, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] so aptly termed it, one would not wish to stock up with merchandise from which to manufacture the finished product at a certain price, if he thought the price would be lowered about the time his storage house was filled. If a manufacturer cannot fill his storage house he cannot process or manufacture the things which his customers urgently need, because he does not have the stock. So what is he to do? Everything is thrown into confusion. Time is required to manufacture finished products. It takes time to harvest a crop of wheat, haul it to the country elevator, grade it, load it into cars, and ship it to terminal markets. It must go through all the processes of grading, storage, and resale to the flour millers or the corn processors. Millions of bushels of grain must be owned by someone, and it is usually owned by those who do the processing to make the flour which is shipped to bakers all over the country.

Some of the bakers want to keep their flour in storage, because it improves with age if it is stored for a certain length of time. The corn-product manufacturers want to manufacture corn syrup and hominy and breakfast foods and all the other corn-product foods we need, and it takes more than 30 days to do that.

Who in the world is going to lay in a supply of raw material when he does not know what he will be able to charge for the finished products? So the producers simply will have to go on a hand-to-mouth basis.

Mr. President, I read further from the report:

3. Make it extremely difficult—if not impossible—for medium and small business to obtain current production costs;

4. Give OPA legal authority to control both profits and production; and

5. Cause continuing shortages in both durable and consumer goods that can only result in perpetuating price control within the specific provisions of this legislation.

The compromise bill does include the specific Senate decontrols of livestock, dairy products, petroleum, tobacco, poultry, eggs, grain, cottonseed, and soybeans, and their byproducts.

BROAD RECONTROL POWERS

It grants the Decontrol Board power to put any or all of these products again under control by August 20—or at any time thereafter—when, in the Board's opinion—

1. The price of any of these products has risen unreasonably above former ceilings;

2. The product in question is in "short supply"; or

3. The "public interest will be best served" by reinstating controls.

Those decisions will be up to the three bureaucrats in the decontrol or recontrol board. They will have to decide whether the public interest will best be served. They might guess wrong, and they might manipulate prices in such a way as to let their friends get in on the grain and cotton exchanges and make a lot of money.

I continue to read from the report:

Therefore, under the compromise provisions, it is evident that these presently unknown three individuals will have sole power to determine whether products decontrolled by Congress will be bought and sold in free or OPA-controlled markets.

The bill also provides that—on the application of any industry advisory committee—the Board may decontrol any product when it finds that the supply of that product approximates demand. However, it also stipulates that the Board may—any time after 30 days following the issuance of such decontrol order—reinstate controls whenever it finds that any of the three rules cited above apply.

It would seem evident that this presently unknown three-individual Board—having sole power to determine from month to month what products are and are not under control—will have practically complete control over our economy.

Since agriculture, business, and industry can know only from month to month what products will be subject to price control, it is difficult to see how such activities can be planned on other than a month-to-month basis.

BRAKE ON MASS PRODUCTION

OPA officials—in testimony before both Senate and House Banking and Currency Committees—have repeatedly stated that the only way present shortages and price control can be ended is by a steady flow of products from our mass-production machine operating in high gear.

Business and industry may be able to operate on a month-to-month basis—but it is extremely doubtful that any mass production schedules can be planned on such a basis. It is highly improbable that our great mass production machine will be able to run in better than "low gear" under such restrictions and uncertainties.

This can only result in low production, continued shortage, and price control becoming permanent under section 1A (c) (2) of the bill, which provides for the transfer—to established departments or agencies of the Government—price control over "commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations * * * in such critically short supply as to necessitate in his (the President's) judgment, the continuance of the powers granted by this act beyond June 30, 1947."

Just how agriculture can plan crops and production on a month-to-month basis is a problem beyond the solution of all except perhaps the present crop of OPA "book farmers."

There is only one apparent restriction placed on the powers of the presently unknown Decontrol Board to control, decontrol, and recontrol any or all products. That is when supply approximates demand, they must decontrol.

It generally is conceded that the supply of any given product can be estimated with some degree of accuracy. But estimating demand for that product is a complex problem—at least under OPA interpretation of "demand."

WHAT IS "DEMAND"?

If the question of demand is limited to domestic demand and prices are normal, then it is possible to estimate that domestic demand with some accuracy, according to OPA Administrator Porter in testifying before the Senate committee May 10.

But, according to Mr. Porter's testimony, if prices are kept below normal, as he admitted has been the OPA policy, it is impossible then to estimate domestic demand against the subnormal price.

By eliminating the word "domestic" from the supply-demand formula, as this bill does, then a number of additional factors must be considered before demand can be estimated, according to Mr. Porter's testimony.

These factors include actual foreign demand (demand by foreign countries in the course of normal trade), demand created by commitments—known and unknown, made and to be made—of the administration to feed and rehabilitate the entire world, plus the demand that will result from foreign purchases due to the administration's foreign loan policy just approved by Congress.

Considering that the Decontrol Board will have power to recontrol any decontrolled product whenever it is in short supply or in the public interest—it should be remembered the present acute feed shortage in the poultry industry is the result of the administration's foreign food and feed policy, which is being carried forward in the public interest.

LEGALIZES PROFIT AND PRODUCTION CONTROLS

Two of the principal charges placed against OPA during Senate and House committee hearings—charges that were thoroughly substantiated by a mass of unrefuted evidence—were:

1. That the OPA pricing system and policies prevented manufacturers from obtaining production costs and, thereby, retarded production, created and increased shortages in durable and consumer goods; and

2. Prevented old line, well known producers from obtaining production costs—thereby preventing production—while new manufacturers were given production costs plus profits, enabling them to cash in on the present abnormal consumer demand, while making the consumer pay high prices for inferior products.

It was this mass of evidence that caused Congress to adopt the so-called Taft and Wherry amendments in the bill vetoed by the President. These amendments were intended by Congress to protect and assure continuance of the profit system in this country, and, when selected by the President as the chief target of his veto message, placed him and those supporting that portion of his message on record as being opposed to the profit system in this country.

It is apparent—under the conferees' compromise proposal of the revision of the Barkley-Porter substitute for the Taft amendment—that OPA will be permitted to continue its old pricing policies and practices.

Subsection (e) of section 11 of the bill will permit OPA to continue its preferential treatment of new manufacturers against old producers. That is, it can continue the practice—expressly forbidden by Congress in past amendments to OPA law—of banishing the well-known brand products of old producers from the market in favor of the unknown products of the new manufacturer—with added expense to the consumer.

Subsection (f) of section 11—even as amended by the conferees—will permit OPA to evade granting needed price increases for many, many months. It is known that Mr. Porter has said of this section, "I don't care what they do with the first few lines, as long as they don't change the language after 'nothing herein' in the second line of the section."

OPA officials admit that this language will make it almost impossible for a manufacturer to obtain any price increase, as long as they—OPA—can show that a price equals the industry-wide cost average, plus what they consider a reasonable profit. As one OPA official put it—"If industry doesn't like what we do to them under this section, they can take us to court—the Emergency Court of Appeals."

It also has been repeatedly charged that OPA has usurped power, under old OPA law, to control profits and production. OPA officials originally denied this charge, but—as unrefuted evidence piled up in committee hearings to support it—OPA officials then took the position that Congress knew of these policies and had taken no legislative action to forbid them. The record of OPA debate in both Houses of Congress now denies such powers to OPA.

However, under subsection (c) of section 11, the power for OPA to control both profits and production will be written into law, if enacted into law without change in the language of the bill. OPA officials admit that the language "including reasonable adjustments (in prices) for conditions resulting from abnormal value of production" can be interpreted as granting power to adjust prices downward whenever increased production tends to increase profits. Under such an interpretation, there would be no incentive for any manufacturer to increase his production.

As to the compromise revision of the so-called Wherry amendment, it is doubtful if this will prove helpful to wholesalers and retailers. The original OPA extension bill vetoed by the President directed no cost-absorption discount cutbacks after January 1, 1946. The Senate bill changed this to June 29 and the compromise sets the date back to March 31. It is not surprising that OPA officials raised no objection to this compromise since the majority of cost-absorption discount cutbacks were ordered by OPA prior to March 31.

RESPONSIBILITY RESTS WITH HOUSE

In view of the foregoing, there seems little doubt that if the conferees' proposed report is accepted without change by Congress, our economy can be placed under tighter controls by September 1 than it was on June 30, and the road back to a free economy, free markets, and the profit system in this country will be more difficult than at any time since December 8, 1941.

Under the rules for considering conferees' reports, the House has the only opportunity to amend such a report. Senate rules compel that body either to accept or reject a report in its entirety. House rules permit that body to amend portions of a report by instructing its conferees to return to the conference and insist on certain changes.

This means that Senators are in the position of being compelled to vote either for or against reinstatement of price controls. But House Members can vote for reinstatement of price controls while insisting on changes in the report that will assure speedy termination of such controls.

It, therefore, seems evident that in this instance entire responsibility for determining whether this country will function on either a free or a planned economy rests entirely on the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, that report comes from the Women Investors Research Institute, of Washington, and it condemns this OPA measure as being worse than any OPA law we have ever had before, and it says it will place all of the business of the country on a month-to-month basis. The report might just as well have said that it will place all American business on a hand-to-mouth basis, because it will simply stymie and stall business and will obstruct, curtail, and stop production, and thereby create more shortages.

In fact, the situation will be just like the situation described in the letter which I read a few minutes ago which came from a man in Amarillo, Tex., who had a lumber yard and some lots, and who went to great lengths to try to build some houses at $750 less than the Government ceiling; but the Government bureaucrats put so many rocks in his way that he could not operate, and the 311 houses which he was ready to build could not be built. At every turn in buying the lumber, or selling the lots, or financing the building of the houses, the OPA and other Government bureaus and departments were impeding his progress.

If we had had the OPA years ago, when this country was growing, we never would have had any Henry Ford. If Henry Ford had wanted to build an automobile, back in the days when he started, and if we then had had an OPA, the OPA would have said, "Oh, no; you can't be engaged in the business of building a wheel for an automobile, and at the same time be in the business of building a steering gear and a windshield and a cushion for the seat and a door and a crankshaft. You cannot do all those things. You must organize separate companies to build every part of your automobile"—in the same way that the OPA required the man whose letter I read to organize separate companies to produce every part that was needed for the 311 houses he wanted to build at Amarillo, Tex.

Mr. President, Henry Ford never would have gotten started in building automobiles if he had had to battle with the OPA. I wish to point out that we have a great many potential Henry Fords, in the little boys all over the United States. Very likely some of them will develop into men who can be just as big or bigger than Henry Ford or any other great man of this country. They are just waiting for their opportunity. If we tie them down with restrictions so that they will not have an opportunity, they will not develop, and we shall never hear about them, because they will not be able to get going, simply because the OPA will not let them start.

But, Mr. President, in this connection, Mr. Henry Ford, or even Mr. Henry Kaiser, could do little without the wonderful achievements of the petroleum industry. Petroleum is the lifeblood of our economy. And the OPA boys certainly did not overlook their opportunity for a little bloodletting. In this connection, I wish to read a telegram received from Mr. Walter G. Hallanan, of Pittsburgh, Pa.:

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 20, 1946.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

May I respectfully urge that another year of OPA meddling and confusion will mean not only another year of black markets and chaos in production, but it means the destruction of our American economy. Why not terminate these wartime emergency controls now before it is too late? Regardless of all the OPA communistic propaganda the people are sick and tired of it and want to be freed from it once and for all. With regard to the petroleum industry the compromise bill makes that industry half slave and half free with a Damocletian sword in the hands of another bureaucratic board that will be chosen of the Bowles-Porter type hanging over it. I hope you will not approve this so-called compromise to perpetuate OPA as an economic monstrosity. If Congress approves this compromise it thereby gives approval to policies which OPA has arbitrarily imposed upon the country and which it will expect to continue.

WALTER G. HALLANAN,
President, Plymouth Oil Co.

So the Nation is on the down grade, and it will continue to be on the down grade so long as the bureaucrats in Washington stymie and throttle the brain power and ability of 140,000,000 American citizens. That is what happens under the OPA. We do not know what boy will have an idea today or what little girl will have an idea tomorrow that will revolutionize some phase of our social or industrial life. The OPA will throttle our people. Our progress depends upon freedom. The OPA is now denying our people that freedom. First we were told that we must let our freedom be taken away by the OPA because we were faced with a national emergency and we were going to get into a war. Then, later, we were told that the OPA was necessary because we were in the war. Now we are told that we must have the OPA because we won the war. Just think of it, Mr. President. We have whipped all our foreign enemies and put them entirely out of business. But still some of the bureaucrats want to control the American people and to dictate what the American people shall do. They want to write it all down into a law. The Lord only knows who wrote this bill, but here it is; it is before us now. Here is our majority leader, who has just returned to the Chamber. I have been hoping he would come back.

Mr. BARKLEY. What did the Senator say about me?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I did not say a bad thing about the distinguished Senator—not one word. I cannot say a bad word about the Senator. I was just praying all the time that the Senator from Kentucky would change his mind about the OPA, but I am afraid I cannot persuade him to change it. I have been killing time until the Senator from Kentucky returned to the Chamber, and I am ready to stop now if the Senator from Kentucky will decide to kill the OPA.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can appreciate the Senator's willingness to have the OPA killed, and I shall be glad to have him stop.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Well, I hope something will happen to kill the OPA, because I am heartbroken about the present situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am anxious to have a vote taken.

Mr. O'DANIEL. There did not seem to be anyone who was willing to say anything very much about the OPA, so I got up to say a few words about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the country is not under any delusion about the Senator's attitude toward the OPA.

Mr. O'DANIEL. If I have accomplished that much, that is something gained. I am sure I want to cooperate with the Senator, and so I shall yield the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator very much.

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I feel that it is necessary, even at this late hour, to take 5 or 10 minutes to comment upon an extraneous subject, because I wish the RECORD to show that on the day following that on which the remarks to which I shall refer were made by various of my able colleagues, I responded to the comments they made. I address myself to the statements which were made yesterday by the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and to comments which were made by other Senators, to wit, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], relative to a report of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, known as the Subcommittee on Wartime Health and Education, of which I have had the honor to be chairman.

That committee, Mr. President, was authorized by a resolution of the Senate in 1943. The resolution authorized, in substance, a study of the health conditions of the people of this country, particularly because of disclosures with respect to selective service that some 40 percent of the selectees were rejected because of mental and physical disability.

The committee consisted of five Senators appointed by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and the junior Senator from Florida was named as chairman. That subcommittee was continued by resolution of the Senate in February 1945 and was further extended and additional funds were provided for its use in March of this year.

It was also provided in March of this year, when the last appropriation was made, that the committee's services should be terminated on the 1st of August—all by agreement of the chairman and the members of the committee.

The committee has held many hearings and has published five reports. The first report was published in the second session of the Seventy-eighth Congress and dealt with the general subject of the margins of living of the people and the desirability of improving their economic status in order that their health conditions might also be improved.

The second report was issued in the second session of the Seventy-eighth Congress, particularly in September 1944, dealing with the subject of juvenile delinquency.

The third report was issued in January 1945 and dealt with general health conditions throughout the country.

Mr. President, I do not like to suggest anything which might be related to self-praise of the members of the committee, but I will mention the fact that the American Medical Journal commented editorially upon the report in the following language:

> The report, in general, would seem to be a more scientific, carefully considered document than has heretofore been available as a result of previous hearings in this field. The committee emphasizes that its findings are preliminary and that the subcommittee expects to continue its work with further hearings and with studies of the various aspects of the health problem, such as rural, industrial, and school health, the health needs of veterans, medical research, and medical education.

Editorials from the Washington Post, the Washington Evening Star, the New York Times, the Philadelphia Record, the Tampa Morning Tribune, and other newspapers commented favorably on the report.

General Kirk, the Surgeon General of the United States Army, was gracious enough to write some words of commendation on the report. The report dealt, as I have said, with the general health conditions of the people, but it made no suggestion as to what method should be employed by the Government in meeting the challenge of poor health conditions.

The subcommittee proceeded to make a study of whether or not the private fee for medical service system prevailing in the country, and the volunteer health systems which had been growing in strength and usefulness throughout the United States, were adequately meeting the challenge of the poor health conditions of the people. About the latter part of March that report had been prepared by the subcommittee staff, and was sent to the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, I have referred to the committee as the committee, although it was a subcommittee. However, it was authorized by a Senate resolution. It was generally known in the press and in common parlance as the Senate Committee on Wartime Health and Education.

As I say, Mr. President, the staff of the subcommittee prepared the report and a draft of it was submitted to the members of the subcommittee. The desire was that the study which had been made by the staff should be made available to the full Committee on Education and Labor, to the Senate and to the public for such value as it might have. Let the Senate remember, that this committee was an investigating committee, and that it had a staff for the purpose of ascertaining data which might be of some public interest.

As I have already said, the proposed report was submitted to the members of the subcommittee. That was in March of this year. Immediately a response was received from the chairman of the full committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], indicating his complete agreement with the proposed findings of the subcommittee. A report in complete conformity with the findings of the staff was also submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and, of course, I as chairman of the subcommittee had already given the report my complete approval. That makes three members of the subcommittee who gave immediately their unqualified approval to the publication of the proposed report.

I then received the following letter from the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR,
March 11, 1946.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Health and Education,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CLAUDE: I must confess that I haven't had time to study the proposed Interim Report from the Subcommittee on Health and Education on Health Insurance. Neither did I have an opportunity to hear the testimony which was presented at the hearings.

However, I am in hearty sympathy with an effort to provide medical care for those who cannot afford it and even though I may later find cause to disagree with some of the recommendations which we as a committee make, I, nevertheless, feel that the publication of this report will serve to call public attention to the dire needs of our low income people.

Therefore, reserving the right to disagree with any detailed portions of this report, I am in favor of submitting it to the full Committee on Education and Labor.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE D. AIKEN.

On page 9705 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 23, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] said as follows:

> I wish to reiterate the statement which I made a few minutes ago, that this report was submitted to me. I was given an opportunity by the clerk of the committee to read it. I cannot say that I had time to study it thoroughly. But it did have my approval; that is, in placing it before the full committee, or before the Senate, and if I inadvertently and prematurely passed judgment on a compulsory health bill, that is purely my own fault and not the fault of anyone else.

Mr. President, I received also the following letter from the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] dated March 19, 1946:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
March 19, 1946.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: A short time ago I received a subcommittee report entitled "Health Insurance" and I have been trying to get an opportunity to make a real study of it ever since. With the other matters pending it has not been possible to make the study of it I wanted to before commenting on the report. However, I note it seems to approve a compulsory insurance plan. I do not want to approve the report until I have had time to give it further study.

In the event you feel that the report must be made immediately to the Committee on Education and Labor, I would like to have it appear in the record that I dissent from some of the conclusions of the report.

I will try to get at the detailed study immediately and advise you further of the specific points I have in mind.

Always cordially yours,

H. ALEXANDER SMITH.

I received also on March 18, 1946, the following letter from the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1946.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CLAUDE: I regret the delay in reading the interim report of the Subcommittee on Health and Education to the Committee on Education and Labor covering the subject of health insurance.

While there are a good many statements in the report with which I agree, there are others, including the recommendation of national health insurance, with which I emphatically disagree. Unfortunately I cannot at the present moment prepare a minority report. I should be obliged, therefore, if you would simply note at the end of the report that I dissent from some of the findings and conclusions reached in the report.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT A. TAFT.

Mr. President, there were three members of the committee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], who had not responded and had not had an opportunity to complete their study of the report or of the subject. The staff was desirous of making the report public and submitting it to the full committee in view of the fact that an agreement had been reached that the subcommittee would go out of existence on the 1st of August. So in view of the fact that only a few days remained between the last week end of July and the 1st of August, we were desirous of getting the report before the full committee and before the public before the 1st of August. Therefore I personally approached the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and it was agreed between them and me, as chairman of the subcommittee, that at the end of the report there should be added the following language:

Senators HILL, TUNNELL, and MORSE, because of the pressure of other business, have not completed their study of the subject of this report.

I am sure those Senators will agree that that was the understanding.

Also at the end of the report appears the following:

Senators TAFT and SMITH dissent from some of the findings and conclusions of the report.

The report was signed by CLAUDE PEPPER, ELBERT D. THOMAS, JAMES A. MURRAY, and GEORGE D. AIKEN.

Mr. President, while only four members gave their assent to the publication and filing of the report, it has been shown that only four of the nine had given their assent in that way, and it was shown that two of the Senators said that they dissented from some of the conclusions contained in the report, and it was shown that three of the Senators said they had not had time to complete their study of the subject. So it certainly was not intended to lead anybody into the conclusion that all members of the subcommittee had agreed to everything that was contained in the report.

Mr. President, there was some slight inaccuracy in the press release which, although prepared by the staff, I take full responsibility for. In one paragraph it was said that:

The report represents the substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945 and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, but neither are specifically endorsed.

As a matter of fact, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill is not mentioned in so many words in the report. All the report purports to do is to make a study of the various voluntary insurance plans in existence in the country, to conclude that they serve only by complete coverage in all about 3 percent of the people, that only about 25 percent of the people, if I remember the figures correctly, have any kind of insurance, and that we can never provide adequate medical care for the people unless we have a plan supported by taxation levied by the Federal Government and perhaps in addition to that, Federal appropriations to supplement it. But the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill is not specifically mentioned in the report and it was not intended to commit anybody to any particular piece of legislation but to emphasize the necessity of there being some kind of compulsory insurance system for the country.

Inasmuch as there was only one member on the other side of the aisle, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] who had given his assent to making public for whatever value they had, the facts the committee report discloses, perhaps it was not proper to say "bipartisan," when only one member of the minority party had given his assent. If that is an inaccuracy it certainly is an unintentional one.

In no sense of the word am I minimizing the value of the comment made by the able Senator from Missouri or any other Senator. All the other reports were prepared by the staff under my direction as chairman. They were from time to time discussed on occasion, individually, with some members, perhaps not all, and finally the report was submitted before it was ever filed with the full committee to every member of the committee and the assent of the members of the committee was given before the report was filed with the full committee.

As I said, that was done with the previous four reports since 1943, as well as with report No. 5, which happens to have been the occasion of the comment.

So, Mr. President, while there may be some technical delinquencies—there no doubt are—on the part of the chairman, not in any sense attributable to other members of the committee, the chairman certainly thought that the Senators had given their assent either to say that the report might be published, though they had not had an opportunity to finish their study, but the report might be filed and data the staff had gathered after many months of tedious labor might be made available to the full committee and to the public for such value as they had.

If any Senator's position has in any way been incorrectly stated, it certainly was unintentional, and I am exceedingly sorry that inadvertently such a thing may have occurred.

I wish to say further that the Senator from Missouri was most gracious in calling my office yesterday to advise me that he expected to make some criticism on the issuance of the report. I happened to be unavoidably detained from the Senate at the time he made his remarks, or I should have been here to hear them. The Senator has been most courteous. He has indicated that there was not anything personal in what he said, and I have tried to give this explanation of what occurred.

Mr. President, I regretted to take the time of the Senate at this late hour to make this explanation, but since the able Senator from Missouri had made his remarks yesterday, and I had had no previous opportunity, I thought that, in justice to myself, if not to the committee, I was duty bound to make some statement on the matter.

Mr. DONNELL rose.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish now to address myself to the conference report for a few minutes, but I gladly yield to the Senator from Missouri if he desires that I do so.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding. I shall endeavor to make my remarks as brief as possible.

First, I wish to say that we have here a situation in which a subcommittee, without even a majority of the committee approving its report, gives out to the press, through its chairman, a release, which was referred to yesterday.

In the first place, the able Senator from Florida has referred to the subcommittee as being known as a committee. Yet Senate Resolution 74, by which authorization is granted for the creation of the subcommittee, distinctly terms it a subcommittee:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor or a subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman of the Education and Labor Committee be authorized and directed to make investigation.

And so forth. It then provides that the committee—not the subcommittee, but the committee—shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

Mr. President, as I see it, what has happened is that, without the subcommittee itself authorizing the issuance of a report, there has been given out to the press of the country a very important report, the importance of which I shall emphasize in a very few minutes, and the report which goes out to the public actually contains the names of less than a majority of the members of the subcommittee as signers of the report.

The distinguished Senator from Florida referred to the fact that there might be a slight error, and I do not in any sense undertake to impugn either the sincerity or the motives of the Senator, but when he terms what appears on the release given out on the twenty-second of this month as a "slight error", I must most respectfully disagree with him.

In the first place, Mr. President, the study which is referred to in the release as being given out is stated to be "issued today." As a matter of fact, the study to which reference was made was issued back in March of this year, and bore at that time in heavy black type the words "Subcommittee Print."

Under a date in July 1946—I think only a day or so ago—the document was reprinted under a July date, the only changes I find in it being certain headings above certain tabular or pictorial illustration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure the able Senator does not mean that it was given to the press for publication on that date.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not know, Mr. President.

Mr. PEPPER. What the Senator means is that the chairman appeared at the hearings on S. 1606 and stated that that had been prepared and would be published if agreed to by the subcommittee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the point to which I address myself will become more evident in a moment. I quoted from the release of July 22 in which the document which now comes forth under date of July 1946, is referred to as having been "issued today" by the Senate subcommittee. That document is stated to represent, quoting from the release, "the substantial approval of President Truman's health message of November 1945 and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, but neither are specifically endorsed."

Then the release states:

These Senators are members of the full Committee on Education and Labor, before which hearings on S. 1606, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill started on April 2 and have continued until July of this year.

So, Mr. President, this document, which was originally prepared and dated March 1946, described upon its exterior as a "subcommittee print," now appears under date of July 1946 according to the release, as representing the substantial approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill by a bipartisan group of Senators, though not one word of testimony in the 35 hearings that have been held, involving hundreds and hundreds of pages, has yet been taken with respect to the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I stated a moment ago that this was a study which had been conducted by the committee during 2 or 3 or 4 years, at least 3 years, a study of the subject whether the voluntary health plans in existence were adequate to meet the needs of the people. It concluded that the voluntary plans were not adequate, and that there would have to be some kind of compulsory plan. It was prepared and ready for publication before the hearings were begun on S. 1606.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the point I make is that here in July there comes both a document, consisting of 30 pages, presented to the public with a release entitled "Senator Pepper Reports on Study of Health Insurance," stating that the report represents the substantial approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill. Yet, Mr. President, the document had been prepared and printed before one word of testimony had been taken with respect to the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator said a while ago—and I am sure he would not want to omit it now—that the press release immediately added, after the words he has quoted, "but neither are specifically endorsed."

Mr. DONNELL. I read that, I will say to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. In fact, neither was mentioned. The Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill was not mentioned in the report, was it?

Mr. DONNELL. I do not know whether it was or not. But the point I make, Mr. President, is that the release goes out as representing the substantial approval of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health bill, although the testimony on that bill had not been taken when the release itself was prepared.

But, Mr. President, there is a more fundamental question involved than this. As I see it, the statute to which I have referred authorized the creation of this subcommittee by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor. And, secondly, the report of the subcommittee should have been given to the Committee on Education and Labor, rather than to the press at large. The Committee on Education and Labor would have had the right then to determine whether it should be given out. Without authority emanating from the Committee on Education and Labor, as I see it, the subcommittee had no right to give out publicity.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. What is the status of this report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not familiar with the report.

Mr. OVERTON. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri can tell us. What is the status of this report?

Mr. DONNELL. Of which report?

Mr. OVERTON. The report which the Senator from Missouri and the junior Senator from Florida are discussing so extensively?

Mr. DONNELL. The status of it, so far as I know, Mr. President, is that the report has been printed without authority even from the subcommittee, for there are only four out of nine members of the subcommittee who have authorized their signatures to it. Three members of the subcommittee, because of pressure of other business, have not completed their study of the subject matter of the report, and two of them have dissented from some of the findings of the report.

Mr. OVERTON. Has it been reported to the Senate?

Mr. DONNELL. It has not.

Mr. OVERTON. Why this discussion now? We are now waiting to act upon a very important matter which concerns the whole Nation, and Senators are now discussing a matter which is not even before the Senate. With all due respect to my colleagues I wish we could proceed with the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that under the rules of the Senate Senators can talk about anything they wish.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand that. I merely am expressing a pious hope.

Mr. PEPPER. I know that is the wish of the whole Senate, and perhaps I should not at all have responded, but at the same time I felt that inasmuch as the Senator from Missouri had mentioned the matter yesterday, I should offer a word of explanation, and if the Senator might feel disposed that we might carry the matter forward to a future date for further discussion, I am sure we will oblige the Senate very much by addressing ourselves directly to the conference report.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to follow that course of procedure, except to utter a very few concluding words, although I should like at a later date, probably tomorrow, to emphasize certain thoughts that are in my mind.

I want to say, Mr. President, that the issuance of this release has gone from one end to the other of the United States. It has been treated as outstanding, highly important news. In the New York Times of Monday of this week it appears as one of the 12 items of world news summarized on the first page of the newspaper, and on a subsequent page, namely page 18, there appears a very extensive signed article entitled "Senate Body Backs Health Insurance. Educational Subcommittee Endorses a Federal System Based on Contributions."

I shall not impose further on the time of the Senate at this moment save only to say that I have upon my desk newspapers from St. Louis, the Chicago Tribune, the Herald-Tribune, also of New York City, with an extended article entitled "Federal Health Bill Backed By Subcommittee." Yet, Mr. President, the fact is, as has been noted here upon the RECORD, that, in the first place, the subcommittee itself has not met, has not authorized the issuance of the release, and has not authorized the issuance of the report. The report should have been made to the committee itself, and not to the public, and not even a majority of the subcommittee had signed the alleged report.

I may say, Mr. President, that the press understands that the report does apply to the Wagner-Murray-Dingell health bill.

I shall not impose further upon the time of the Senate tonight, but I think a very great principle is involved, namely, whether or not a subcommittee should report to the committee itself, whether the subcommittee could act without a majority of its own members concurring, and whether or not the subcommittee should itself, or rather through one member of the subcommittee, the chairman of the subcommittee, undertake to give out officially to the public letters which can easily be misapprehended, and have been very much misapprehended, as they are, by the press.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Missouri very much.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I just want to comment briefly upon the conference report.

We all know that it would set up a 3-man Decontrol Board, appointed by the President, with the approval of the Senate. The Board could remove the controls on any commodity. Price ceilings on meats, dairy products, grains, cottonseed, and soybeans would be restored on August 21, but would remain ceiling free until that day. No controls would be placed on poultry, eggs, petroleum, or tobacco, unless the Board recontrols them after August 21. Subject to the Decontrol Board the OPA could set price ceilings on industrial goods. The OPA would be required to set ceilings for manufacturers on an industry-wide basis for each product to reflect the average 1940 price plus cost increases to manufacturers. It would have to give wholesalers and retail distributors price ceilings reflecting their current cost of purchases plus their average percentage discount or mark-up in effect March 31, 1946. Subsidies largely designed to hold down food prices are trimmed from $2,000,000,000 to about $1,000,000,000.

There were being paid in subsidies about a billion and a half dollars a year to keep the cost of living down about 8 percent. So if we take away that billion and a half dollars in subsidies I estimate that the cost of living will go up in some proportion comparable to that. So inevitably there will be a price rise due to the removal of subsidies.

Mr. President, a laudable provision of this bill is the fact that it retains rent controls as they were on the 30th day of June, and I commend those who have made the report possible in that respect.

The consumer will pay for this measure out of his own pay envelope and savings. The cost to the consumer of the decontrol of poultry, eggs, fish, and petroleum would be $1,200,000,000, of tobacco $250,000,000, of the elimination of low-cost clothing $800,000,000. The effect of the guaranty to wholesalers and retail distributors and the guaranty of 1940 average prices plus cost increases to manufacturers is incalcuable.

I do not know, nor has the OPA any information to indicate the effect of restoration of controls on August 21, on meats, dairy products, grains, cottonseed and soy beans. But the OPA estimates that, if controls on these products were removed on August 21 by the Decontrol Board, the consumers of the United States would have to pay out of their pockets a total of at least $4,300,000,000. A recent report of the Department of Commerce to the President on increases in prices since July 1 states that the daily spot market prices for 28 commodities have risen 25 percent since the lapse of OPA. These prices increased despite the fact that many selfish groups lobbying against price control have attempted to hold the line by informal agreements. In other words, price changes might have gone higher if this had not been done.

It should also be noted that wholesale prices rose 35 percent since VJ-day, whereas, in the 11 months after World War I, wholesale prices rose only 22 percent.

A part of the recent rise in prices is attributable to the elimination of subsidies. However, livestock prices have increased to such an extent as to reflect more than a removal of the subsidy.

Mr. President, who is going to be affected by what has been done? The profits of all corporations in 1945 before taxes were $20,000,000,000 as compared to $5,300,000,000 in 1936–39. The profits after taxes in 1945 were about $9,800,000,000 as compared with about $4,000,000,000 in 1936–39. It is estimated that 1946 earnings after taxes for many corporations, particularly in the retail field, will be above 1945 profits.

Who are the people who have to worry and struggle because of the lapse of OPA? First the wives of wage earners. Average weekly earnings of workers in manufacturing industries in April 1946 were about $42 in comparison with about $47.50 in March 1945. So it will be seen, Mr. President, there was an average weekly reduction of $5.50 in March 1946 as related to March 1945 against the worker.

In the same period consumers' food prices rose as much as 3 percent, and all items which are a part of their cost of living rose about 2 percent.

Mr. President, what is going to be the effect of these price increases on the 1,700,000 persons receiving various types of old-age insurance from the Federal Government ranging from an average of about $23 to $81 a month? What is going to happen to the 2,100,000 aged persons receiving an average of about $31.50 for old-age assistance per month? What is going to happen to the 310,000 families with children getting aid for them at about $54 a month.

And, lest we forget the veterans, Mr. President, how are they going to exist, the 926,000 veterans going to school under the GI bill of rights, who are getting $65 a month without dependents and $80 a month with dependents? And what is going to happen to our 2,000,000 heroes of all our wars who have undergone some horrible disablement in the fight for freedom and democracy, who are getting an average of $45.50 a month?

In addition there are millions of school teachers, college professors, clergymen, and great masses of millions of white-collar workers who also are going to have the cost of living increased without any increase in their annual compensation.

How are all these millions going to live under the proposed legalizing of inflation which would be brought about by the conference report? In 1945, 47 percent of our families had total incomes of less than $40 a week, and had only 20 percent of the total liquid assets of the country. Families with annual incomes of less than $1,000 a year had only $20, on the average, in liquid assets.

A very large percentage of the population of this country—I am speaking of families, not individuals—live on less than $1,000 a year. Those families, according to a survey which has been made, have savings of less than $20. How are they going to weather the inflation storm? Those having incomes between $1,000 and $2,000 per family have $230 in average savings. Actually more than 50 percent of those with yearly income of less than $1,000 were unable to save anything in 1945. Twenty percent of those having incomes between $1,000 and $2,000 failed to save in 1945.

So, Mr. President, when we are speaking of profits to some, we must remember that we are dealing also with the livelihood of many milions of the people of this country who happen to be poor.

That leads me to say, in summary of the effect of this measure, that the measure was intended to increase the profits of a portion of our population. No one wants any producer, manufacturer, or processor to furnish his goods or services to the public without fair compensation.

But, Mr. President, we are going through a period of reconversion. We are just getting out of the aftermath of the war, and upon the tableland of peace. That is a peculiar condition, and not a normal condition. Therefore we cannot afford to strike down all the wartime controls applicable to wartime conditions until we have more nearly and completely approximated peacetime conditions, under which we do not need wartime controls.

Mr. President, the effort here has been precipitate, in my opinion. The effort on the part of the administration to remove wartime price controls was precipitate with the end of the war. It was a grievous mistake, and I am sure the Government realized that it was a grievous mistake, in view of what has happened, because when the disastrous results of a precipitate effort to remove controls appeared to the Government it almost frantically tried to restore those controls. But I must say that the Government has not had all the help which the Government and the people might have expected from the Congress of the United States.

We knew that price control was going to expire on the 30th of June, because the law so provided. We could have started months ago to thrash out our differences with respect to the price-control bill, but we let the time drag along until we almost reached the date of expiration of the law. Then congressional disagreement could not be resolved without the price-control program going out of effect entirely. Even though we tried to bring about some kind of reenactment of the program, it is now the 24th day of July, and price control went out of existence on the 30th of June, and we have left the American people to be the victims of this abnormal condition, and to be tyrannized by a few of our citizens who would take advantage of the people for profit, even almost to the point of extortion. So while we have debated and tried to reconcile our differences the American people have been robbed of any kind of price control with respect to commodities, services, or rents. As every housewife knows better than any statistician can tell her, prices have gone up to a very great extent, in relation to nearly all the essential items which are identified with the cost of living throughout the land.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The distinguished Senator from Florida will admit, I am sure, that the country would not have been without controls from the 30th of June to the 24th of July, including controls over rentals and other commodities, if the President had not vetoed the former bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in law school I took a very interesting course on the subject of proximity of causation. I do not know of any subject which is more delicate and interesting than speculating as to who is the proximate and efficient cause of the country not having price control—whether it was the Congress, which passed an insufferable law or whether it was the President, who would not give his approval to a bad law. That is a subject of almost metaphysical, if not legal, speculation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely desire to express a pious hope that we will not, at this stage of the legislative procedure, indulge in speculative debate over who killed Cock Robin, and whether he is thoroughly dead, since we are now trying to use a pulmotor to revive him.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct. However, Cock Robin should have the right to say whether the adequacy of the pulmotor has been established or not. Unfortunately, that is what I am afraid we are not able to demonstrate here.

In my opinion the President was absolutely correct in vetoing the last bill that was sent to him, because it was better to have no control at all, and let the people do their own policing, than to have legalized inflation when the Government has the responsibility to police, but cannot effectively discharge that obligation. So in my opinion, the President not only correctly, but courageously, vetoed the last bill that went to him.

I commend the efforts of the able Senator from Kentucky, our distinguished leader, and all those who cooperated with him in trying to secure price control for this country. I believe that every poll which has been taken indicates that the people of the country favor price control. I respect those who have a different opinion and different information; but every poll I have seen indicates that the people of the country—and by the people I mean exactly what we intimate when we say the "peepul"—the people of America, the men, women, and children who constitute the masses of America's millions, and especially the housewives, who, with limited budgets, have the responsibility of feeding, clothing, and sheltering families, favor price control. So I commend the efforts of those who have tried to preserve price control. I think they have not only tried to do social, political, and economic justice, but they have been serving the rich as well as the poor in the efforts which they have made.

But now we are faced with another measure; and however commendable may be the efforts of those who brought it forth, I have grave doubts as to whether this measure is better than the bill which the President vetoed. I say that because, for all practical purposes, I am afraid it decontrols permanently, as it does until August 21, price controls on the essential items of the family diet—meat, and meat products, dairy products, and other items which constitute the essentials of the family diet. I realize that the conference report provides that the Decontrol Board may put those prices back into effect after the 21st of August; but we are legislating here as a Congress, and I think the essential responsibility is the responsibility of the Congress to determine whether or not we are to have price control.

We are not giving the OPA authority to put these controls back. The authority goes to a Decontrol Board. We do not know what the personnel of that Board will be. While we have laid down general policies, in the third paragraph of the standards which are set out to govern the Decontrol Board we have allowed an absolutely untrammeled authority in the Board to determine whether or not it is in the public interest to put the controls back. So we are practically saying that we take them off and then leave it up to the Board to put them back if it thinks they should be put back after August 21.

What will be the situation on the 21st of August? What is it now? I realize the application of the old saw that while figures do not lie, sometimes liars figure. I realize also that there are statistical differences among statisticians. Yet, Mr. President, I do not believe that we could convince the housewives of America that there has not been a very substantial and burdensome increase in the family cost of living because of OPA going out at midnight on the 30th of June. That has occurred in the face of the prospect that any day the Congress may restore price control. None of us imagined when we debated this question that it would be the 24th of July before we would finally be ready to vote upon the conference report. In spite of all the haste and effort which has been exerted on the part of our leadership and our colleagues in this body and in the House, it is now 24 days—nearly a month—since the country was suddenly deprived of price control.

Not only that, Mr. President, but we give to the country the punishment and we deprive the people of the country of the protection of price controls for substantially another month; for today is the 24th of July, and controls cannot in any case go back into effect on these essential food items until the 21st of August, which lacks 3 days of being another month. That means that for practically 2 months the people will have been deprived of price controls on the things which today are essential to their diet.

I do not believe that will be in the public interest. I do not believe it will be to the permanent, long-range advantage of anyone. I should have preferred very much to see a clear-cut issue made in the Senate on the question whether we would continue price control as it was on June 30 and have effective price enforcement or whether we would have no control at all. I think I have been consistent in taking that position, because, as Senators will recall, when we had this subject up the first time, when the bill was passed, 17 of us voted favorably on the amendment which I had the honor to offer, which would have provided, as a substitute for the then pending bill, a simple resolution continuing OPA as it then was.

Later on, after the Banking and Currency Committee reported the joint resolution which is the basis of the pending measure, the present conference report, and when it was under consideration on the floor of the Senate, again there were 23 of us who, on an amendment bearing my name, voted for a substitute to continue price control as it was on the 30th of June. I should much prefer to see a clear-cut issue made in the Senate on the question, "Do you want effective price control or do you not want any control at all," and let the Senate vote on that issue. I believe it would have been more in accord with the right course and more to the benefit of the people of the Nation.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to say that I am entirely in accord with the statement the Senator from Florida has just made. If I could have had my way, the issue before the Senate would have been whether we wanted any price-control bill or no price-control bill. The measure we have received from the conference committee is neither fish nor fowl, and, in my opinion, it will do more to befuddle the Nation and keep down production than anything else we might do.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I must say that I am in accord with what the able Senator from New Jersey has said.

Prices are already out of line, according to various estimates, anywhere from 25 percent on the general level to 35 percent on wholesale prices. Imagine how difficult it would be, if we were to adopt the pending conference report and it were to be put into effect tomorrow, for the OPA or the Decontrol Board or any other Government agency to put prices back to where they were on the 30th of June. But how much more difficult it will be to do that after waiting until the 21st of August. Where will prices be then? What will the situation be then? How difficult will it be then for an administrative agency to try to pick up the broken pieces of OPA and put them into a pattern that will make sense of any consequence?

So, Mr. President, to do anything effective at all, it would have seemed desirable for the conferees to have brought from the conference a report which would have provided that OPA be put back into effect immediately—at least, as to the essential food products.

For instance, let us consider grain. I assume that grain will be affected because it is in the same category with other essential food products which I have mentioned, namely, livestock and dairy products. When we consider grain and livestock and dairy products most of the essential food items are included.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that what we have done is to give further license and encouragement to the further disarrangement of the economy of the country, and, not only that, but by the pending measure itself we provide that that situation shall continue for another month.

What are the people to do? In the first place, what will the manufacturers do in respect to making commitments for the purchase of commodities with which to manufacture finished products? They must buy raw materials and manufacture them into finished products, and they must hire labor and must make contracts. If they make contracts on the present market for delivery after the 21st of August, when prices may be pushed back, how are they to know how to buy or how to price the things they will manufacture for sale?

Furthermore, what are the laboring people going to do? We know that a little while ago contracts of a year's duration were made by labor engaged in the essential industries, such as railroads, mining, the electrical industry, the meatpacking industry, the petroleum industry, and several other of the major industries. We had relative stability in the labor situation because of the yearlong contracts which had been executed, the first peacetime contracts which had been executed between management and labor. What will labor do? We already have a general increase of 25 percent and a wholesale commodity increase of 35 percent, at least, and we have a prospect of a further increase in the cost of living. So what are these working people to do about their contracts? Are they going to give notice to their employers that conditions have been changed by act of Congress and that they have a right to obtain redress of their wrongs by a renegotiation of their contracts? If they are going to do that, what will management say? Suppose management should say, "No; you are bound by your contract. You cannot change this wage scale." Suppose labor then says, "Yes, but we thought we had a stable economy. The Government said it would hold the line, except for slight bulges and bends. We had a right to believe that Congress would back up the Government and would hold the line except for those bulges and bends. But the Congress has gone back on both the Government and the people." If management then says, "Nevertheless, we are not going to renegotiate these contracts," what redress will labor have? Will labor be able to go into court and secure a change in the wage scale? Of course not. If no relief or redress is permitted them, it is natural that they will think of strikes. Strikes will bring about a recurrence of the situation which existed a few months ago, a situation which almost struck a death blow to the reconversion program.

So, Mr. President, what shall we have obtained? We have disarranged the Nation's economy and we have burdened a great many of our people. What have we gained, except to profit a minority of the people at the expense of the great majority. As I have said, of course we know that some people were experiencing hardship under the former situation. But I submit that it would have been better to go on under that situation and to have let those few people suffer some hardships, rather than to disrupt and disarrange the entire American economy, and indirectly, perhaps, the economy of the whole world, because what this measure will do in my opinion, to the price of wheat and the price of other grains and commodities will affect the loans we have made, and indirectly will affect the economies of the countries to which we have already given financial assistance, and I believe it will take food out of the mouths of the starving millions of people of the world, whom we have been generously trying to help.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposed step would be a mistake in regard to public policy. If only this one measure would do that, the step might be forgivable. But I say these few words because I find that the step now proposed is symbolic and symptomatic of a point of view which is becoming dominant in the Congress; and there lies the danger to the future. I believe that when we turn our eyes from the greatest good to the greatest number, and begin to legislate for the few, at the expense of the many, that is a danger to the security and strength of the Republic. I think that is what we are doing; and I think what we have done in connection with this OPA bill is paralleled in many other instances by the action or omissions of this Congress of which we have the honor to be Members.

Mr. President, that point of view will inevitably lead to economic disaster for the Nation, and it may disastrously affect the economies of other countries of the world. That tendency is essentially isolationist in character; and if it is allowed to continue it will inevitably lead us back to the situation which existed after the First World War, when the symbol of this country was isolationism and a lack of concern for the situation of the rest of the world. The history of these matters tells us, Mr. President, that the sequence of events in such circumstances is, first, inflation, then deflation, then depression, and then war. Believe me, Mr. President, for a long time men have been saying that history repeats itself.

As we look down the calendar of this Congress and find bills which have been passed and the bills which have not been passed, it will be seen that my statement can be confirmed. The housing bill is still in the sister body. The health legislation has never come out of the committee. The full employment bill was so loaded down with amendments that it was not meaningful. The minimum wage bill is doomed to defeat in this session of the Congress. Yesterday it was decided not to allow terminal leave benefits in cash to millions of veterans of the country, and, generally speaking, many persons feel that during the reconversion program we have put more emphasis on the money interests involved than on the humanitarian interests which are related to this period and this problem.

So, Mr. President, we are in a dilemma as to what to do about this particular measure. We do not know whether we should vote for the conference report or not. We all want to contribute as much as we can to price control, and yet we have grievous doubts as to whether we can effectively have price control by voting for the conference report. One of the things it will do is that it will act as an opiate and cause the people to believe, perhaps, that their Government will protect them, but only to be disillusioned later when they find that the Government does not have the power to protect them. On the other hand, if they knew in the beginning that their Government had abandoned them, they would be able to rely on self-help. I have sufficient confidence in the character of the American people to believe that in any crisis they can defend themselves just as did the Minute Men of another period in the Nation's history against another tyranny. I fear we would do the people an injustice by leading them to believe that their Government can protect them.

Mr. President, I have petitions signed by 7,500 persons. The petitions happened to be brought to me one day. I believe those who signed them reside in the city of St. Louis.

We have seen throughout the country a spreading protest on the part of the American people who are going on a buyers' strike. I should like to see the consumers of this country put a sign over certain places or certain industries reading, "This place is unfair to the consumer." We know that labor sometimes puts signs in front of industries or stores or places of one kind or another, or puts pickets in front of them who carry signs reading "Unfair to labor." I do not know but what it would be a good thing for consumers to follow that pattern and in some proper way, and in cases where it was justified, to express public indignation by putting up an appropriate sign reading, "This dealer or manufacturer is unfair to the public of the United States."

It seems now, Mr. President, that, after all, this Congress having abandoned them to the profiteers, we shall have to rely on the people to protect themselves. For that reason, with extreme reluctance and grievous misgivings as to whether it is the right thing to do, although I have tried to do what I could in my own individual way to preserve effective price control, I am disposed to vote against the conference report. I think that if we are to cause the people the irritation, vexations, and annoyances of governmental control, we should give them governmental control which will mean something. If we are not going to do that, I think the people should know it in the beginning so that they may plan accordingly. I realize that the poor people will be in more desperate straits in protecting themselves than will be people who are in other classes. The poor people cannot go on a buyers' strike very long without hearing children cry and seeing them receive an inadequate diet.

They know, Mr. President, that they cannot weather an inflationary storm with less than $20. Two out of five of the families of this country have less than $40 saved up, and millions have no savings at all. I do not know what such persons will do. But I believe that we are going to hear from them in the future. I believe that we will receive many protests from them. They feel that we have not courageously stood up against the profiteer. They believe that we have come too readily to the rescue of a few and overburdened the many through the program which we are about to present to the President and to the country.

Mr. President, I believe it is the opinion of the majority of the people that they either want price control which will be meaningful, or none whatever, so that they may plan accordingly. I would rather let the people know that they must rely on their own strength than to lead them to believe that they may rely on the Government and later realize that the Government is not in position to protect them. Once the people know that they can rely only upon their own strength, it will be seen that they will rise to another glorious victory over that which challenges their security. We shall hear from the people, Mr. President. Count upon it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, with the exception of sugar, there was no shortage of any commodity following World War I, and there was no black market at that time with the exception of a black market in sugar. I believe that the greatest cause of the shortages and black markets is lack of production. Certainly the OPA has been the cause of a shortage of production in the case of many commodities.

I believe it was in the fall of 1942 that the President served notice on the Congress that unless the Congress fixed a price on farm products he would do so himself. The Congress passed a bill containing a formula for the fixing of farm prices. The President signed it. Mr. Henderson was made head of the OPA. Mr. Byrnes was appointed as some kind of adviser. Prices were fixed by fiat. The arrogance of such an act should be sufficient to repudiate the OPA.

The OPA was called before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and asked upon what basis and upon what authority they had changed the formula for fixing farm prices which had been established by the Congress and approved by the President. They replied that they did so by higher authority than that of Congress, or the law of the land. They were asked by what authority they had done what they did, and they replied that their authority was an Executive order of the President. They were asked by what authority the President of the United States could issue an Executive order overriding the Congress. The committee was told that the President had issued the order. I asked, "May we have a copy of the Attorney General's approval?" I was told, "I do not know whether the Attorney General wrote an opinion. He does not have to. All he needs to do is to approve or disapprove."

Mr. President, I have had experience with the OPA. In the textile industry 10,000,000 bales of cotton were lying unused more than a year ago. The OPA had raised wages of textile workers, and I am not here to say that they should not have done so. But the OPA refused to permit the textile manufacturer to add the increased wages to the price of the product, and therefore he could not afford to buy cotton. For more than a year the textile industry was idle and practically no textiles were manufactured.

In the dairy industry the OPA fixed a ceiling on butter and not on cream. It drove cream into the black markets and closed creameries. The result was that butter cost 90 cents a pound on the black market.

Last winter, rye in the markets of America was worth $2.07 a bushel. The OPA issued an order on January 1 to the effect that the ceiling on rye should be $1.35 a bushel. Under that arrangement, speculators in the United States could buy rye for $1.35, pay to Canada the import duty, and receive $2.81 a bushel. That ceiling remained in effect until a short time ago when the OPA ceased to operate.

I have here the market report for rye in Winnipeg on July 19, which shows the price to be $2.81, and the cash price for rye at Minneapolis on that date was $2.51, showing that the speculators who could buy rye here for $1.35 reaped a profit by shipping it to Canada, and, after paying the import duty, selling it for $2.81, where it stayed in the Canadian market.

Mr. President, these are merely a few items, and because of the lateness of the hour I shall not go into more than one or two details. Perhaps it has been explained to the Senate how the juggling of the price of corn prevents cattle raisers feeding corn to their beef. It is possible to put 500 pounds on a steer by feeding it corn, but there was a shortage because of lack of feed. There was a shortage not only of butter, but of meat, because there was no corn to feed to the animals.

To mention just one other instance, the OPA put a ceiling on muskrat skins. I do not know what the ceiling was. There was none on mink. That resulted in another black market. The black marketeers would go to a man raising muskrats—and it is a large industry—and if he had some muskrat hides the producer might refuse to sell for more than the ceiling. But the black marketeers, if the man had a mink, perhaps worth $20, in order to get the muskrat hides away from the competitor might bid on the mink fur, or the skin of the mink, from $150 to $200 or $300 in order to get the muskrat hides.

These are a few examples of what was going on under the administration of OPA. I called these things to their attention time and time again, but was met only with arrogance.

I could take up the time of the Senate for another hour giving any number of instances of this kind. In my opinion, the only excuse for voting for the conference report at all would be to keep rents from being used for profiteering purposes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few moments. The fundamental difference between those who are in favor of the report and those opposed is that those who are in favor of it feel that there should be an OPA of some kind, some price control, during the next 6 months to 9 months. Those who are opposed to the report are really those who believe there should be no price control. I certainly recognize the strength of that position, and the fairness of it. But it seems to me that all the talk about the conference report and the details of the joint resolution is really by the way.

We are up against the same proposition we have faced before. If anyone thinks there should be some control other than rent control—which perhaps might be provided for by special resolution—it seems to me there could be no choice except to vote for the report. If one thinks there should be no control, except in the case of rents, he should oppose the report.

I feel very strongly that the criticism made of the conference report and the conferees is wholly and completely unjustified. In the first place, it was said that I had said that the joint resolution gave Mr. Porter more power than he had ever had before. I never said anything of the kind. In fact, every provision, every section of the bill, is a restriction on the power of the Office of Price Administration. There is no section which does not reduce the power which that office enjoyed until the 30th of June. That is true of decontrol.

Without the elaborate provisions, the OPA would have complete power to control or decontrol, control one day and decontrol the next, and recontrol the following day, if they wished to do so. All the decontrol provisions are restrictions on the power of OPA.

Nor is the bill in any sense, as was alleged, a surrender to the President. Looking at his veto message, we find that he makes a number of stipulations as to what the bill should contain. He says in his veto message:

> The bill should authorize the continuance of stabilization subsidies on a scale sufficient to avoid serious increases in food prices during the next 6 months and to permit the orderly termination of subsidies during the first half of 1947. In my judgment, an authorization for the expenditure of a billion and a quarter dollars during the year as a whole is the minimum necessary for these purposes.

We are giving him the same billion dollars which we gave in the first bill, which he criticized.

He says further in his message:

> The bill should lay down a congressional policy with respect to the termination of price controls and subsidies. I approve the provisions of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of the proposed new section 1A of the Price Control Act contained in section 3 of the present bill. These provisions call for the orderly removal of all price controls and subsidies during the course of the coming year, with the exception only of those commodities which, on or before April 1, 1947, the President finds to be still in critically short supply and for which he asks and secures authority for continued control to be administered by some established department or agency of the Government other than the Office of Price Administration.
> I would not oppose the formulation of standards for the decontrol of particular commodities, as provided in H. R. 6042, or the establishment of an independent Price Decontrol Board to review these applications—provided that the standards were modified to make sure that, during the next crucial 6 months, ceilings do not have to be lifted where it is clear that serious price rises would result.

Yet we require in this report that ceilings must be lifted in the case of most of the commodities if supply is equal to demand, regardless of what happens to price. In other words, we turn down the President's formula for decontrol.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator mean by that statement to say that the price of the commodity is not to be taken into consideration in determining the relationship between supply and demand?

Mr. TAFT. Correct. It says the Decontrol Board shall not decontrol any agricultural commodities unless, first, they are in short supply, no matter what may happen to the price. Then it must be found, in addition to that, that the price has already increased substantially. Then it must also be found that the commodity is one which can be effectively controlled, as obviously meat cannot be.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from Ohio will allow one further question, does he think it is possible to establish any relativity between supply and demand without any price criteria?

Mr. TAFT. I think it is a proper thing to be introduced into the formula, but the formula in the bill which was passed by the Senate, the formula in the joint resolution, and the formula in the conference report, all say that there shall be decontrol if supply equals demand, regardless of the price. The President wanted to have the right to say, "I think the price may go up even though supply equals demand, and therefore I want control." We do not give him that power. He said further:

I ask the Congress also, if it gives me responsibility for carrying out a measure of the kind I am urging, to permit me to do this through a unified or effectively coordinated administrative organization and not to handicap me by legislating an unsound split of authority.

In other words, he objects to the independent powers given to the Secretary of Agriculture, and we have added to that the additional separate power of a price decontrol board, with very considerable discretion taken away from the Price Administrator.

The President says further:

I would not object to a provision which expressly requires the adjustment of price ceilings wherever this is necessary and would be effective to increase the total production of needed goods.

We disregard entirely his formula, and state that there must be a formula regardless of whether production is needed or not. The formula is not quite so strong, but it is substantially the same formula.

So I think the charge that the conferees have yielded to the President is entirely and utterly unwarranted, and one which those who make it cannot sustain.

Mr. President, I wish to point out, further, that the conferees sat, I think, for 5 days. We met a situation in which four of the House conferees absolutely refused to agree to the permanent decontrol of anything. Those four conferees were appointed by the House. The House had the joint resolution back, and had an opportunity to instruct their conferees. The matter was considered in the House, and that was not done. Knowing who the conferees were, the House voted to them absolute power to take any position they desired to take, and they took the position that there should be no decontrol expressly and permanently provided in the joint resolution.

There was no way I could see to change that situation. I do not know how many votes we took, but at least a majority of the Senate conferees voted to insist upon decontrolling specific commodities, exactly as provided in the joint resolution as it passed the Senate.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator to say, and I understand the majority leader to say, that in their respective opinions this is the best compromise that could come out of the conference. I accept their statement. However, I want to get my mind clear on this point: The Senator from Ohio just stated that the House conferees absolutely refused to go along with any provision for decontrol of specific items on a permanent basis. Were they as adamant on the proposition of decontrol of specific items with the right of the Secretary of Agriculture to recontrol? Would they have gone along on that?

Mr. TAFT. I think they might have gone along with that, yes. The appointment of the members of the Decontrol Board, however, was more satisfactory to me than to give the power to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CORDON. The reason I make that inquiry, if the Senator will yield further, is that with reference to the items of livestock, and so forth, found in 8 (A), on page 4 of the report, the Congress knows that as to those items they are not in scarce supply. They are now in boom supply. All the hearings which have been held by all committees have given us that information and impression. As to grain and livestock, we have the Department of Agriculture itself on record as to the fact. In other words, as I view it there can be no dispute about that fact. The supply is available to fill the demand, and in some instances there is a greater supply than there is demand, which will continue, not for a month or so, but will be available for the full year for which it is proposed to extend price control. In view of the fact that there can be no question about the adequacy of that supply, how can we justify turning over to the Decontrol Board the responsibility of determining a fact, which we ourselves know, as the result of months of hearings, is a fact?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator makes a very good argument, an argument which was made by the Senator from Colorado and myself and the Senator from New Hampshire in the conference committee. I am not arguing with him. I stated earlier my views on the subject of supply, which are not unlike those stated by the Senator. I am only trying to answer briefly the charge that the conferees gave away something that they did not have to give away. My only desire is to point out that the House Members, four of them, refused to do anything in the way of specific decontrol. And I think Friday night, if I remember correctly, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] moved that the conferees agree to disagree.

Mr. TOBEY. I did.

Mr. TAFT. We attempted to report back a disagreement to both Houses, which was the only possible way to bring about a vote in the House. We were unable to obtain a majority in favor of any efforts to agree to disagree. So then we were faced with the problem of simply sitting there and having the conferees say, "The conferees on the part of the two Houses have reached a disagreement, and consequestly there is no OPA bill."

Personally I would rather have those who do not want a bill vote it down. I do not object if Senators vote it down. If that is the sentiment they entertain, they ought to vote it down. But I certainly do not desire to go to the country with the statement that the conferees had broken down in their efforts to do anything about OPA because the House and the Senate conferees could not agree. It seemed to me that when we reached that point, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] was entirely justified in offering the compromise which was offered and which I think was not an unreasonable compromise. I think before the conference committee got through with it they got it into such a complicated state that it is difficult to understand, but I think the basic idea of the compromise was a reasonable one. It had been contained in the various bills from the time we began to consider them, because if we go back to the first bill which was introduced and reported from the Banking and Currency Committee, the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] to decontrol meat and decontrol dairy products, which was adopted by the Banking and Currency Committee, provided expressly that they could be recontrolled.

On the Senate floor it was stated that it was at that time intended that they should be subject to recontrol. No one tried to change it on the Senate floor. It was in the former bill until it went to conference, and decontrols came out entirely. Then when the measure came back to the Senate, when we were discussing it here before, I do not think it was as clearly set forth in the new bill that there was to be recontrol. Certainly it was ambiguous. I read the section in the Senate at that time to the Senator from Kentucky, and said this on July 12:

The question I want to ask the Senator is whether he thinks that applies not only to the commodities which have been decontrolled by the Secretary, but also those which have been specifically decontrolled.

Mr. BARKLEY. That question arose, as the Senator from Ohio no doubt recalls in the committee while the Decontrol Board provision was under consideration, and also while the provision of the bill putting the authority and responsibility on the Secretary of Agriculture to recommend decontrol was being considered. My recollection is that it was the consensus of opinion of the members of the committee that that provision of the law would authorize the recontrol of articles taken out from under control, whether by the Administrator or by the Congress itself.

I read only part of the discussion—

Mr. TAFT. It occurs to me it is a point of great importance, and one that should be clearly settled.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a matter of great importance, because if there is any theory upon which we would assume that an article decontrolled by the Secretary of Agriculture could be recontrolled under conditions which might subsequently exist, the same reason for a recontrol with the written consent of the Decontrol Board, without which it cannot be done, ought to apply to any decontrolled article, regardless of the process by which it was decontrolled.

The Senator from Vermont then asked the same question.

Mr. AIKEN. Then the purpose of this section of the measure is this: If after certain agricultural commodities are decontrolled the price rises temporarily, and then settles back to a level perhaps a little higher than it was before the decontrol, under such conditions the Secretary of Agriculture would not have any power to restore controls over those commodities. However, if the price rises after decontrol and does not stop, but keeps right on rising and appears to be going to a dangerous height, then the Secretary would have the power to recommend that controls be replaced on such agricultural commodities, and the Administrator would be required to do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. But the Secretary of Agriculture would have to have the written consent of the Decontrol Board in any event.

We had that discussion. No one questioned it. I myself thought it was somewhat ambiguous, and that when we went into conference we at least would have to clarify it. But certainly no one in the Senate objected. No one rose on his feet and said, "It is outrageous that you should give the Board power to recontrol when we have given specific power to decontrol." When we came to compromise that was a very sound ground, it seemed to me, on which to make a compromise, and that was the basis of the compromise proposed by the Senator from Maryland. I may say this discussion related to the measure which went to conference, and which is now back in the Senate. It did not relate to the former bill.

Mr. CORDON. My question goes not to the power to recontrol by affirmative action upon the establishment of any given state of facts, such as too high a price, if it is based upon price alone, or scarcity, but to recontrol being authorized negatively by nonaction upon the part of the Decontrol Board, without any finding of fact. I wish to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio whether in his opinion, if this conference report were rejected and the matter were sent back to another conference by reason of insistence upon the Senate's amendments, that incongruity could be taken out of the measure. It would be rational legislation with that out; and it is senseless with it in.

Mr. TAFT. I do not agree with the Senator. I admit that it is awkward, but all I have to say is that the Board is directed to make that finding and consider the important commodities with respect to which decision should be made at the earliest possible moment. The Board is directed to take that question into consideration and decide it. If it acts in good faith, it makes no difference what happens on August 20, when it does not act, because I am quite satisfied that it must act on these commodities by August 20.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me with reference to the attitude of the House conferees, which he was discussing a moment ago?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House conferees were adamant with respect to decontrol. They took a separate vote after a long conference by themselves. They came back and reported that they would not accept decontrol. My recollection is that they did so more than once. They never yielded on that subject until the Senate conferees offered this compromise with respect to the Decontrol Board. I am certain that the House conferees never indicated any willingness to yield on the question of decontrols until this proposal had been made, which resulted in the provisions of the joint resolution as they now appear, not only giving the Decontrol Board authority, but directing it to consider the prior importance of decontrolled items, and to take action by the 20th of August.

Mr. TAFT. The compromise offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] simply provided that there would be a recontrol board which might recontrol any of the articles at any time. The House refused to accept that provision.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. They then introduced the idea of going backward and providing that action must be taken on these commodities within 15 or 20 days.

Mr. BARKLEY. Until the Senate conferees indicated a willingness to give the Decontrol Board the power to deal with the subject the House conferees indicated no intention, desire, or willingness to yield on the decontrolled items.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

I have only one further point to make. In effect charges have been made that members of the conference committee looked after their own interests and paid no attention to the interests of the Senate. That charge related to a number of members of the committee. It was suggested that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] took care of cotton, and therefore cared about nothing else. As a matter of fact, the situation with respect to cotton has been the same in all the bills. Cotton has never been controlled. All the joint resolution provides is that a commodity which has not heretofore been controlled shall not hereafter be controlled. Certainly this is no time to extend regulation to include controls which were never imposed during the war. That seemed to me to be a reasonable provision. The subject was never a matter of discussion in the committee, and so far as I know, that provision was never objected to by anyone.

In the second case it was suggested that the distinguished Senator from Maryland took care of his poultry and eggs. I can testify that the Senator from Maryland was always more interested in the decontrol of meat than he ever was in the decontrol of poultry and eggs. If I remember correctly, the suggestion regarding poultry and eggs came from the House members, who, in a way, sorted out the group of meat, dairy products, and grain, which must go together. They felt that poultry and eggs could be handled separately. The Senator from Maryland had nothing whatever to do with the proposal.

As to the decontrol of tobacco, that has always been agreed upon if there were to be any specific decontrols at all.

With respect to petroleum, the formula for recontrol is more difficult in the joint resolution as it now stands than it was in the measure as it passed the Senate. That subject was certainly of no particular interest to any member of the committee.

So far as my amendment is concerned, my amendment was insisted upon by a majority of the House conferees. They made it a condition of any action; and the changes which were made, which strengthened the amendment, were made at the suggestion and insistence of the House conferees, without suggestion from me. The House conferees took the curious position, from the standpoint of the Senate, of insisting that we must have a proper price formula, but that we must have no decontrol—a more or less logical position, perhaps, but opposite to that of the Senate in both respects, so it was not easy to agree. Both that amendment and the amendment formerly called the Wherry amendment were strengthened in the committee at the insistence of the House conferees, to which, of course, I was perfectly willing to yield. As a matter of fact, I believe the Senator from Kentucky was not unwilling to yield.

So, Mr. President, I believe that the charge that the conferees have in any way given away anything to the President, or given away anything to the House, or have tried to feather their own nests, is utterly and completely unsupportable.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to answer the distinguished Senator from Ohio briefly. Some of the things which I said this afternoon seem to have got under his hide. He is excitable. Let us get the record straight. The Senator from Ohio stated that I said that the majority leader took care of cotton. If the Senator will look at the record, he will find that I did not say that. I said that he took care of tobacco. Is not that correct?

Mr. TAFT. No; I heard the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator can look at the record.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment. I have the floor. I wish to answer the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not deny that the Senator has the floor. I merely wish to ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator can go ahead.

Mr. WHERRY. It is perfectly all right. Apparently I got under the hide of both the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. TAFT. Why not, if my motives are impugned?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, my motives have been impugned. The Senator from Ohio says that the conferees did not give away anything. They did give away something. They deleted meat control from the joint resolution. They gave that away. They deleted milk control from the joint resolution. They gave that away. They did not come back to the Senate and say that there was a disagreement. They did not offer to resign. They did not come back for further instructions. They gave those things away after the Senate voted 49 to 26 to decontrol meat, and 51 to 27 to decontrol milk.

It is a pretty weak defense for the Senator from Ohio to rise on the floor and try to prove by some theory that the conferees did not give away something. I wish to read the words of the Senator from Ohio:

> Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in the first place, I wish to express violent opposition to the idea that we are going to put in something which is to be rewritten in conference, or that the joint resolution is going to be rewritten in conference.

I do not have time to look up all the references in the RECORD to show whether or not the senior Senator from Ohio stated that Paul Porter would have more power. I distinctly remember his statements—and I shall produce the RECORD—wherein the Senator from Ohio stated that Paul Porter would have the right to determine what could be produced in this country, what the price should be, and what the profit should be. If that is not more power than any Price Administrator ever had, then I should like to be shown where it can be found. I wish to quote from the RECORD showing what the Senator from Ohio said he would not do. The Senator from Ohio said:

> Mr. President, in the first place, I wish to express violent opposition to the idea that we are going to put in something which is to be rewritten in conference, or that the joint resolution is going to be rewritten in conference.

That is exactly what was done.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The statement was made in connection with the proposal that an amendment be put in to be taken to conference—that is, not to be taken seriously by the Senate, but to be taken to conference.

I was objecting very strenuously to the theory that we would accept something with the understanding in advance that we would rewrite it. That statement had nothing to do with what might necessarily result from a conference.

Mr. WHERRY. In reply to that statement, I wish to say that I had a talk with the distinguished Senator from Ohio. I had a motion prepared to instruct the conferees not to recede from the Senate amendments. He stated, "I think this matter has been clearly taken care of by the statement which was made on the floor of the Senate." He told me personally, "I am going into that conference, and we are not going to rewrite this measure. We are going to stand by the things we wrote into it."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Let me state what the situation was. At the time when the conferees were to be appointed the Senator from Nebraska was thinking of offering a motion to instruct the conferees not to recede from the specific decontrol provisions adopted by the Senate. I advised him that I was very much afraid that the motion would be defeated and that then we would be in a weaker position than if we let the matter alone.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me say——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

Mr. TAFT. But let me say that I still believe that if that motion had been offered it would have been defeated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to read what was said at that time, and then I shall conclude. It is not necessary for anyone to break in on the reading. Of course, I realized that when I read the Senator's statement about how he would defend the amendments in the conference, he probably would not like to have that statement read. But what he said then is what I relied on and it is what other Senators relied on:

> If I am one of the conferees I shall insist upon every provision the Senate places in the joint resolution.

He said he would insist on every one of them. He further said:

> We are not going to rewrite the joint resolution in conference. In my opinion, the conferees should stick by whatever the Senate places in it, unless the House is willing to vote on the measure and turn it down for some particular reason, because the House has taken no action.

But the conferees did not do that. They did not disagree. They did not come back and report on the situation. I relied upon that statement, and I think every other Senator relied upon it.

The Senator from Ohio said further as I have just stated:

> The House has taken no action.

That was true, and the House never did take any action in that respect before the conference report was brought back by the conferees. We did not give the House an opportunity to vote on those matters before the conference report discontinuing the specific decontrols, as provided for by the Senate, was brought back from the conference.

I read further from the statement made at that time by the Senator from Ohio:

> I dissent from the theory that we are going to put something in the joint resolution and then rewrite the whole measure in conference.
> In the second place, so far as the proposal of the Senator from Kentucky is concerned, I think it is utterly and completely impracticable. We cannot control the price of wheat for one purpose and not for another purpose.

And so forth. Mr. President, I appeal again to the Members of the Senate that, as one of the Members of this body, I depended entirely upon the good faith of the Senator from Ohio, when those words were spoken and placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I say now, on this very night, that if the conferees had disagreed, and if the conferees on the part of the Senate had come back to the Senate for instructions, and if we had forced the House to take a vote on the specific decontrols, I think we probably might not have had the difficulty with some of the controls that we now have.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I should like to make one statement.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. TAFT. As I have stated before, we found that there was no choice except either to agree or to continue to disagree and do nothing. There was no way in which we could come back for instruction. There was no way, over the opposition of the House, by which the House could be made to vote.

Consequently, the question is a very simple one. This conference report provides the best terms we could make. The Senate is free to reject the report. Personally, I had great doubt whether to vote for it myself, but I decided to do so. That is the way the Senator from Nebraska can obtain the decision. If a majority of the Senate does not like the report, it has authority to vote it down. Under those circumstances, the conference report will be defeated, but we can request a further conference with the House of Representatives and can ascertain whether we can do better in working out the matter with the House.

Mr. WHERRY. I am in agreement with the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. So that is the question. After all, the question is not whether the conferees should or should not have done what was done, although, as I have stated, I think we did all that we possibly could do unless we wanted to present to the country and to the Congress a picture of the efforts breaking down entirely.

So if the Senate does not like this compromise, the Senate can vote against it, and can send it back for a further conference with the House.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Nebraska has, if I understand the English language, impugned the good faith of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I wish to say that I have been associated in the Senate with the Senator from Ohio since 1938. I have not always agreed with him. We have had different viewpoints on legislation, both national and otherwise. But I wish to pay tribute to him today. I do not rise in his defense, but I do rise to pay tribute to my colleague the Senator from Ohio as a man of great ability and a man of intellectual honesty. Whenever he takes a position, he is sincere in it, and he goes through with it.

I have served with him on two conference committees. I sat with him on hearings which lasted 5½ weeks. I say that BOB TAFT, of Ohio, has measured up to the highest standards of American citizenship and of statesmanship and of service in the Senate and in the conference committees. I resent the imputations which have been made against the work of BOB TAFT. He did his very best. I worked with him. We have worked together on many matters. I affirm that he did the best job that it was possible to do.

I am very earnest in saying with all the sincerity of which I am capable that we did the best we could do, going through to the limit with no strings on us, trying earnestly to maintain the position of the Senate on the specific decontrols it voted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his contribution.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, let me say that I did not sign the conference report. For a number of reasons, I did not do so. One of them was that I thought the House conferees outsat us and outmaneuvered us.

Another reason was that the result which we were asked to bring back to the Senate, and which we did bring back to the Senate, was, in my opinion, a complete reversal of the strongly expressed sentiment of the Senate on price decontrol.

I am not interested in these charges regarding personal motives, nor am I interested in whether the President will or will not be pleased with what we have done. But I did not sign the report because I thought we were outsat and outmaneuvered and that the report reversed the sentiment of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Colorado dearly for those words.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield the floor, unless the Senator wishes to ask me some questions.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I most certainly am not going to trespass on the time of the Senate at this late hour. I merely wish to state what has previously been stated: namely, that the Senate and the House disagreed, and there was no possibility of having one yield to the other. Of course, the conferees on the part of both Houses could have disagreed, and the disagreement could have been reported to the respective Houses. But such a delay would have caused distress or, at least, confusion.

Then we tried to do what people usually try to do under such circumstances. We tried to ascertain some basis of agreement. That is what conferees are expected to do, and that is what they usually try to do.

I had the pleasure of offering an amendment by which each side made some concessions. I do not know how we can measure exactly whether the points the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded were larger than the points the conferees on the part of the House yielded; but there were substantial concessions by both sides, and then we agreed on the report. That seemed to be the orderly way to proceed. It seemed to be the only way we could proceed, and under the circumstances it was the best measure we could bring out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to delay a vote, but in view of the controversy which has arisen with reference to the conferees and the result of the conference, I wish to make a very brief statement.

We will all recall that in the first bill which the Senate passed, and which the President vetoed, there were inserted, on the floor of the Senate, certain decontrols, including decontrols over livestock, meat, poultry, dairy products, tobacco, and petroleum. They were practically the same decontrols as those which were contained in the bill which was passed later, except with reference to cottonseed and soybeans.

That bill went to conference. The House conferees would not yield on any of those specific decontrols, and in order to reach an agreement the Senate conferees yielded on them. When the conference report came to the Senate, all the specific decontrols in that bill had been eliminated. The conference report was adopted. There was some objection to the elimination of the decontrols, but there was nothing like the fuss which has been made over the provisions in the pending conference report. When House Joint Resolution 371, the pending measure, went to conference it had, in addition to the decontrols of the former bill, decontrols of cottonseed and soybeans.

When we got into conference we recognized, of course, that we could not ask the House conferees to yield on everything. They would not ask us or expect us to yield on everything. It must also be recalled that when the House passed House Joint Resolution 371 it merely continued price control as it existed on June 30, until July 20. That is practically all there was to it. So the measure that went to conference was the joint resolution as passed by the Senate which contained everything in the previous bill which had been passed by the Senate, except as to soy beans and cottonseed. It changed section 11 involving the so-called Taft and Barkley amendment.

When we reached the conference we met with the same situation as that which existed in the previous conference. The House conferees would not yield on the question of decontrols. They stood adamant. They held a private conference of their own and returned to us and reported that they would not yield to us. We sat from Tuesday until Saturday. We made no progress. We discussed whether we should report a disagreement to the respective Houses. In any event, whatever we did had to go back first to the House and be voted upon there. We had no power to compel the House conferees to take the matter back to the House for a vote. We recognized that, after all the efforts we had made, and after all the discussion we had had on the question of price control, it would somewhat discredit the Congress for the conferees to break up and admit that they could not get together on any kind of an agreement.

Late Friday afternoon a suggestion was made with respect to a compromise with regard to decontrol. We adjourned with the understanding that we would think it over. The next day we assemlbed at 10 o'clock in the morning and remained in session until 8 o'clock Saturday night and worked out this compromise. To say that the Senate was out-maneuvered or outplayed is not accurate, because practically everything in this conference report is the Senate measure which was a substitute for the joint resolution passed by the House.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. On the Friday night to which the Senator refers, the distinguished Senator from Maryland came in with a full compromise for decontrol which, had it stopped there, so far as I am concerned, would have been acceptable. But we were reversed in that formula, and in suffering that reversal we suffered a complete defeat in the view of the Senate so far as decontrol is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Colorado. We presented a formula to the House conferees which they would not accept, and then the two sets of conferees worked out what is now in the conference report.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have no crystal globe, and I cannot say it with certainty, nor can the Senator rebut with certainty what I am about to say, but it seemed to me that had we sat a little longer and remained adamant a little longer, or at least had we come back to the Senate for instructions, or had provoked a situation wherein the House conferees found it necessary to go back to the House for instructions, we could have come back to the Senate and said, "Gentlemen, we have done the best we can do and this is the best compromise we could reach."

I do not believe that we handled ourselves in such a way as to produce either a clean-cut expression of opinion on the part of the House, or a clean-cut expression of opinion on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, whether we handled ourselves according to the standards by which the Senator from Colorado would like to have seen us handle ourselves, is a speculative question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I did not sign the report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that. Evidently we did not handle ourselves in a way which suited the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Precisely.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Precisely.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we had handled ourselves as the Senator desired——

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would have signed the report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and I would not. [Laughter.]

Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TAFT addressed the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a matter which may not be of importance, but it is one of chronology.

The proposition which I brought forward was not brought forward on Friday, but 2 days previously. The first proposition submitted to the House was earlier in the week. It was turned down and another was tendered, which was modified, but the proposition which I suggested did not become acceptable. I want to emphasize that the conferees did not consider only one proposition for a few hours and then stop. The proposition which I presented was before the conferees in various forms for several days.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I have studied considerably the parliamentary situation. We could not get the House to agree to disagree.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. TAFT. We must first agree to disagree before the conferees will go back to the House. All we could do was to sit there and continue disagreeing day after day and throughout the week, and finally, as many conference committees have done, just pick up and quit. I do not know what we could have done except to agree on something and bring it back to the Senate. We had no other choice. We could not come back for instructions. There was no provision for it, nor could the House conferees return for instructions.

Therefore, Mr. President, I do not know what we could have done except to agree on something and bring it back to the Senate for the Senate to say yes or no. The Senate is now in position to do that. The Senate can say no and ask for another conference. But, because of the position which the majority of the House conferees took, we could have sat there until doomsday without accomplishing anything. I may say that I do not believe they were particularly anxious to get a bill. In fact, if the Senators want to know it, I am not at all sure that the President wants a bill. I want a bill. I think there should be controls to a certain extent, and, so far as I was concerned, I was willing to pursue the policy which would have made it possible for the Senate, at least, to get a bill or not get one. I think that the conferees on the part of the Senate took the only right course which they could have taken, namely, by submitting the best amendment we could get the House conferees to agree to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I agree with what has been said by the Senator from Ohio except that I disagree with his statement that the President does not want a bill. I do not believe that what the Senator has said is an accurate statement of the President's viewpoint. I know the President wanted a bill and still wants one. I still maintain, as I did in the beginning when I urged him to sign the other bill, that I have not changed my mind. But that is a different matter. The President exercises his authority under the Constitution, and we are here now with another bill. As I said a moment ago, we could not compel the House conferees to disagree.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator to yield so that I may ask a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. The Senator from Kentucky has said that he believes the President will sign this bill. Does the Senator believe that this is a better price control bill than the one which the President vetoed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I said this morning, in my explanation of the conference report, that in my judgment, on the whole, it is a better measure than the bill the President vetoed.

I do not know that any word of commendation from a Democratic Senator would be welcomed by the Senator from Ohio, or would be of any value to him. Nevertheless, I wish to state for the benefit of his colleagues, if it is worth anything, that during these 5 days no man stood out more firmly and more vigorously for the terms of the Senate joint resolution than did the Senator from Ohio. But the Senator from Ohio, as all other Senators, must recognize the fact that when there is a fundamental disagreement between the House and Senate on important legislation, somebody must step forward at least a little in order that the two Houses may get together, and the Senator from Ohio, in working out this compromise, was constructive and broadminded, and he contributed to the possibility of an agreement of any kind on the legislation which now presents itself.

Now just one further word——

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going to yield any further to any Senator at the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate has a right to reject the conference report if it desires to do so, but I wish to state that if it should do so, it would take a great risk of there not being any legislation whatever.

It is a peculiar situation we face. Those who do not want any control at all are going to vote against the conference report, and apparently some of those who want more control than the joint resolution contains are going to vote against the conference report.

Mr. President, that presents a very grotesque bedchamber scene. It reminds me, if I may illustrate what I have in mind, of a story I heard not long ago, of an elderly unmarried lady who went into a furniture store and said to the clerk, "I have an old-fashioned double-bed, and I want to trade it in for twin beds."

"Well," he said, "that is an unusual request. What is the object?"

"Well," she replied, "I am an old maid, and I live alone, and every night before I retire I look under the bed to see if there is a man there. If I have two beds, my chances will be double." [Laughter].

Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the Decontrol Board. In the language of the joint resolution, we have set up what we describe as an independent board, a bipartisan board. Not more than two of the three members can be members of the same party. When we wrote into the proposed legislation the provision that it should be an independent Board, we meant independent; we meant that it was not to be an appendage of any other department.

The members of the Board are to be confirmed by the Senate. I feel certain that I speak the sentiments of the President, because, without quoting him, he has indicated his desire to appoint the best possible board that can be obtained, a board which will be independent, a board which cannot be charged with being a stooge of any department of the Government of the United States. It may depend upon the independence and integrity and ability and character of the Board, in the next period, whether the Board will be successful in operation or not.

Therefore, I am going to take the liberty to say that I do not believe anybody should be appointed to the Board who has at any time had any connection with the OPA, because no matter how outstanding or able or independent such a man might really be, if one were appointed who had had any connection in the past with the OPA, he immediately would be under the suspicion that in some way or other he had been appointed to carry out the policies of the old OPA.

I have no doubt that the President will appoint the best Board he can appoint. It is not easy to find men who will give up their business for a year, even under patriotic impulses, but I know the President will seek to find such men, and I hope he will find them, and will send their names to the Senate for confirmation before the Congress adjourns.

Mr. President, I hope the conference report will be agreed to because we need legislation, and if the report is not agreed to there is a grave risk we may have no legislation on the subject at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I realize that we have been here considering this matter for 11 hours, and that is entirely too long. I think the exertion of such pressure is not justified, because of the importance of the matter under consideration. I could not let this opportunity go without expressing my views to the Senate as to what I think the legislation is going to do. I do not believe this question should be voted upon tonight, but I think it is going to be.

Mr. President, I am not conscious of ever in my life wanting anything more than that the American people be relieved from the reimposition of price control on them. I have no consideration whatever for the political repercussions in reference to it. As the Senator from Nebraska has said, I believe that this measure will strangle production. I believe that it is my duty to do everything I can to prevent the adoption of this proposed legislation, yet I am not naive enough to expect I can change any votes of the Senate, but I am going to do everything I can to that end.

I think, Mr. President, that the speech made today by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was one of the finest that has been made on this floor since I have been a Member of the Senate. If it does not change any votes, it will at least make those more uncomfortable who vote for the conference report. I hope at least it will have that effect.

I do not expect to devote very much time to my remarks, because I know that what I may say will not be welcome, but I wish to read, with my full approval, a statement made today by Arthur Krock as a special contribution to the New York Times. The article reads:

FACE SAVING ON OPA—SECOND CONTROL COMPROMISE POSES ACADEMIC AND POLITICAL ARGUMENT

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, July 23.—There will be an argument, partly for face-saving purposes, as to whether the second legislative compromise on price controls is nearer to or further from the administration's position than the first one, which President Truman vetoed. The argument is academic as well as political because only the second can be put to the test of operation. But what is certain and demonstrable, if the bill becomes law, is that the administration will retain mechanical control of such price fixing as remains. And this means that, subject only to popular opinion and compliance, the measure can be used to supervise the national economy to the uttermost limits obtainable by elastic interpretations of its text.

This mechanical control is retained through the provision that over the Office of Price Administration there shall be a Board of Decontrol appointed by the President, who already has his own nominee, Paul Porter, at the head of the OPA. The Senate must consent to those chosen by Mr. Truman to be the three members of the Board before they can serve during a session of Congress. But in the event the Senate should reject one or all of those appointees, the President would still hold the upper hand for these reasons:

SENATE ACTION A KEYSTONE

Congress wants to adjourn next week or as soon thereafter as possible. If the Senate adjourns without acting on the nominations, or after rejecting one or more of them, Mr. Truman can then invest the same persons with the same duties by making recess appointments, which would be valid until the Senate meets again. In that period the administration could manage price control as it chose, subject only to the limitations of the act as construed by Government attorneys, also executive appointees.

The Senate, if a controversy over nominees should arouse its majority to that extent, could sit out a contest with the President, during which there would be no Board of Decontrol. But the will to adjourn makes this improbable. And then also, automatically, on August 21, controls would go back on meats, dairy products, grains, cottonseed and soybeans and their products, and the administration has been fighting hard for this restitution. The Senate might also, by rejecting one or more of the nominees for the board, persuade the President to substitute other names before adjournmnt. But that is about the only possibility that congressional influence can play any part in the mechanical control of price fixing for the remainder of the life of the OPA, and this part would be indirect.

PRESIDENT'S POWERS A FACTOR

This situation, which arises from the constitutional power given to the President to administer the laws passed by Congress, may explain why the new measure is being called acceptable by executives who opposed the first extension bill. It contains many of the sections which Chester Bowles called "crippling" and "booby-traps." It removes, for a period at least, controls on meat and other articles for which the administration fought long and uncompromisingly. Senator ROBERT A. TAFT, whose price-control ideas the President singled out for the major part of his attack on the former comprise, says that in large measure the latest version meets two of his most important objectives: Profit margins sufficient to restore production, and a single industry standard instead of an over-all standard. Moreover, the bill sets up the Board of Decontrol against the original wishes of the Administration.

But it leaves operation to the Executive and the power to appoint those who will do the operating. The discretion it does not invest in the Board it leaves to the OPA, another executive arm. If the President signs this measure, a part of the explanation is to be found in those provisions, for section by section the bill, as Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY, the majority leader, prophesied is no better (from the administration standpoint) than that vetoed by the President. And, comparing these sections with various statements by Mr. Bowles, it is worse, as Mr. BARKLEY said it might be.

ECONOMIC CONTROL MAINTAINED

However, control over the national economy is maintained as a principle, and this condition is dear to the hearts of the New Deal social economists and the labor leaders with whom they are in political alliance. They appear also to have persuaded the President that, if after this bill becomes law, production spurts and price levels stabilize—even if they are higher—he can claim and get public credit for these results and for having prevented inflation by vetoing the former measure.

On the other hand, they have advised Mr. Truman, if the consequences are near the Executive predictions of what would follow any modification of the old law, he can hedge sufficiently in his message of reluctant approval so that Congress will get all the blame.

Mr. President, I have read that article with full approval. Notwithstanding that the majority leader the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has stated to the press today that the opposition to this OPA measure has broken down and that there will not be more than a few speeches made against it, we are here now until 11 o'clock tonight. Notwithstanding that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has said that there will not be more than 25 votes cast against it, I am still here urging the Senate to reject this measure.

Before I close, Mr. President, I am going to give the honor and the credit to a few people, from a diversified number of places in the country, by reading into the RECORD the statements contained in their telegrams which I have recently received. The first telegram I shall read comes from San Francisco, Calif. I have picked telegrams from various communities and dealing with various subjects:

Understand that compromise bill makes no provision for rent relief. Without the Knowland amendment this industry is greatly prejudiced. OPA conference bill setting up super control board to be followed by Truman appointment of left wingers as members is a double-crossing trick repeating the board of review set-up in the 1944 amendments and would leave manufacturing industries subject to same illegalities and vicious practices as before. This is Paul Porter's evident reason for favoring conference bill. I urge rejection.

The new OPA bill is about the most muddled thing ever devised. If passed will leave the country in more confusion, just what is wanted by Socialists and Communists. You and 50 other Senators voted to adopt the Wherry amendment decontrolling dairy products. You did this because you realized that impractical administration of controls over dairy products was rapidly curtailing production and denying to the consumer the right to purchase dairy products he wanted. We have now had 3 weeks with free markets and dairy products are readily available and prices are leveling. To again impose regulations on dairy industry would cause a chaotic condition, tremendous losses to dairy industry, and irreparable damage to small manufacturers of dairy products. We ask you to kindly continue your support in permanent elimination of dairy products from any revamped OPA legislation.

You and I both know food prices will level off quickly if Congress keeps OPA dead. A dead OPA means a dead black market. Revive OPA and you revive the black market. You cannot expect the producer of meat and food to expand while at the mercy of unreasonable controls, and most people know they have been unreasonable in the past. OPA sings a nice song that they will reform but we all doubt it. America was free. Do your duty and keep it free.

Hon. E. H. MOORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

From what I read of compromise on OPA bill it looks like a "half slave and half free" proposition on commodities which should be completely free from price control. So far as petroleum industry is concerned it would retain power to restore price control in hands of Control Board and OPA, and certainly would deprive the industry of being restored to any semblance of running its own business under competitive principles of free economy as well as holding continual threat of recontrol. Another year of OPA price control under authority granted in compromise will in my judgment lead to utter chaos. It has been shown we can get along without OPA regimentation, and the longer it survives the more difficult it will be for the country to get back to an even keel. If they do not intend to reassert price-control powers, why give to this power-seeking group the authority which you know they seek to retain over our whole economy. I hope you will oppose this compromise as an economic monstrosity.

WALTER S. HALLANAN.

I have read these statements coming from men with whom I have slight, if any acquaintance. I assume that they represent the interests which they purport to represent.

Mr. President, the adoption of the conference report would reimpose complete price control and at the same time decontrol the price controllers. The conference report is a complete victory for the regimenters and a socialistic-minded administration, which is bent on giving the American people a permanent controlled economy. Through the press and by innuendo the President has thrown up a thin and obvious smoke screen to the effect that the bill will be signed reluctantly. The fact is—and any child knows it to be true—that the administration and its gang of regimenters are tickled to death with the legislation. They have far more latitude under this bill than they ever had under the original Price Control Act. It is a travesty upon justice, an insult to the legislative body, and a double-cross of the American people. When a small group of administration-controlled conferees can force through both Houses of the Congress a piece of legislation that neither House would have originally passed, then the legislative branch of our Government has broken down. Through scare propaganda, the threat of purges, and the threat of a veto, of which some Members of Congress are politically fearful, the conference report will be pushed through Congress, probably with a substantial majority, and the economy of this country will be held in the palm of the administration's hand, to manipulate as whim or fancy may dictate.

The standards set up in the act are no standards at all and would be immediately stricken down by any bona fide court. The tragedy of the situation, however, is that we do not have a court to which an appeal may be made. The present Supreme Court would find the unlimited authority delegated to the price controllers in this act a perfectly legitimate legislative act. The fatal day is put off until August 20, which simply means more and greater confusion in the meat and dairy industries and all allied business. Likewise the uncertainty and confusion will continue in the petroleum and tobacco industries. If we are to submit to a controlled economy, then why do we not frankly put the controls back on now and end the uncertainty, because everybody knows, under the standards set up, what will happen?

The administration is to appoint a Decontrol Board under this act that will have complete freedom of action, according to their own whim or fancy. What type of man do Senators think will be appointed to this Decontrol Board? If Chester Bowles and Leon Henderson are not proposed as members of the board, then others of the same type, character, and thinking will be proposed, and the Senate, as in the past, will approve them on the theory that they are personal appointees of the President; and if they have not actually been convicted of crime they will be confirmed.

Meat, poultry, and dairy products were relieved from price control by one vote less than a 2-to-1 majority. That was the considered judgment of the Senate, after long and careful deliberation. It was the considered judgment of the Banking and Currency Committee when the bill that the President vetoed was written. It was the judgment of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It was the unanimous judgment of the meat, cattle, dairy, and poultry industries. It was the judgment of an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States. But, of course, it was not the judgment of the regimenters and the administration which, as I have said before, is a captive of the CIO-Communist front. Yet I anticipate that a majority of the Senate will meekly and humbly submit to the demand of an administration that has already proved itself wholly incompetent in every respect.

The standards by which these industries are to be returned to the black marketeers are:

First. That prices have risen "unreasonably" above the unfair and unreasonable prices that were in effect on June 30, 1946. What is "unreasonable"? "Unreasonable" is anything that the administration decontrol board may say it is.

Second. When the commodity is in short supply and its regulation is "practicable and enforceable." What does that mean? Can the majority leader or any other Member of the Senate say what is meant by "short supply" or what the administration decontrol board will determine is short supply?

Does it mean domestic consumptive demand? Does it mean the backlog of supplies that are on the farms, in the warehouses, and on the counters of the country? Is our obligation that we have assumed to feed Communist Europe and Asia to be included in this consideration? Then what is "practicable"? The practicability of price control, and we all know this to be true, will depend upon the whim or fancy of this administration-dominated Board; and is there anyone who does not believe the administration is in full sympathy with the idea of having a permanently controlled economy?

Third, that the public interest will be served by recontrols. Has this Senate forgotten that it is the constitutional duty and obligation of the Congress to determine what is in the public interest? Are we now to delegate that exclusively legislative function to an appointive Board that we know will be made up of starry-eyed crackpots like Henderson, Bowles, and Porter, or perhaps Rosenman?

Who is this fellow Porter who is to run our controlled economy? He is a young advertising man who managed the publicity campaign for the New Dealers in the last campaign and was paid off by being given a job in the Federal Communications Commission. Now, because of his knowledge of publicity propaganda and mass-selling tactics, he is given the job of managing the economy of the whole country. What industrial experience has this fellow ever had that would qualify him to understand the mechanism of free enterprise?

In the first place, he does not believe in the principles of free enterprise. He does not believe in the law of supply and demand, and he frankly told the Senate committee that he was in the business of causing the law of supply and demand not to work. His predecessor, from whom he took lessons in the art of regimenting the people, has frankly said that we can no longer depend upon traditional methods in this country, and that we must return to and continue the controls imposed upon the people during the emergency of war.

Mr. President, let no one be fooled by this act. It is exactly what the price controllers want. The President is tickled to death with it, and he will sign it the minute it hits his desk; and then the New Deal will be back in partnership with the black market, just as it has been in partnership with the labor racketeers, and just as some of the New Dealers went into partnership with the war-contract crooks during the war. And then the American people will again be shackled with the chains of regimentation, and our country will continue on the same road that brought ruin and destruction to Germany and Italy.

Now is the time for liberty-loving Americans who cherish the Constitution and believe in our form of government to take a stand. We have taken many steps down the road to destruction. A few more steps such as this will be fatal, not only to those who resisted it, but to all those who supported it, as well, because when collapse does come and production bogs down and the inflation spiral gets out of hand because of lack of production, the regimenters and the controllers will be consumed, just the same as the other people.

Some of the supporters of OPA point to the inflation in China and the inflation in the Communist-dominated countries of Europe as examples of the inflation that threatens us. Do they not know that the inflation that is consuming those countries has been brought on because of the kind of government under which those countries labor? Do they not know that it is the stoppage of production that has caused it? Do they not realize that the inflation is the direct result of regimentation of the people in those countries? The same people who now support a controlled economy for the United States have been the beneficiaries of our form of government. Their standards of living have been raised above those of all other peoples of the world because of the constitutional freedom of our business enterprise. They should understand that these principles, and only these principles, will bring back to America the stability of economy that means the happiness and the well-being of all of our people, and incidentally, of all the other peoples of the world.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish to take just a few moments to read an editorial which appeared in the Washington News of July 19. The editorial expresses very well and a little humorously my own good faith in the American consumer's ability to take care of himself without having Paul Porter or Chester Bowles hold his hand 24 hours a day. I have not been greatly concerned over the controversy as to whether the conference report is good, bad, or indifferent, because I am against the continuation of OPA in any form, shape, or manner. So regardless of whether the conference report is good or bad, I am against it.

THEY COULD BE WRONG

Back in the intimate recesses of Washington's cocktail lounges the small-fry President-makers speak of long-term strategy. It goes something like this:

Forget about OPA. Let prices skyrocket. Let the consumers get a bellyfull. They will then be in a mood for some real planned economy. That will be the clear-cut issue to elect a President in 1948.

This newspaper will do its best to avoid crystal gazing, but there are signs, however inconclusive, that these serious-minded and self-appointed architects of a new day may have their blueprints balled up.

Such signs as, for instance, strong resistance to rising prices dating from the end of OPA, including Wednesday's break in poultry quotations, Thursday's drop in Chicago livestock prices, reductions in butter prices when Mama refused to pay 90 cents to a dollar a pound, a note in the Wall Street Journal that big retailers are beginning to worry about getting stuck with high-cost inventories, ads offering much-wanted goods at less than OPA prices, and so on.

It is basic in the philosophy of one type of liberal that the American consumer is a poor, forlorn lug with no spunk and less sense. If you don't hold his hand on the way to the grocery, he'll blow the roll on a pack of gum, with nothing left for such necessities as rent, gin, hamburger, nylon hose, and thin little books about the wonderful world of tomorrow.

It could be that these liberals are right. If so, they may have something in this argument for a totalitarian planned economy as a desperate measure to save this American fool from his folly.

But even assuming the necessity, there is reason to fear that their cure may be at least as bad as the disease.

For planned economy requires planners—and planners, as well as consumers, may sometimes be mistaken.

Recall, for instance, the assumption that depression would follow the war's end. Unemployment would be 8,000,000 up. Disastrous deflation was on the way. So the plan called for wages to be forced up abruptly to provide "purchasing power" in this new 1933. The idea that wages had anything to do with retail prices was brushed aside as a mere detail. Get away boy, you're bothering me.

Instead of deflation we got inflation. Instead of unemployment we actually have labor shortage in many spots, men's clothing for instance.

The tendency toward runaway prices, which started well before the end of OPA, may be attributed, at least in major part, to this just slightly cockeyed plan.

We do not share this "liberal" low opinion of the American consumer.

We dislike to view this consumer as a digit in a Government book of statistics. We prefer to personify her in the form of Mama, pay check in one hand and market basket in the other.

It is risky, we think, to assume that Mama is fool enough to pay whatever is asked. In the first place she is limited by Papa's pay check. In the second place, even if she had the money, her pride would prevent her from playing sucker.

Mama is the person the Washington storekeeper had in mind when he explained to a reporter why he still didn't have any meat.

"Meat at that price?" said the storekeeper. "I won't fool with it. My customers wouldn't stand for it."

Multiply Mama by a few million and you have what an economist might term a "strong anti-inflationary influence." Your merchant, your manufacturer, your farmer are a lot more scared of Mama than they ever were of Chester Bowles or Paul Porter.

And if Mama and her tribe, who constitute the American people, are such fatheads as these liberals think, how did we ever do so well in the days before planned economy got into the language?

How did we ever cut down the trees, build the homes, farms, and factories which made us big and strong to lick Hitler, arm and feed the world?

If the country has lost the spunk and common sense which made it, may the Lord help us. We doubt if these long-term planners can.

We are not, as we said, going into the predicting business, but we think there is some slight justification for the belief and hope that these cocktail-room strategists may be wrong—again.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I cannot allow this issue to come to a vote without associating myself, at least for the RECORD, with the Senators who have this day fought so valiantly for the restoration and preservation of the American free way of life.

Only 3 weeks ago we got out from under the baneful influence of the OPA. A great deal of relief was felt throughout America, and for the 3 weeks, during which we got along without the OPA, I must say that we did a very good job. We have seen returned to our tables those things which had been missing for a long time, and we have seen evidences of a feeling of great relief on the part of the American people. Tonight we are deciding the issue of whether, on the 20th day of August, we are automatically to return under the same controls, and under the same system of regimentation and restrictions on the American people which has existed so long.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report because of several reasons. First, by adopting the report we will tell the people of America that we have lost faith in their ability to discipline themselves, despite the fact that for 3 weeks they have demonstrated that they can discipline themselves in a very creditable manner.

Second, the conference report provides for an average productivity ability in America. We are asked to see that the American people shall be placed on an average economy instead of telling them to go ahead and produce at full speed the things which are needed in order to stop inflation and meet the needs of the American way of life.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the conference report because it freezes again upon the National economy the inequities, the injustices, and the uneconomic practices which have stymied production, hindred business, and denied the American people goods which they so much need and to which they are entitled.

I am also opposed to the conference report because, under it, in 3 weeks we will again be forced to live not under the institution of law but under the rule of boards and bureaus, a procedure which is poison to the American way of life and which we must get rid of if we ever wish to restore the well-balanced economy which has made America prosperous and happy.

I am further opposed to the conference report because it says, in effect, to the people of the Nation that they are not able to discipline themselves, and must put themselves under the guardianship of men who have given no demonstration of ability to conduct the business and affairs of the American people better than they themselves can conduct them.

Mr. President, in the few words which I have uttered, I want the RECORD to show my reasons why I shall vote to return this report to the conference committee and ask that they bring back one which is consonant with the wishes of the American people.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, tonight the Senate is confronted with the necessity of making a very difficult and a very serious decision. This is no occasion for us to try to favor this one or that one, or someone else. But, as we vote tonight we must try in all seriousness and sincerity to do, under the circumstances and under the issue which is presented to us, what is best for the great group of Americans whom we strive to represent.

Mr. President, from the time the issue arose I have felt that during the transition and reconversion period there was the need for authority in connection with the establishment of ceiling prices which would serve the best interests of America. For that reason, I have favored a measure of controls.

The price-control law, under which we operated during the war was to terminate and did terminate on June 30. With that fact confronting us, there developed in America two divergent viewpoints. There were those who thought that all the rigid controls of the war should be continued for some time at least, and I believe that some thought such controls should be continued indefinitely. There were those who thought that there should be no controls whatever, and that we should immediately revert to the American system of free enterprise without any controls.

Mr. President, between these two extremes I have tried to find a sound course, and I believe there is one. Without any controls at all during the reconversion period there would be those who would take full advantage of the situation. If I wanted to be specific I could cite rents. If we take off all controls from rents there are many persons who will take advantage of the free opportunity to impose intolerable hardships upon tenants by raising rents to extortionate levels in order to get rid of tenants who were undesirable, or purposely for the opportunity to gain and to make profit.

Mr. President, there are many issues before us in connection with the pending joint resolution which might very well lead us to vote for no controls at all and yet serve the interests of the country, but, in my judgment, we cannot abolish controls over rents and allow rents to go unchecked so that any landlord who may desire can raise them to any level he wishes.

There are many things which, if the prices go too high or become unreasonable, the consumer or user can do without. But that is not true with reference to shelter. Today there is not an adequate supply of shelter, of housing, of facilities for living quarters for Americans. We all know that to be so. It does not exist, and I know, as every other Member of the Senate knows, that it will not exist tomorrow. Supplying housing is a program which will take perhaps a year, and when I say a year, I think I am being most conservative. I think it will take possibly 3 or 4 years, under favorable conditions, to supply the housing and living quarters needed to meet the demand. That is a reality. It is not an exaggeration or an extreme statement. During that period, in justice to every American, and certainly in justice to our servicemen who went away and fought the battles of democracy and made the sacrifices on foreign soil, there should be a continuation of rent controls.

I do not believe that rent controls should be held at the level at which they were originally established in every case. I think that the increased cost of maintenance and other conditions warrant some allowance, and I would feel we were fully justified in enacting a provision of law which would authorize the making of some allowance for the changed conditions with respect to rental values.

I have no interest in landlordship. The only buildings I owned did not have the rents raised during wartime. They were commercial buildings, and I might have raised the rent at any time. The point I am trying to make is that, although there may be the authority in this instance to raise rents, we are not justified in doing it simply because there is the authority. Though we may not be justified, there are many who, with or without justification, would take advantage of the opportunity to do it.

Therefore one of the principal reasons why I shall vote for the conference report is that rent control is involved. I shall vote for the conference report, but passing from that, I wish to comment about some other features of the measure.

Throughout the tortuous course of this legislation there has been a great fight to decontrol certain commodities and certain foods and other things which are essential to the life of the individual citizen. In the past in the case of most of the basic foods of the country we have always operated on the basis—and it is true of any democracy—of the law of supply and demand. Today we are trying to regulate and control and place ceilings on many commodities which are vital to the life and to the existence of Americans.

At the time price control ended, at the time the law expired, and at the time Americans, as many would say, were set completely free to proceed under the law of independent enterprise and free enterprise and the law of supply and demand, there were a great many supplies, a great many food products, which were not on the market for the average citizen. People might walk into the grocery store and ask for butter, or they might ask for steak, or they might ask for bacon, or something else, but under the ceiling prices it was not available to the legitimate buyers; it was not available in the legitimate market. Since controls have been removed and since OPA died, as every Member of the Senate knows, the truth is, and it cannot be refuted, that as the opportunity was given the markets were supplied. The goods were there. They were at a little higher price, and everybody knows that, because we had to take into consideration the fact that subsidy ceased, and that prices of foods which had been subsidized would naturally rise at least to the point of the subsidy.

Mr. President, I shall support the conference report, and I hope the results flowing from it will not be as bad as some seem to fear. What we are trying to do is to prevent inflation and prevent prices of the necessities of life from getting out of control. Under OPA we had rigid controls. We had controls which were arbitrary and under which the average man—and we hear a great deal about the common citizen—did not have butter on his table and could not buy steak. The common citizen was the one who was handicapped. But, Mr. President, the millionaire, the man who had plenty of cash, could go into any night club anywhere in America, in Washington, D. C., or any place else, and get the choicest steak, and it was not a steak which was bought at OPA ceiling prices, and everyone knew it.

In the war period we all agreed that controls were necessary. Although they caused injustices, yet we were fighting a war which we were determined to win, and controls were fully justified. But in that transition period back to something like normalcy, I feel there should be practical sense applied to any sort of controls. When I say that I mean that I believe—and want to make the statement emphatic for the record—that under the Price Control Administration as it existed at the time the OPA expired, price control was not responsive to practical application at all, but was absolutely arbitrary and was never used or administered to bring about decontrols, but instead was operated and administered for the sole purpose of perpetuating eternally economic controls in America. For that reason, Mr. President, I have not agreed with Mr. Bowles, who was the Administrator of OPA and later Stablization Administrator. I believe that his philosophy was directed toward the perpetuation of OPA and not towards decontrol.

This measure provides for a Decontrol Board. I am voting for it in the hope—and I emphasize the statement—that decontrol means decontrol. I do not mean decontrol without justification, but I mean decontrol where justification is manifest and the reason for it establised.

Mr. President, I believe the administration owes to the American people simple honesty. If we can have simple honesty, and let decontrols as they are justified become operative and established, I predict, Mr. President, that in less than a year, we will be back to the system under which Americans are Americans; that we will have free enterprise, that fair prices will be fixed by those who want to sell which will be accepted by those who want to buy, and if prices are too high and if those who have goods to sell want to sell them at prices that the public will not pay, they will encounter such sales resistance as will compel them to reduce their prices. That is the American system, and I hope we will return to that system.

Mr. President, there is one compelling need for control—if I did not think so I would vote against the conference report—but I think it is compelling because I think the home is the most important thing we have to consider in connection with this measure, a place in which to live, in which to find shelter. That is something we cannot ignore in considering the measure. We cannot brush that point aside. If the conference report is defeated there will be no controls over rent, there will be no controls over housing. I believe we ought to have some controls over rent and housing. I do not say that the present ceiling is right. I think it is wrong. I think many injustices are done to landlords and I think such injustices ought to be corrected, and that we ought to legislate to correct them. I voted for an amendment to the previous bill which would make some allowances and increases. It was not the kind of amendment I would prefer to see adopted, but it was one which gave some consideration to this subject. Yet at the same time, I am not taking up the cudgels for the landlord as such, or as a group, because I know many landlords who, if we should throw the doors wide open, would become extortionists and use their position, and their power and their ownership to become exacting, to be almost cruel to many of their tenants, and I do not want such a thing to occur. I want to keep reasonable controls over this absolute necessity of life.

Mr. President, we are trying tonight to reenact some form of a price-control law. The success of this law and the efficacy of it in the end will not be determined by the vote we cast here tonight. We may pass the measure, and I assume we shall do so, but, the test of this law is not in what Congress does. The test of it is in how it is interpreted and construed, and administered. I want the RECORD to show that, because this measure is so complicated, there is not a Senator on the floor who knows exactly what it means. I challenge any Senator to stand up and to tell me and the American people that he knows exactly what the measure means.

So it will have to be interpreted. We are hoping. We are trusting. We are trying to do something right. We are trying to do the best we can under the circumstances for the American people. I know that to be true as I vote for it. I know that in its interpretation by the administrative agency of the Government, and in its actual application after we pass it, it may prove to be not a boon to our economy, not a measure which may bring order out of chaos, but an implement which may be used to produce greater chaos and more disrespect for OPA and for price control. There is a great deal of disrespect today for OPA, and it is the result of arbitrary powers and unreasonable and irrational construction placed upon the Price Control Act.

Mr. President, I am a Democrat. I want my party to endure and to be successful. But whether a Senator be a Democrat or a Republican, I believe that any Member of this body owes conscientious expression to those whom he represents.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I have been in and out of the Senate Chamber during the day. Is there any understanding as to the time when we shall vote upon the conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None whatever. We have passed the hour of 12 o'clock; and if the Senator wishes to know what the Chair thinks, in the opinion of the Chair we have only started.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, in conclusion let me say that I realize that the Members of the Senate are weary. They have very diligently and honestly sought a solution to this serious and trying problem. The hour is late. I regret that I have spoken for so long; but, I am sincere. The efficacy of the measure we are about to adopt will depend—and I say it with all the emphasis in my soul—upon the integrity, honesty, and intelligence of those who administer it. I hope that ultimately it will be administered for the best interests and welfare of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 24 (legislative day of July 5), 1946:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Ewin Lamar Davis, to be a Federal Trade Commissioner for a term of 7 years from September 26, 1946.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 24, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art of all friends the nearest and of all teachers the wisest, we rejoice that when our minds are baffled and bewildered, and we wander in doubt and in darkness, we may find our refuge from fear and foreboding in the glad assurance of Thy continuing love and care.

Enrich our souls with a greater faith in Thee from whom nothing can ever separate and estrange us. Grant that with increasing tenacity of purpose we may lay hold of the glorious promise that they who wait upon the Lord shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint.

We pray that we may also have a greater faith in one another. May human hearts become more sympathetic and enlarge with attitudes and feelings of good will toward all mankind. Hasten the day when the sinister forces and influences which create bitterness and strife among men and nations shall be submerged and supplanted by the kind and gentle spirit of our Lord and Saviour.

In His name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. REVERCOMB, and Mr. WILSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3748) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal,' approved May 29, 1944," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. STEWART, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. HAWKES, and Mr. BUSHFIELD to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2091. An act for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett; and

H. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore has appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER, members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of the Navy.
2. Department of the Treasury.
3. Department of War.
4. General Accounting Office.
5. National Archives (general schedule No. 4).
6. National Archives (general schedule No. 5).
7. Selective Service System.
8. Veterans' Administration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, a week or 10 days ago I was granted permission to include an article which I am advised by the Public Printer exceeds the limit allowed by the Joint Committee on Printing and will cost $240 to print. Notwithstanding the cost, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts of speeches I have previously made. I understand there will be a slight excess beyond the limit allowed by the Joint Committee on Printing. Notwithstanding, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the excess, without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a speech I made before the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs in Cleveland, Ohio, on July 8, 1946.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOWEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 6304.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short statement by William Green.

Mr. CARLSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. CARLSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he expects to make in the Committee of the Whole on the social-security bill and to include certain tables.

Mr. GRIFFITHS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Bristol Courier of Tuesday, July 23, entitled "More Federal Jobs."

MORE FEDERAL JOBS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, this article I insert in the Appendix, More Federal Jobs, I think it would be well for all to read. It certainly is timely now when we consider the fact that we have 2,848,000 or more people on the Federal pay roll. We have been adding to the Federal pay roll ever since the end of the war, when we should be releasing employees. We have been taking them off the Army and the Navy but adding them to the various departments of the Government. This is something the Federal taxpayers have got to stand. They must pay the bill; this will increase their taxes.

We have more people on the pay roll that are not necessary than any other organization with which I have had any association. If the Congress is going to continue to permit these bureaucrats to build up these organizations for expediency and political purposes rather than to fill honest needs for Government operation, it is about time the people of this country recognize that fact and send others here to look after their interests. They changed some in Oklahoma yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. McDONOUGH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MY VOTE ON THE ATOMIC ENERGY BILL

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, there are a few people who have been questioning my vote on the atomic control bill the other day. I voted "nay." The reason for that was simply this. I followed earnestly as I could and as intently as I could the debates here and after listening to them for two whole days I could not get any light on the subject. I did not hear anyone talking about it who did not admit that they knew little or nothing about the matter. The hearings indicated that every man who appeared before the committee had a different idea, and they came from the Army, Navy, and State Department. You no doubt remember each witness recalled changed their minds from day to day.

As a matter of fairness to myself perhaps I should have voted "present"; at the same time I thought it was better to retain control in the Army where it is located now, than to delegate it to a board appointed by some one and not knowing who might be appointed on the board. Then, too, the war has not been declared at an end. So I feel all right about my vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

THE HOUSING SITUATION IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the housing situation in California is nothing short of desperate, especially for the thousands of veterans in our State. It is my belief Mr. Wyatt and the people working with him are doing an earnest, conscientious job. But evidently the program is not going forward as fast nor as smoothly as the needs demand. Material bottlenecks remain serious and in some instances at least veterans have not been given priorities which they need. Therefore I suggest that in the interest of seeing this housing program expedited with all possible speed it might be very well for the Special Committee of the House To Investigate Executive Agencies to conduct an investigation into this matter in the next few weeks.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I am quite willing to see us stay in Washington as long as may be necessary to pass any legislation in this field that may be helpful. I believe that the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill should have been passed long ago and that it would help materially in this whole housing problem.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but I do not know for certain whether there is an earnest effort being made because too many veterans have been denied priorities where there was every reason for them to be given priorities.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Under such circumstances veterans never should be denied priorities in my opinion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

GI TERMINAL PAY BILL

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Senate passed the GI terminal pay bill, providing that payment shall be made in nonnegotiable bonds due 5 years hence. Some days ago we passed a similar bill providing that payment shall be made in cash, immediately.

Within the next day or two we will take up the legislative reorganization bill, which provides for a salary increase of $5,000 for Senators and Members of the House. If we finally adopt the Senate version of the GI terminal-pay bill—and I hope we do not—I suggest that serious consideration be given to the proposition that any salary increase of Senators or Members of the House be paid in nonnegotiable bonds due 5 years after the salary has been earned, just as the Senate has done to the GI's.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

THE PALESTINE SITUATION

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I deplore the terrorism that killed and maimed the British as well as Jews in Palestine. The perpetrators must be punished. But it is important to understand the setting for the violence of a few fanatical desperadoes.

Britain left the suffering Jews nothing but despair and terrorism as its symbol. Britain seized the Jewish leaders, imprisoned 3,000 Jews, and raided the Jewish agency. The people became enraged and confidence was destroyed.

Britain dare not go down the slippery path of vindictive reprisals. Force only begets force.

It would be tragic if Britain used this catastrophe as a pretext to deny entrance of 100,000 Jews into Palestine. That would be visiting punishment upon the innocent. President Truman must continue to press for the admission of the 100,000. His plea is as just now as it was a year ago.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KOPPLEMANN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER.

Mr. BUCKLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a platform adopted at a convention of the Affiliated Young Democrats of New York State.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. OUTLAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post of July 23, 1946.

Mr. TRAYNOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include newspaper articles.

AMENDMENTS TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, the House consumed nearly 4 hours in the consideration of the railroad reorganization bill yesterday. The House will consume several more hours today on that same bill with opportunity to amend it. Promptly after that the House will consider the Social Security Act. This measure, Mr. Speaker, will affect 10,000 times the number of persons that the railroad reorganization bill will affect. It will have 10 times the effect on the economy of this country that a railroad organization bill will have, and yet they ask us to decide this issue without an opportunity to amend, with only 1 hour of debate on a "take it or leave it" basis.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Members of this House will vote down the previous question and give us an opportunity to consider the social-security amendments, a measure of the most vital importance to all of the people of this country.

TERMINAL LEAVE PAY

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am very much delighted that the Senate passed H. R. 4051, known as the Rogers bill, granting terminal leave pay to enlisted personnel. The Senate amended the House bill by providing, instead of cash as we passed it here, for the payment in bonds. I hope that this House will not get into a tangle, even though we might want to make payment in cash, and in that way defeat this legislation. It is possible that the President might not be in a position to approve the bill if we absolutely insist on cash payment. I favor cash payment but will accept bonds rather than nothing.

I hope that the House will look at it in a reasonable way and pass this measure. The boys deserve it. Let us pass it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article.

Mr. PITTENGER (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include three editorials and a newspaper article.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

ACTION ON WAGES AND HOURS ACT—DESIRED HOUSING LEGISLATION SHOULD BE ACTED ON NOW

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, on day before yesterday I called attention to the necessity, as I understood it, for this House to act in voting either up or down the amendment to the Wages and Hours Act of 1938, keeping in mind the fact that the Senate acted on this matter several months ago. The Senate has also passed general housing legislation, and I feel we should not recess or adjourn until both these matters are considered here.

Inadvertently the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] said yesterday in a colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] that the wages-and-hours legislation was still in committee. This measure is not in the Labor Committee. It was reported from the committee June 19, and a request was made on June 26 of the Committee on Rules to bring this legislation to the floor. I appeared with other members and urged that the bill be sent to the House. It is important to remember that at least 25 to 30 percent of our workers in manufacturing receive less than 65 cents per hour. With high living costs these citizens can barely meet obligations of existence. I just want the facts to be known to the Members of the House.

JOSEPH E. BENNETT

Mr. FERNANDEZ submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2091) for the relief of Joseph E. Bennett:

[Mr. SABATH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

TERMINAL LEAVE FOR ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4051) to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MAY, THOMASON, BROOKS, ARENDS, and CLASON.

GEN. ALEXANDER PAPAGOS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a splendid telegram received by the Speaker from Gen. Alexander Papagos, whom the House honored recently when it took a recess in order that the Members might have the opportunity to meet him personally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 24, 1946.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

I wish to assure you, and through you all and each one of the honorable Members of the House of Representatives, that the high honor bestowed upon me in the glorious hall of the House of Representatives will never be forgotten. I am most grateful to you and to the honorable Members of the House. I will always treasure in my heart the cordial reception and welcome extended to me by you Mr. Speaker, as well as by your eminent colleagues and I assure you, that the Greek people hold in their hearts the glorious and great American Nation, which you so worthly and ably represent. The honors so generously bestowed by you and the House belongs exclusively to the Greek people and armed forces who are proud of having fought side by side with the gallant American forces in the two World Wars.

The Greek people will not forget the assistance given to them since their war of independence in the 1820's and the voice of the great congressmen and all the great Americans still ring in their heart. They also do not forget the help they received from the United States at any time, and during this last World War. Now on the occasion of the next Paris Conference, my countrymen cherish the hope, that the United States delegation led by an outstanding American, who already has defended the liberation of the Dodecanese Islands, will also insist for the award to Greece of northern Epirus, recognized as Greek since 1920 by your Senate's resolution of May 17, 1920, as well as for the ratification of the Greek-Bulgarian border line, to make Greece safe from any further Bulgarian invasion.

An invasion which was undertaken three times in the last 30 years. The Greek people are grateful and have faith in the glorious American Nation, champion of world liberty, and expects that its great leadership will inspire justice, throughout the world. Please accept my grateful thanks and highest regards.

Gen. ALEXANDER PAPAGOS,
Royal Greek Army.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BIEMILLER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

MINIMUM-WAGE LEGISLATION

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope we will stay in session long enough to pass some of the important legislation that is now pending that will help the people. We have taken care of almost every special interest in the country. The minimum-wage bill is badly needed. A person who gets only 40 cents an hour, $16 a week, cannot live and keep a family in decency with prices as they are now. We will probably raise our salaries by passing the reorganization bill; we have already raised the judges' salaries, the ambassadors' salaries, and servicemen's pay. I am not saying these raises should not have been granted, in fact I supported these raises, but what I am saying is that we should not stop raising wages until we raise these lowest-paid workers who naturally need it most. Let us be consistent and pass the minimum-wage bill. We need a few more signatures on discharge petition No. 34 to bring this bill out on the floor as the Rules Committee refuses to bring it out. The Rules Committee should have brought the bill out because that committee brought out the other salary raises. If this bill passes, it will create, it is estimated, as much as $12,000,000,000 additional purchasing power per year in America, and that will go a long way toward stabilizing our economy and maintaining prosperity. The Government would not have to do so much for the people if Congress would see to it that they have wages enough to do things for themselves. We should also pass the housing bill before we leave here. We should not quit and go to our homes until we do the things necessary that will eventually provide other people, especially veterans, with homes to go to. These two bills have passed the Senate and it would be almost a crime to adjourn without passing them through the House.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted I may address the House for 1 hour today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on the able and distinguished services of the gentleman from Missouri, Representative JACK COCHRAN.

PATENT INFRINGEMENTS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 5311, an act to amend Revised Statutes, 4921 (U. S. C. A., title 35, Patents, sec. 70), providing that damages be ascertained on the basis of compensation for infringement, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out all after "reasonable" down to and including "occurred" in line 7 and insert "royalty therefor, together with such costs, and interest, as may be fixed by the court. The court may in its discretion award reasonable attorney's fees to the prevailing party upon the entry of judgment on any patent case."

Page 3, line 15, strike out all after "wrapper" down to and including "suit" in line 18.

Page 3, line 21, after "concluded", insert ": Provided, however, That pending causes of action in which the taking of the testimony has been concluded are to be governed by the statute in force at the time of approval of this act as if such statute had not been amended."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill providing that damages be ascertained on the basis of compensation for infringement of patents. The bill was introduced by our colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HENRY] a minority member of the Committee on Patents. The Senate amendments do not interfere with the purport of the bill. There is a provision with reference to attorney's fees and how they shall be paid.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It really is decreasing the attorney's fees?

Mr. LANHAM. It provides how they shall be awarded by the courts. It is purely a procedural amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if the Committee on Patents is going to bring out the bill which was introduced extending the time of patents for servicemen who are in the Army so that they will have an opportunity to take advantage of their patent rights?

Mr. LANHAM. The chairman of the committee is absent from the city at this time. In spite of the many official matters demanding my attention, I am very anxious that a meeting of the committee be held and a bill along that line be reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for today. I ask unanimous consent that it be vacated and the time be granted me for tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

ACCEPTANCE OF GRATUITIES BY EMPLOYEES OF WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask uanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss briefly the War Assets Administration and the final order put out by the previous Administrator of the War Assets Administration on July 15. This order says, in part:

Officials and employees in all grades of the WAA are forbidden to accept social entertainment or other special favor from persons with whom they may transact business * * *. Every offer of such entertainment or favor to a War Assets employee will be declined with a courteous explanation that it is forbidden by these instructions—

Then the order also says:

though without any unfavorable implication with respect to the offer—

Now, rather than just have the refusal of any offered favor or bribe refused by the WAA employee, "without any unfavorable implication with respect to the offer," I think there should be a specific instruction in the order to turn such offer over to the Department of Justice for an investigation. Therefore, I ask the new War Assets Administrator who is just taking office to change this order quickly. Instead of such caution to avoid injuring the feelings of proposed law breakers, he should instruct the employees that it be turned over to the Department of Justice for investigation. The people will have greater respect for the departments of the Government if an uncompromising stand is taken in such orders.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC, AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 to 6, inclusive, and agree to the same.

SOL BLOOM,
JOHN KEE,
CHESTER E. MERROW,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES E. MURRAY,
JAMES M. TUNNELL,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 305) providing for membership and participation by the United States in the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, and authorizing an appropriation therefor, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments 1 and 6 relate to citizenship requirements. As the bill passed the House, it contained a restriction on citizenship, requiring that representatives and alternates to UNESCO must be American citizens and must have been such for at least 15 years. The bill also contained a restriction that members of the National Commission must have been American citizens for at least 5 years. The Department of State asked that these two provisions on citizenship be eliminated. The Department pointed out that it is extremely unlikely—probably impossible—that a recently naturalized citizen would ever be selected by this Government or by his fellow citizens as a spokesman for American education or culture. It was also pointed out that any law which implies that a native-born citizen is superior to a foreign-born citizen, or that a citizen naturalized for 15 years is better than one naturalized for 5 years, is unsound law and is an unnecessary reflection on all citizens of foreign birth. In its present form the bill simply specifies that representatives, alternates, and members of the Commission be American citizens. The House recedes.

The second, third, fourth, and fifth amendments relate to the organization of the National Commission on Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Cooperation, as provided for in section 3 of the bill. It is felt that the changes made by the Senate represent a compromise between different plans presented and considered which are believed by many of the sponsors of the bill to be an improvement. The House recedes.

SOL BLOOM,
JOHN KEE,
CHESTER E. MERROW,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. How much appropriation are you going to ask for to carry this out?

Mr. BLOOM. Well, that has not been decided yet. I do not know exactly what it will cost.

Mr. RICH. Is Great Britain going to be a partner in this?

Mr. BLOOM. There are 14 nations that have already signed. There are 20 yet to sign before it goes into effect.

Mr. RICH. Is the money to be paid Great Britain to be paid out of the loan we gave them?

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. That has nothing to do with this.

Mr. RICH. They are going to have to raise the money somehow.

Mr. BLOOM. Then, they will try to raise it.

Mr. RICH. The money is going to come out of the taxpayers of America for our share.

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; and I will say they will get a great deal back in return.

Mr. RICH. I do not know what you will get except promises.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I would like to be clarified as to who can serve on the committee, as to citizenship.

Mr. BLOOM. There were many different plans proposed. Some wanted 20 organizations, some wanted 100, and some wanted 50. This is a compromise, and left it up to the State Department.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Must they all be American citizens? Citizens of this country?

Mr. BLOOM. Citizens of this country. The limit of time of citizenship has been changed. That is all.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. What is the change in that regard?

Mr. BLOOM. The change is that they must be citizens but not for any specific number of years.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I am very much concerned about the amount of foreign interference with our domestic economy. It seems to me the economy at home is being directed by people who are not citizens of America.

Mr. BLOOM. I think the gentleman is right. The committee has gone into that very thoroughly.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I hope that is taken care of in this particular resolution.

Mr. BLOOM. It is.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. MATHEWS. Following the remarks by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], is it not a fact that the amount of this appropriation is entirely within the control of this body and is fixed?

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. The amount of the funds required is to be prorated, the same as with other organizations of the kind.

Mr. MATHEWS. But the proration is determined by a body outside of this Congress.

Mr. BLOOM. But there is a form and custom that has been followed for years.

Mr. MATHEWS. Whether it be form and custom, it is the fact, is it not?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. If it is prorated, will we have to pay a third of the cost, the same as we did with Bretton Woods and the stabilization fund? Are we going to have to pay one-third of this?

Mr. BLOOM. No, no; not at all. It is a different situation entirely.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RIGHTS OF FORMER OWNERS UPON REACQUIRING PROPERTY FROM THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property who reacquired such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MANASCO, WHITTINGTON, HART, HOFFMAN of Michigan, and BENDER.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5924, with Mr. FORAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday the first section of the bill had been read. It is now open to amendment.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I expressed my views in reference to this legislation yesterday, but I would like to have the attention of the sponsor of the bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], and the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] because I desire to ask a question which I wish to have answered in the RECORD as a matter of legislative reference when this matter is ultimately construed.

As I understand the situation, there was a reorganization of the Chicago & North Western Railroad Co., full and complete; also a reorganization of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad, known as the Milwaukee road, full and complete, and the road turned back to its new security holders and new managers.

Under those circumstances, is there anything in this bill that in any way interferes with or changes the status of the present management of those two roads? I will ask the gentleman from Alabama first.

Mr. HOBBS. My answer is, sir, that my understanding of the status of the two reorganizations is that there is no hope for the North Western. There is for the Milwaukee. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], the distinguished author of this bill, is more familiar than I am with the details of those two plans.

Mr. KEEFE. I would like to have that question kept pretty clearly in mind because I understand that the plan of reorganization which reorganized the Chicago & North Western Railway Co. has been approved by the court, new securities issued, and the road is now being operated by the new security holders, is that correct?

Mr. REED of Illinois. The gentleman from Wisconsin is absolutely correct.

Mr. KEEFE. So far as that railroad is concerned this bill nor any of the proposed amendments do not in any way change the established and present status so far as the North Western is concerned?

Mr. REED of Illinois. It does not, and I do not know of any manner in which any legislation could be enacted which would change the status of the North Western.

Mr. KEEFE. As to the Milwaukee road I understand that the reorganization there has been completed, the order has been executed and signed by the district court, and that company is likewise back in the hands of the new security owners.

Mr. REED of Illinois. That company has been turned over to the new security holders. I understand there is a matter pending in the Supreme Court on a writ of certiorari in connection with some matters having to do with that reorganization, but the road has been turned over to the new owners and new securities have been issued.

Mr. KEEFE. In connection with the writ of certiorari which has gone up to the United States Supreme Court in a matter involving this reorganization so far as the Milwaukee road is concerned, if the Supreme Court does not review and set aside the findings of the district court, then there is nothing in this bill that will in any way interfere with the management or the securities that have been issued, is that right?

Mr. REED of Illinois. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. And the stockholders of the Milwaukee road, like the stockholders of the Chicago & North Western, can look for no hope so far as this particular legislation is concerned?

Mr. REED of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. We find nothing in this legislation that will throw any glimmer of light to the stockholders of those two roads now that the reorganization plans have been approved and the roads have been turned back to their stockholder management under those plans?

Mr. REED of Illinois. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that amendments may be considered at any point in the bill to which they are addressed. I make this request solely in the interest of economizing in time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The balance of the bill follows:

SEC. 2. In effecting any such readjustment of financial structure, the debtor may proceed under any Federal statute or statutes providing for the relief of railroad corporations or under which such financial structure may be readjusted without resort to the provisions of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and for jurisdictional or other purposes under any such statute or statutes, the debtor shall be considered as though it had not been involved in any proceeding or proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

SEC. 3. The provisions hereof shall not limit or affect any rights which the debtor or any party in any such proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, may otherwise have to effect a voluntary readjustment of financial structure, or to a dismissal or discontinuance of proceedings pending under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

SEC. 4. The provisions hereof shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled by another railroad corporation.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, after conferring with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] and gentlemen on the other side, I would like to make this additional request: Since there is no opposition, as I understand it, to the nine committee amendments which had the unanimous approval of the Judiciary Committee and the authorization that they be offered as amendments to the Reed bill, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the nine committee amendments and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of them be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not know what these amendments are.

Mr. HOBBS. If the gentleman will allow me to make a very brief synopsis of them, it will answer his question.

In the first place, one committee amendment approved unanimously by the full Committee on the Judiciary would add as section 7 to the Reed bill, what we know as the Kefauver bill, in its entirety. That was the original McLaughlin Act which had been approved by the House, approved by the Senate, signed by the President, and had been the law for some years until, according to its terms, it expired by reason of the fact that the Senate did not enact as we did the Kefauver bill which extended the operation of that act. This engrafts it as section 7 into the Reed bill.

Similarly, the eighth amendment, to be known as section 8 of the Reed bill, adds the first seven sections of the Hobbs bill, which was passed by the House 350 to 1, and has been pending in the Senate for more than a year.

I believe there can be no possible objection to those two amendments, since the House is merely now engrafting them into the body of the Reed bill, and they are the two bills that have had unanimous approval or practically unanimous approval of the House, but both of these amendments incorporate the full bill as passed by the House except section 8 of the Hobbs bill does not now have application to the needy situation that has arisen because of the progress of reorganization in some of these roads we have left out section 8 of the Hobbs bill.

Aside from those two lengthy amendments the others are very short. There can be no objection at all, of course, after a most thorough study. For instance, the first amendment merely adds "within 60 days from the effective date of this act" meaning that application to proceed under the Reed bill should be filed within a reasonable time. They have 60 days after the adoption of this act.

The second amendment merely strikes out a comma, for the sake of proper punctuation.

Amendment No. 3 strikes out three lines on page 3 and inserts new provisions referring the case back to the Commission, that is, the ICC, in case no adjustment is effected within the 18 months allowed here. In other words, we do not want to leave the reorganization up in the air so far as the ICC is concerned if the remedial provisions of the Reed bill fail.

Amendment No. 4 strikes out section 4 and inserts a new provision to restrict holding companies, such as the Allegheny Corp.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments are as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after "therefor", insert "within 60 days from the effective date of this act."

Page 3, line 16, after "directing that the", strike out "proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, shall be resumed and brought to a conclusion, subject to the provisions and requirements of said section," and insert the following: "most recent plan of reorganization certified to the court by the Commission and the proceedings shall be retired back to the Commission for such further proceedings under said section 77, as amended, as would be had if an order was thereupon entered by the judge refusing to confirm such plan and referring the case back to the Commission under the applicable provisions of subsection (e) of said section 77, as amended."

Page 4, line 12, after "SEC. 4", strike out all of section 4 and insert the following:

"No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding any operating common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, but not excluding any holding company or other nonoperating corporation which has been held or which may be held to be a common carrier within the meaning of said act)—

"(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more railroad corporations the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and

"(B) which also owns shares of voting stock of any railroad corporation to which this act is applicable, in sufficient number to enable the owner thereof to control such carrier, shall, during the period the debtor shall be in possession of its properties and in control of the management and operation thereof under this act, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of any railroad corporation to which this act is applicable.

"SEC. 5. With respect to any debtor railroad corporation of which at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation and by a corporation owning or controlling the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby invested with plenary power and authority to require the maintenance and operation of the properties of such controlled debtor railroad corporation (including solicitation by its traffic organization) to be without discrimination in favor of one route over any other route or in favor of one connecting carrier over any other connecting carrier, to the end that the neutrality of such controlled debtor railroad corporation with respect to the solicitation and interchange of traffic with competing connecting carriers shall be assured. The term 'corporation' as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"SEC. 6. The provisions hereof shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, more than 90 percent of the aggregate number of the outstanding shares of all classes of stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled by another railroad corporation which had not on the same day nor prior thereto filed a petition for reorganization under said section 77.

"SEC. 7. The act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after chapter XIV the following:

"'CHAPTER XV—RAILROAD ADJUSTMENTS

"'ARTICLE I—JURISDICTION

In addition to the jurisdiction otherwise exercised, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction, as provided in this chapter, for postponements or modifications of debt, interest, rent, and maturities or for modifications of the securities or capital structures of railroads.

"'ARTICLE II—DEFINITIONS

"'SEC. 705. The following terms, as used in this chapter, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, shall be construed as follows:

"'(1) "Petitioner" means any carrier as defined in section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, excluding any corporation in equity receivership or in proceedings for reorganization under section 77 of this act, petitioning for a plan of adjustment, as hereinafter defined, or any corporation filing a petition under the provisions of section 711 of this chapter.

"'(5) "Securities" shall include those defined in section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, also securities in respect of which any carrier, as defined in section 20a, has assumed any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise and also certificates of deposit and all other evidences of ownership of or interest in securities.

"'(6) "Commission" refers to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"'(7) "Adjustment" shall include postponements or modifications of debt interest, rent, and maturities and modifications of the securities or capital structures.

"'SEC. 706. No creditor shall be deemed to be "affected" by any plan unless such plan proposes a modification of the evidence of debt or other instrument defining the rights of such creditor, or a modification of the security, if any, for the claim of such creditor.

"'ARTICLE III—PETITION AND POWERS OF COURT

"'SEC. 710. Any railroad corporation not in equity receivership or in process of reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act at the time of filing its petition hereunder, and which has not been in equity receivership or in process of reorganization under said section 77 within 10 years prior to the filing of such petition, which shall have—

"'(1) prepared a plan of adjustment and secured assurances satisfactory to the Commission of the acceptance of such plan from creditors holding at least 25 percent of the aggregate amount of all claims affected by said plan of adjustment (including all such affected claims against said corporation, its parents, and subsidiaries); and

"'(2) thereafter obtained an order from the Commission (but not of a division thereof) under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act authorizing the issuance or modification of securities (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation) as proposed by such plan of adjustment as filed, or as modified by, or with the approval of, the Commission, such order of the Commission to include also specific findings—

"'(a) that such corporation is not in need of financial reorganization of the character provide for under section 77 of this act;

"'(b) that such corporation's inability to meet its debts matured or about to mature is reasonably expected to be temporary only; and

"'(c) that such plan of adjustment, after due consideration of the probable prospective earnings of the property in the light of its earnings experience and of such changes as may reasonably be expected—

"'(i) is in the public interest and in the best interests of each class of creditors and stockholders;

"'(ii) is feasible, financially advisable, and not likely to be followed by the insolvency of said corporation, or by need of financial reorganization or adjustment;

"'(iii) does not provide for fixed charges (of whatsoever nature including fixed charges on debt, amortization of discount on debt, and rent for leased roads), in an amount in excess of what will be adequately covered by the probable earnings available for the payment thereof;

"'(iv) leaves adequate means for such future financing as may be requisite;

"'(v) is consistent with adequate maintenance of the property; and

"'(vi) is consistent with the proper performance by such railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, will not impair its ability to perform such service:

Provided, That in making the foregoing specific findings the Commission shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptances of such plan and of any lack of opposition thereto: Provided further, That an order of the Commission (or of a Division thereof) under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, made prior to the effective date of this chapter, authorizing the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by a plan of adjustment (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation), shall be effective for the purpose of this subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, notwithstanding failure to include therein the foregoing specific findings, if such order did include the specific findings that such proposed issuance or modification of securities is compatible with the public interest, is consistent with the proper performance by the railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, and will not impair its ability to perform such service; and

"'(3) secured assents to such plan of adjustment, or such plan of adjustment as modified by, or with approval of, the Commission, by creditors holding more than two-thirds of the aggregate amount of the claims affected by said plan, which two-thirds shall include at least a majority of the aggregate amount of the claims of each affected class, may file in the United States district court in whose territorial jurisdiction such railroad corporation has had its principal executive or principal operating office during the preceding 6 months or a greater period thereof, its petition averring that it is unable to meet its debts, matured or about to mature, and desires to carry out the plan of adjustment.

"'A copy of the order obtained from the Commission, as above provided, shall be filed with the petition and made a part thereof.

"'SEC. 711. Any corporation which has complied with subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of the first sentence of section 710, and in which corporation the majority of the capital stock having power to vote for the election of directors is owned directly, or indirectly through an intervening medium by any railroad corporation which has filed a petition hereunder, or any corporation which is a lessor of the petitioning corporation and which has complied with the aforesaid subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 710, or any corporation which is liable or obligated, contingently or otherwise, on securities issued by or on which the obligation or liability has been assumed by, the petitioning carrier corporation and which has complied with the aforesaid subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 710, may file its petition in the same court in which the petition first aforesaid shall have been filed, and such petitions shall be heard and disposed of in a single proceeding. Any corporation liable or obligated, contingently or otherwise, upon the securities of a carrier shall, with respect to such securities and any securities issued in lieu thereof and for the purposes of this chapter, be deemed a carrier within the intent and meaning of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and if such corporation is a holding company, controlling two or more carriers, it shall, to the extent provided by the Commission in its order, be subject to such of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act as, under the provisions of paragraph (3) of section 5 thereof, are applicable to a person, not a carrier, authorized by an order entered under paragraph (2) of that section to acquire control of any carrier or two or more carriers.

"'SEC. 712. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in addition to the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other sections of this act or any other act.

"'SEC. 713. Immediately following the filing of the petition, there shall be convened a special court of 3 judges in the manner provided by section 266, as amended, of the Judicial Code, and thereafter all proceedings relative to such plan or any modification thereof shall be conducted before such court. Such 3-judge court shall be vested with and shall exercise all the powers of a district court sitting in equity and all the powers as a court of bankruptcy necessary to carry out the intent and provisions of this chapter, including the classification of claims at such time and in such manner as the court may direct: Provided, however, That any one of the 3 judges constituting the special court who may be designated by the special court, may perform all functions, conduct all proceedings, and enter all orders, except that such single judge shall not hold a hearing for approval of a plan as provided in section 720 or for confirmation of a plan as provided in section 725 or enter the final decree. Any act of a single judge hereby permitted shall be subject to review by the special court on application by any party in interest filed within 30 days after said act or by order of such court on its own motion made within such period of 30 days.

"'SEC. 714. The special court, after hearing, promptly shall enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this chapter if satisfied that such petition complies with this chapter and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing such petition if not so satisfied.

"'SEC. 715. If the petition is approved by the special court, the said court, during the pendency of the proceedings under this chapter, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the petitioner and of its property wherever located to the extent which may be necessary to protect the same against any action which might be inconsistent with said plan of adjustment or might interfere with the effective execution of said plan if approved by the court, or otherwise inconsistent with or contrary to the purposes and provisions of this chapter: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the court to appoint any trustee or receiver for said properties or any part thereof, or otherwise take possession of such properties or control the operation or administration thereof.

"'ARTICLE IV—HEARINGS

"'SEC. 720. The special court shall fix a date for a hearing to be held promptly after the filing of the petition and notice of such hearing or hearings shall be given to all persons in interest in such reasonable manner as the court shall direct. In such proceeding, the court may allow such interventions of persons in interest as it may deem just and proper, but any person in interest shall have the right to present evidence and be heard thereon, in person or by attorney, with or without intervention. Any person or persons in interest who shall be permitted to intervene or who shall present evidence and be heard thereon, in person or by attorney, with or without intervention, proposing any modification of the plan of adjustment, which modification shall be adopted and which shall be found by the court to be of benefit to the petitioner or to any class of creditors of petitioner or to be in the public interest, may be allowed actual and reasonable expenses (including reasonable attorneys' fees), which expenses may be entered as a part of the decree approving and confirming the plan and the adjustment provided thereby pursuant to the provisions of section 725 of this chapter.

"'SEC. 721. After such hearing, the special court may approve the plan as filed or propose to modify such plan and as hereinafter provided approve the same as so modified. If the court shall propose to modify the plan, then: (a) if such modification substantially alters the basis for the specific findings included in the order made by the Commission under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, the plan as so proposed to be modified shall be resubmitted to the Commission and shall not be finally approved by the court until the Commission (but not a division thereof) has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by the plan as so modified (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation) making the findings required by clause (c) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, even in a case where the original order of the Commission under said section 20a was made prior to the effective date of this chapter; and (b) if such modification substantially or adversely affects the interests of any class or classes of creditors, such plan shall be resubmitted, in such manner as the court may direct, to those creditors so affected by such modification and shall not be finally approved until after (1) a hearing on such modification, to be held within such reasonable time as the court may fix, at which hearing any person in interest may object to such modification, and (2) a reasonable opportunity (within a period to be fixed by the court), following such hearing, within which such affected creditors who have assented to the plan may withdraw or cancel their assents to the plan, and failure by any such creditor to withdraw or cancel an assent within such period shall constitute an acceptance by such assenting creditor of the plan as so modified. After such authorization and finding by the Commission, where required hereby, and after such hearing and opportunity to withdraw or cancel, where required hereby, the court may make the proposed modification, and as provided in section 725 finally approve and confirm the plan as so modified.

"'SEC. 722. If the United States or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, is a creditor or stockholder, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interests or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation. If in any proceeding under this chapter the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in or claim against the debtor as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be approved or confirmed by the court except upon the acceptance of a lesser amount or of a postponement by the Secretary of the Treasury certified to the court: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount or such postponement for more than 60 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed.

"'ARTICLE V—PROCEEDINGS SUBSEQUENT TO APPROVAL OF PETITION

"'SEC. 725. If the special court shall find—

"'(1) that, at the time of the filing of said petition as provided in article III hereof, the proposed plan of adjustment had been assented to by not less than two-thirds of the aggregate amount of all claims of the petitioner affected by such plan, including at least a majority of the aggregate amount of claims of each such class;

"'(2) that the plan of adjustment as submitted or as modified by the court has been accepted as submitted or, if modified, then as modified by or on behalf of creditors affected by such plan holding more than three-fourths of the aggregate amount of the claims affected by said plan, including at least three-fifths of the aggregate amount of the claims of each affected class;

"'(3) that the plan meets the requirements of clause (c), and the petitioner meets the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, and that the plan is fair and equitable as an adjustment and as such will: (a) afford due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders and fair consideration to each class adversely affected and (b) will conform to the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders: Provided, That in making the findings required by this clause (3), the court shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptances of such plan, and of any lack of opposition thereto, and of the fact that the Commission, under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by such plan, and of the fact that the Commission has made such or similar findings;

"'(4) that all corporate action required to authorize the issuance or modification of securities pursuant to such plan shall have been duly taken either before or since the enactment of this chapter;

"'(5) that the petitioner has not, in connection with said plan or the effectuation thereof, done any act or failed to perform any duty which act or failure would be a bar to the discharge of a bankrupt, and that the plan and the acceptance thereof are in good faith and have not been made or procured by any means, promises, or acts forbidden by this act;

"'(6) that, after hearings for the purpose, all amounts or considerations, directly or indirectly paid or to be paid by or for the petitioner for expenses, fees, reimbursement, or compensation of any character whatsoever incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan, or preliminary thereto or in aid thereof, together with all the facts and circumstances relating to the incurring thereof, have been fully disclosed to the court so far as such amounts or considerations can be ascertained at the time of such hearings, that all such amounts or considerations are fair and reasonable, and to the extent that any such amounts or considerations are not then ascertainable, the same are to be so disclosed to the court when ascertained, and are to be subject to approval by the special court as fair and reasonable, and except with such approval no amounts or considerations covered by this clause (6) shall be paid; and—

"'(7) that the provisions of sections 722, 736, and 737 of this chapter have been complied with.

Said court shall file an opinion setting forth its conclusions and the reasons therefor and shall enter a decree approving and confirming such plan and the adjustment provided thereby, which decree shall be binding upon the petitioner and upon all creditors and security holders of the petitioner; and thereafter the petitioner shall have full power and authority to and shall put into effect and carry out the plan and the orders of the special court relative thereto and issue the securities provided by the plan without further reference to or authority from the Commission or any other authority, State or Federal, except where required by any law relating to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the rights of all creditors and security holders with respect to claims and securities affected by the plan shall be those provided by the plan as so approved and confirmed: Provided, however, That the title of any owner, whether as trustee or otherwise, to rolling-stock equipment leased or conditionally sold to the petitioner, and any right of such owner to take possession of such property in compliance with the provisions of any such lease or conditional sale contract, shall not be affected by the provisions of this chapter.

"'No plan shall be approved under this chapter unless the special court finds that with respect to the continuation of, or any change in, the voting rights in the petitioner, control of the petitioner, and the identity of, and the power and manner of selection of the persons who are to be directors, officers, or voting trustees, if any, upon the consummation of the plan and their respective successors, the plan makes full disclosure, is adequate, equitable, in the best interests of creditors and stockholders of each class, and consistent with public policy.

"'SEC. 726. After the special court shall have approved as properly filed a petition pursuant to article III hereof, the special court from time to time during the pendency of the proceedings hereunder, may enjoin the institutions of, or stay, for a reasonable time, any action or proceeding to enforce any right against the petitioner or its property based upon claims affected by the proposed plan of adjustment in any court, State or Federal, whether for the enforcement of any such claim or for the appointment of receivers in equity or of the institution or prosecution of a proceeding under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act or otherwise: Provided, however, That no such stay shall affect any proceeding based on or to enforce any claim which would be required to be paid if the plan of adjustment proposed by the petitioner were then in effect.

"'SEC. 727. Unless the plan of adjustment as submitted or as modified shall have been confirmed by the special court within 1 year from the date of filing the petition, the proceedings shall be dismissed unless, for good cause shown, on motion of any party in interest, the court, if satisfied that confirmation of a plan is in immediate prospect, shall determine otherwise.

"'SEC. 728. Without prejudice to existing rights of all creditors, including those affected by the plan, and as a condition to the approval of any plan by the special court, the petitioner, from and after the filing of the petition with the court and until the making of a final order by the special court approving a plan or dismissing the petition, shall continue to make or tender payments to all creditors affected by the plan of sums currently payable to such creditors equal to the amounts proposed to be paid to such creditors under the plan: Provided, That the making of such payments shall not constitute a preference within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, nor shall acceptance of such payments constitute an acceptance of a plan. If, from and after the filing of the petition with the special court, there shall be any failure to make or tender such payments, the special court, unless there is good cause shown for the failure, shall dismiss the proceedings. In finally approving any plan, the court may make or require to be made such adjustments with respect to said payments or any of them as may be necessary to make the same conform to the provisions of said plan as finally approved.

" 'SEC. 729. In providing for any such payments the petitioner may require any bond or other security, including interest coupons affected by such payments to be presented to or deposited with a paying agent or depositary named by the petitioner for appropriate stamping to show the amounts of such payment.

" 'ARTICLE VI—TAX PROVISIONS

" 'SEC. 735. The provisions of sections 1801, 1802, 3481, and 3482 of the Internal Revenue Code and any amendments thereto, unless specifically providing to the contrary, shall not apply to the issuance, transfer, or exchange of securities or the making or delivery of conveyances to make effective any plan of adjustment confirmed under the provisions of this chapter.

" 'SEC. 736. In addition to the notices elsewhere expressly provided, the clerk of the court in which any proceedings under this chapter are pending shall forthwith transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury copies of—

" '(1) every petition filed under this chapter;

" '(2) the orders approving or dismissing petitions;

" '(3) the orders approving plans as filed or as modified, together with copies of such plans as approved;

" '(4) the decrees approving and confirming plans and the adjustments provided thereby, together with copies of such plans as approved;

" '(5) the injunctions or other orders made under section 726 of this chapter;

" '(6) the orders dismissing proceedings under this chapter; and

" '(7) such other papers filed in the proceedings as the Secretary of the Treasury may request or which the court may direct to be transmitted to him.

" 'SEC. 737. Any order fixing the time for confirming a plan which affects claims or stock of the United States shall include a notice of not less than 30 days to the Secretary of the Treasury.

" 'SEC. 738. The special court shall have power to determine the amount and legality of claims of the United States for taxes or customs duties, and to order payment thereof; and the order of the special court (provided for in sec. 714) approving the petition shall have the effect of an adjudication of bankruptcy of the petitioner for the purposes of section 274 of the Internal Revenue Code and the corresponding provisions of prior and subsequent revenue acts. The running of the statute of limitations on the assessment or collection of any internal-revenue tax shall be suspended while a proceeding under this chapter is pending and until it is finally dismissed.

" 'ARTICLE VII—INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

" 'SEC. 740. If, in any application filed with the Commission pursuant to section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act for authority to issue or modify securities, the applicant shall allege that the purpose in making such application is to enable it to file a petition under the provisions of this chapter, the Commission shall take final action on such application as promptly as possible, and in any event within 120 days after the filing of such application, unless the Commission finds that a longer time, not exceeding 60 days, is needed in the public interest.

" 'ARTICLE VIII—FINAL DECREE AND REVIEW

" 'SEC. 745. Any final order or decree of the special court may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon application for certiorari made by any person affected by the plan who deems himself aggrieved within 60 days after the entry of such order or decree, pursuant to the applicable provisions of the Judicial Code.

" 'SEC. 746. In the decree approving and confirming the plan the court may require such reports of the action taken by the petitioner thereunder in the execution of the plan as may be necessary to a final disposition of the cause, and in its final decree disposing of the cause the court shall retain jurisdiction in the district court to the extent necessary to protect and enforce the rights of the parties under said plan and the orders of the court thereon.

" 'ARTICLE IX—FILING RECORD WITH COMMISSION

" 'SEC. 750. The clerk of the court in which any proceedings under this chapter are pending, shall forthwith transmit to the Interstate Commerce Commission copies of all pleadings, petitions, motions, applications, orders, judgments, decrees, and other papers in such proceedings filed with the court or entered therein, including copies of any transcripts of testimony, hearings, or other proceedings that may be transcribed and filed in such proceedings together with copies of all exhibits, except to the extent that the court finds that compliance with this section would be impracticable.

" 'ARTICLE X—TERMINATION OF JURISDICTION

" 'SEC. 755. The jurisdiction conferred upon any court by this chapter shall not be exercised by such court after November 1, 1950, except in respect to any proceeding initiated by filing a petition under section 710 hereof on or before November 1, 1950.'

"SEC. 8. Section 77 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' as amended, is amended as follows:

"1. Subsection (b) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

" 'The capitalization of the reorganized company shall not be less than the capitalization existing on the date on which the debtor's petition to the court was approved as properly filed, with such adjustment therein as may result from the issue or retirement of securities during the reorganization proceedings: Provided, That such existing capitalization does not exceed either—

" '(i) the actual investment in the debtor's properties; or

" '(ii) the valuation found by the Commission under section 19 (a) of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended (together with investments), plus expenditures for additions and betterments less retirements since the date of such valuation, whichever is the lower: And provided further, That any part of such capitalization in excess of the value of all of the debtor's property as certified by the Commission pursuant to subsection (e) shall be represented by shares of stock without par value of the reorganized company at the rate of 1 share of such stock for each $100 of such excess.'

"2. That so much of subsection (d) of such section as reads as follows: 'After the filing of such a plan, the Commission, unless such plan shall be considered by it to be prima facie impracticable, shall, after due notice to all stockholders and creditors given in such manner as it shall determine, hold public hearings,' is hereby amended to read as follows: 'After the filing of such a plan, the Commission shall name one of its members to confer with the parties in interest and to endeavor as a mediator to reconcile differences which may exist between them and unless such plan shall be considered by it to be prima facie impracticable, shall, after due notice to all stockholders and creditors given in such manner as it shall determine, hold public hearings.'

"3. That so much of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'After such hearing, and without any hearing if no objections are filed, the judge shall approve the plan if satisfied that (1) it complies with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders;", is hereby amended to read as follows: "After such hearing, and without any hearing if no objection is filed, the judge shall make full and independent judicial reexamination and review of the plan and of the evidence presented at such hearing, in the event of such hearing, and thereafter shall approve the plan if, in the exercise of his independent judgment based upon such judicial reexamination and review, he is satisfied that (1) the plan complies with the provisions of subsections (b) and (d) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class thereof, and will conform to the requirements of the Constitution and statutes of the United States; (2) the determination of value made by the Commission and certified to the court under the provisions of this subsection is supported by substantial evidence, adequately reflects the true value of the property at the time of hearing, or at the time of certification of the plan by the Commission, in the event no hearing is had before the court, and does not omit consideration of any relevant facts;'

"4. Subsection (e) of such section is amended by redesignating clauses '(2)' and '(3)' as '(3)' and '(4)', respectively.

"5. So much of the first proviso of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'Provided, That submission to any class of stockholders shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding,' is amended by striking out 'shall have affirmed the finding,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in the exercise of his independent judgment, after consideration of the evidence presented at the hearing before the court, in the event of such hearing, shall also find.'

"6. So much of the second proviso of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'Provided further, That submission to any class of creditors shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding,' is amended by striking out 'shall have affirmed the finding,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in the exercise of his independent judgment, after consideration of the evidence presented at the hearing before the court, in the event of such hearing, shall also find.'

"7. So much of the fourth paragraph of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'The value of any property used in railroad operation shall be determined on a basis which will give due consideration to the earning power of the property, past, present, and prospective, and all other relevant facts. In determining such value only such effect shall be given to the present cost of reproduction new and less depreciation and original cost of the property, and the actual investment therein, as may be required under the law of the land, in light of its earning power and all other relevant facts,' is amended by striking out 'as may be required under the law of the land' and inserting in lieu thereof 'as will conform to the requirements of the Constitution and statutes of the United States.'"

Amend the title as follows: After "as amended", insert a comma and the following: "and to further amend said act, as amended."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am certain the colloquy that took place a moment ago between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has set at rest once and for all any idea that any common stockholders anywhere at all will ever get a dime out of the properties. The enactment of this legislation is just going to provide a field day for speculators. The biggest stockholder in the New York, New Haven & Hartford is the Pennsylvania Railroad, with about 209,000 shares of stock. On yesterday I was informed by a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission that that stock was carried on the books of the Pennsylvania Railroad as being of no par value.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I understand from the colloquy between the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Alabama that it applied only to those railroads whose reorganization plans have already been approved by the court.

Mr. WALTER. That is right; those who have gone through the wringer.

Mr. RICH. But I did not think that it applied to any whose plan has not been approved.

Mr. WALTER. The earnings of other roads where the plans have not been finally approved are even lower than the earnings of the roads where the plans were approved, and in the case of which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] stated that the stockholders will not profit to any extent at all.

I am very much in favor of the amendment that the committee adopted unanimously, and I am certain that my distinguished friend from Tennessee had that in mind when he said on yesterday that I sat quietly by in the committee discussions on this legislation and did not raise my voice. Yes, I am very much in favor of making section 15 of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act permanent legislation.

Bear in mind that the roads that are now in reorganization are there under the provisions of an act known as the McLaughlin Act, which the Congress approved, for the purpose of trying to squeeze the water out of the financial structures of our railroads. That was temporary legislation. But the Reed bill proposes to change the method the Congress determined was proper in order to reach that most desirable end. The committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] offering the amendment, makes this section permanent legislation. I say that that is very significant and a very impelling reason for voting for the motion to recommit that I intend to offer, for this reason: The mere fact that the proponents of this legislation want to provide a method of reorganization which will be permanent proves conclusively to me that they know that within a very few years, perhaps months, these roads that are now in the process of being reorganized will again find themselves in reorganization. I do not want to see the kind of inequitable receiverships that existed before the enactment of the McLaughlin law, so I think that this amendment is most important, because just so sure as we are in the House of Representatives today, the railroads will, if their plans that have already been approved do not become effective, all find themselves in the process of reorganization again.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we all love the gentleman from Pennsylvania, FRANCIS WALTER, in our committee, but we cannot go along with him on things of this kind when he makes a statement such as the one he just made. For instance, he says that one of the reasons he is going to move to recommit this bill is because we make the Kefauver bill permanent legislation signifying that we know these roads will go back into reorganization. Well, I read from page 28, which is the section he is talking about:

The jurisdiction conferred upon any court by this chapter shall not be exercised by such court after November 1, 1950, except in respect to any proceeding initiated by filing a petition under section 710 thereof on or before November 1, 1950.

In other words, just as the other McLaughlin Act had, there is a derailing switch and it is not permanent. It is strictly limited to the emergency in which we are now still wallowing. We want to make it possible for these railroads to get on their feet and get out of bankruptcy. We limit the act strictly to November 1, 1950. I think that is enough on that subject.

I want to call attention to another mistake of our good friend. I will read from yesterday's RECORD—Mr. MARCANTONIO speaking to Mr. WALTER:

Will the gentleman state to the House just how many subsidiaries of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have been cornering and garnering the shares during the last year?

They are talking about the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

Mr. WALTER replied:

Mr. WALTER. One of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission told me on yesterday that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. bought, either for themselves or somebody else, every share of stock that has been sold this year in the New York, New Haven, & Hartford.

Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] would not make that statement on his own authority. He gave his authority. But whoever gave it to him was simply mistaken. So I wired Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and asked them about it. They say:

Replying to your telegram, during 1944, 1945, and 1946, we did not purchase nor offer to buy any shares of the common or preferred stock of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad for the account of customers or for our own account.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. I have in my hand a sworn statement from the secretary of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad showing that during this year Kuhn, Loeb purchased 15,940 shares of stock. In 1945 they had but 450 shares. This is a sworn statement of the secretary of the railroad and shows the purchases that have been made.

Mr. HOBBS. Yesterday you quoted as your authority "one of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission." Today you shift your ground.

I also wired because of the argument on the floor here with reference to the Pennsylvania Railroad, and I have this reply:

Your message yesterday. Neither directly nor indirectly has Pennsylvania Railroad purchased any common or preferred stock of New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad since 1944.

The same answer comes from the Pennroad Corp. saying that they had actually sold 10,000 shares of their holdings and had acquired none.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS of Florida: On page 6, line 24, substitute for the period a semicolon, and all the following: "nor shall the provisions hereof apply to any debtor railroad corporation, which did not have more than five stockholders (exclusive of directors holding only qualifying shares) none of whom is a railroad corporation, at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under said section 77."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], the author of the bill, and also to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. It is satisfactory to them and I will not take time to discuss it.

Mr. REED of Illinois. The amendment is satisfactory.

Mr. WALTER. Well, Mr. Chairman, my confusion over what we are acting on grows by the minute. We have adopted three laws. They are incorporated in the Reed bill. Now an amendment is offered that neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] nor the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] objected to. I would like to know what effect that will have on the McLaughlin bill. Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. REED of Illinois. That amendment will have no effect upon the McLaughlin Act. It merely provides that the provisions of this entire act will not apply in the case mentioned by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WALTER. By the entire act do you mean the act as amended or the act as reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. REED of Illinois. Oh, no. It would not apply to the McLaughlin Act, because the McLaughlin Act is merely tied on to this, giving the railroads that come in under this act and can qualify within 60 days, the opportunity to come in under the provisions of the McLaughlin Act. If a road in this particular instance does not apply, it would not be able to qualify anyway.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PICKETT: On page 4, after line 17, add a new section:

"SEC. 5. No readjustment of financial structure or other proceeding under this act and no order of the court or Commission in connection therewith shall relieve any carrier from the obligation of any final judgment of any Federal or State court rendered prior to January 1, 1929, against such carrier or against one of its predecessors in title, requiring the maintenance of offices, shops, and roundhouses at any place, where such judgment was rendered on account of the making of a valid contract or contracts by such carrier or one of its predecessors in title."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes on his amendment.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to voice my personal conviction that this amendment is all right and in order, and wish to make this word of explanation: This amendment would simply guarantee to Palestine, Tex., rights which have been held by the Supreme Court to be covenants running with the land. Many years ago that covenant was made. This is simply to reenact the same amendment which was included in the act of 1935, so there is no harm that could come from reenacting that saving clause which the attorneys representing Palestine, Tex., asked us to put in, to be abundantly cautious.

Mr. PICKETT. I thank the gentleman from Alabama for that statement, analysis, and explanation.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. In view of the fact that this amendment is designed obviously to meet just a local situation, can the gentleman tell me whether or not the roundhouse at Thayer, Pa., is affected because of the language to which the gentleman from Alabama referred?

Mr. PICKETT. I regret to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no knowledge of the situation to which he addresses his inquiry.

Mr. WALTER. But the gentleman will admit that the language is so broad that it might affect literally hundreds of situations throughout the United States similar to the one that he is attempting to legislate for.

Mr. PICKETT. I believe if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would study the history of the case he would see that the amendment is directed probably to only one type of situation and that is where the validity of a contract entered into by the parties in the beginning was sustained in a final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States prior to June 1, 1929.

I have submitted this amendment to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED]. They are familiar with it and other members of the committee are familiar with it. I do not care to take the time of the Committee to discuss it unless there is some objection to it. But I say this to the members of the committee that the amendment is designed to preserve the integrity and maintain the status quo of a situation that was created as far back as 1872 when the original railroad, on one hand, contracting with the county of Anderson and the city of Palestine in the State of Texas on the other, agreed to maintain the shops, general offices, and roundhouses of that railroad in the city and county in perpetuity. Adequate consideration in keeping with the contract was paid on behalf of the city and county in the sum of $150,000 in bonds, which were subsequently paid in full. A successor in title to the original contracting railroad company, for an additional consideration in the form of lands which were granted and buildings which were constructed, resulted in a continuation of the validity of that contract. The status was not changed until in 1911 litigation was started by the action of the railroad company which was not resolved finally until 1918 by the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining the court and views of the city and county. Notwithstanding that judgment, time and again the railroad company has sought to mitigate the effect of that contract and move the shops, general offices, and roundhouses out of Palestine, and to do that under the authority of the railroad reorganization provisions in the Bankruptcy Act. It has been necessary to have further litigation since the Supreme Court decision in 1918 was effectuated. It has been necessary for representatives of the city and county to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission when the railroads sought permission for reorganization and adoption of a reorganization plan in which their announced intention was to abrogate the validity of the Supreme Court decision and the contract upon which it is based. An amendment to the same effect was adapted by the Seventy-fourth Congress in its consideration of H. R. 6249.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All the gentleman is seeking to do by this amendment is to prevent the legislation now in process from disturbing the situation that has been established by decisions of the court?

Mr. PICKETT. That is entirely correct. I may say that there can be no possible reasonable objection to the amendment to maintain the status quo of a situation that the Supreme Court of the United States said in 1918 was a proper status based upon a valid contract.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Is the gentleman fearful if this legislation be enacted that the decision of the Supreme Court might be affected?

Mr. PICKETT. It might possibly be, and I base that statement upon the fact that in 1933 after that Supreme Court decision the railroad company sought the adoption of a reorganization plan in which it expressly stated at that time that if adopted it would be its intention to abrogate the decision based upon that contract and move the facilities.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. To get back to the kernel in the shell, all the gentleman wants to do is for Congress not to change by legislation the status of any existing contract?

Mr. PICKETT. That is all my amendment will have the effect of doing.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the adoption of this amendment by the Committee at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKETT] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a number of claims have been made by both the proponents and opponents of this legislation. Certainly I want all parties treated with fairness. It must be very clear, however, that one of the things involved in this legislation is the control of certain railroad companies and lines. Whenever we approach that problem we must approach it with due consideration for the public interest.

The situation with the railroads in the United States today and their relation to the Government, as well as the Government's relation to the railroads, is not of our making. It is something that has grown up over the years. You will realize that it is not exactly on a par with other business transactions in the Nation.

I want to call attention to section 5 of this proposal in H. R. 5924. It does not do what it purports to do. Section 5 would indicate that the Interstate Commerce Commission would have authority to see that these roads that are now operating as a neutral with respect to other railroads will continue to do so. This language is very misleading. We should have the Johnson amendment that is contained in the Senate bill.

Section 5 is not self-executing. There are no penalties provided. The Interstate Commerce Commission has no setup whereby it can police a railroad and its solicitation of traffic. In the Senate bill there was exempted from the provisions of the bill the D. & R. G. Railroad, which means much to the territory I represent. The First Congressional District is about 400 miles long and is traversed from east to west by the Burlington Lines. If those lines are going to share in transcontinental freight shipments it will mean much to every town on their line from Chicago to Denver. It means much to all of the railroad workers, and I have heard from some of them. But it cannot continue to do that, and Denver cannot continue to be a gateway to the West unless the Moffat Tunnel Line of the D. & R. G. is operated as a neutral. If this bill passes without the Johnson amendment the control of the D. & R. G. for all practical purposes will go to the Missouri Pacific. The Missouri Pacific has another gateway and the Moffat Tunnel Line will not be used.

I do not stand here and profess to be an expert on railroad finance, but I am thoroughly convinced that it is in the public interest to have the D. & R. G. operate as a neutral, and that it will serve the country better and it will be in line of efficient operation. I urge the Johnson amendment of the Senate bill.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER:

Page 27, line 3, after the word "court", strike out the word "may" and insert "shall."

Page 27, line 4, strike out the words "application for certiorari" and insert "upon appeal."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored during the course of the discussion of this bill in our committee to ascertain the need for a special method of taking an appeal to the courts. That was just because recently we passed, and the President signed, an administrative procedure bill which provides a uniform method of appealing from decisions of all agencies. However, for some reason unknown to me, and a reason I cannot understand, a special court of appeals is provided for. From that court there may or may not be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, so that the effect of the language in one of the bills, in the one I happen to have before me, will be to have a three-judge-court judgment substituted for that of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It is contrary to every precept to give to any court original and final jurisdiction, and the effect of the amendment that the Clerk has just read will be to provide an appeal from the decision of that three-judge court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TALBOT. In other words, this is the only place in American jurisprudence where at least one right of appeal is not given.

Mr. WALTER. This is the only instance in any statute where there is no right of appeal from the decision of the court having original jurisdiction, and it just adds to the suspicion that I have about this whole picture.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am concerned about a great many people that I know personally who have had in their families for generations common stock in these railroad companies. I am wondering why at this time, when railroads are beginning to get on their feet and are earning dividends, those folks, who have held these bonds in the hope that someday they will get some return, are to be frozen out entirely, and why this bill does not have a concern for them.

Mr. WALTER. I will say to my distinguished friend, who is always so solicitous of the welfare of the little fellow, that if they are smart, if the people the gentleman is talking about are wise, they will today dump on the market whatever shares of common stock they have, while there is some speculation in that stock, because there is nothing behind any of the stock about which the gentleman has talked. I think those who arouse in the breasts of these unfortunate investors the feeling that they are going to get something are working a cruel hoax on them.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in answer to the last statement of the distinguished gentleman, I call attention of the Members, the few of you who were not present yesterday afternoon, to the fact that I produced here then and showed and read to the House part of the certified copy made by the Interstate Commerce Commission showing that there are 21,000 individual stockholders, none of whom own an average of more than 97 shares of the common or preferred stock of the New Haven Railroad, who have been absolutely wiped out in that reorganization, because the stock was certified as being absolutely worthless, common and preferred, whereas since then—and that was 1940—they have made over and above all fixed charges a net profit of $60,000,000, and instead of having only $4,000,000 in the till they now have $64,000,000.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman can smile all he pleases, but the sworn affidavit of his own people, whom he represents, proves it, the Interstate Commerce Commission certifies it, and there is not a shadow of a doubt about it. I know he is going to say they are now running at a loss, but I can wreck any railroad I run if I want to. I know what the proposition has been.

I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TALBOT. I just want to bring to the gentleman's attention that during the years they have accumulated that $62,000,000——

Mr. HOBBS. $64,000,000. What is $2,000,000 among friends?

Mr. TALBOT. During that time they have also accumulated $102,000,000 of debts that are owed today to the bondholders, to the United States Government, and to others.

Mr. HOBBS. I challenge that statement. I do not believe it is true. I think that is the aggregate indebtedness of the road in its whole lifetime. Mark you, for 50 years it never missed a dividend, and when the squalls come up, and the storm broke, they missed a few dividends, and then merciless creditors had the stockholders completely wiped out.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. May I first go ahead and finish my statement with regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]? I hate to quarrel with my dear friend.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman, a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CHELF. Assuming they do owe $102,000,000, the fact that they have $64,000,000 in the till means that they have an indebtedness of approximately $38,000,000.

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, that is true.

Mr. CHELF. If I owe a debt of $102 and I have $64, I do not figure that I owe but $38.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. How about the assets?

Mr. HOBBS. The whole thing runs over $500,000,000, according to the certificate of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

May I answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], about his amendment. We did not care particularly about that amendment. We are perfectly willing if the Congress sees fit to upset the law that it has already written to give anybody the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. But our policy has been since the enactment of the general appellate law that we have made the decisions of the circuit court of appeals final, except in those cases in which the Supreme Court has granted a writ of certiorari. We do not have any objections to writing that amendment into the bill, and I told the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] so, provided he could show me any basis in law to justify that change from the general law. I will be glad to accept his amendment insofar as I am concerned if he can show me any authority for it.

Mr. WALTER. In every one of the three-judge courts that have been established, the appeal to the Supreme Court is an appeal as a matter of right and not on certiorari. In every single special court, even in some of the antitrust cases that go to the three-judge court. the case can be appealed to the Supreme Court as a matter of right.

Mr. HOBBS. I would be delighted to accept the gentleman's amendment if there is any authority for that statement. If the gentleman wants that amendment in, it does not matter to me.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment is well taken. The proposed statute is unque among the statutes creating special district courts in that no review is granted as a matter of right to the party seeking redress. Under our Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence we always have the right to appeal. Using the word "may" does not give the litigants the right of appeal as a matter of right. It becomes then only a matter of discretion. As has been stated, in all these special courts and in all the laws creating the special courts there is specifically given the right to an appeal, not by sufferance, but as a matter of right. I believe it would be highly unjust to deny the right of appeal in this particular instance. The right of appeal should always be safeguarded by the Congress. We should never take that right away. If you gentlemen use the word "shall" instead of the word "may," then the disgruntled litigant or the defeated litigant has no right to go to a court higher than that court which rendered the adverse decision. To my mind, that would be eminently unfair. I hope the amendment will be approved.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about the small stockholder who owns stock in these railroads that are now under reorganization, and that this bill contemplates to return to their original owners. I think everyone here knows there is no small stockholder who owns stock in the road we are talking about who is going to ever realize a dime for his stock. In that case, it seems to me we should start to think about the public interest. What is going to happen to the communities that are served by these railroads? I want to speak especially about the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co. which was mentioned by the gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. CURTIS]. I happen to know something about that railroad. During its lifetime it has either been in receivership or in trusteeship four times. To say the least, it is a marginal railroad. It always has had to struggle to exist.

Under this bill it would be compelled, now that it has its reorganization almost perfected, to start all over again.

I was a member of the Public Service Commission of my State of Utah, and as late as 1940 when this railroad, the Denver & Rio Grande, had to borrow for operating expenses. Then they come along now and say, "We are going to take the last 7 years of their operation, and if they have made operating expenses they will be returned to their owners." That is so ridiculous, in my opinion, that it should not be considered, because this railroad never has made operating expenses for many years except during the time of the war when all railroads have had all they could do to assist in the prosecution of the war. It has probably made expenses during this war period, and it will come under the provisions of this bill and will be set back 18 months in its reorganization. I am here to tell you if it goes back to its original owners it will be in reorganization again within 2 years.

The poor little stockholder is all washed out. It will be the public that will suffer, because this railroad has rendered a great community service to the West, because it has tried to serve the people.

I am going to vote against this bill. I am going to vote for its recommittal. If that fails, I am going to urge that the conference committee keep in the Senate bill the Johnson amendment which will take care of this railroad. It will be an injustice to the people that this railroad serves if this bill is passed and the reorganization is not allowed to be perfected. I am told it can be perfected within the year if you just let it alone.

I was hopeful the committee would accept the Johnson amendment and take this railroad out from the provisions of this bill. The author has refused to accept the amendment and says there is language in section 5 covering it, but in my opinion it does not meet the situation at all. In fact, it goes to the point where it sets up the Interstate Commerce Commission as the operator of a railroad, which is not the function of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as you all know.

I hope this bill will be either recommitted or defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is some indication the proponent of the amendment presently before the Committee of the Whole apparently wants to cast suspicion upon those who are the proponents of this measure which he hopes to amend.

I have a slogan in mind that the country was taught to remember in 1898. It was "Remember the Maine." In connection with this bill I would have you "Remember the North Western."

There has been discussion that the hearings did not come to the membership in time. I sent a page boy to the Judiciary Committee last Friday, almost a week after the majority leader said this bill would be on the calendar last week for consideration, and I had no trouble getting the hearings. I have had 4 or 5 days to read the entire hearings and the report of the Judiciary subcommittee reporting the bill presently before you. That is 4 or 5 days to consider a bill that does not cost the Federal Government anything. For years we have voted for billions of dollars and we had to vote up or down legislation appropriating as high as $75,000,000,000 in one bill, and with only one night to read several thousand pages of testimony. I find no merit in the claim of the opponents of the bill, that they have not had an opportunity to read the hearings. Last night and the night before I read, studied and underscored the hearings on the present bill.

So, "remember the North Western" case. I want to point out some of the facts in the hearings because this bill brings back stark realities and injustice to people in my home community. I know a little stockholder there who owned a few shares of stock in the old North Western—before reorganization. The difference between the estates of many of these little stockholders, in my opinion, being solvent and insolvent, depends upon whether these railroads are reorganized with or without the enactment of the Reed bill.

Let us look at what the ICC did in the North Western case. They promulgated a plan in 1940. At that time the North Western Railroad had $12,000,000 of surplus. Let us see what the counsel for the stockholders tried to do. By May 15 of 1943, the railroad had $83,000,000. Let me say again when the reorganization plan of the ICC was conceived they had $12,000,000. You will find that on page 57 of the hearings. At page 58 the amount on hand had increased to $83,000,000.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. If the gentleman will look at page 169 of the hearings he will find a letter from Commissioner Mahaffie concerning the North Western plan outlining this increase. The average earnings of the North Western during this 10-year period were far from sufficient to service even the debt provided for in the new capitalization.

Mr. JONES. I saw page 169 of the hearings, but the fact still remains the counsel, Mr. Walter, for the North Western stockholders' group attempted to have a large part of this $83,000,000 used to pay off the RFC loan and he did not get permission. That was in April 1943.

Just to show you the extent of injustice of the present law without the Reed bill, counsel for the small stockholders went to the court and asked for a change of the reorganization plan in view of the increased earnings. The court denied his petition. I will call to your attention that when this reorganization plan of the ICC was conceived the national income of the country was much lower than it is today. You will find in the hearings that the average annual income of the Nation, which is some key to carloadings and railroad earning power, was less than $60,000,000,000 a year. There has not been an economist inside or outside of the Government who thinks today that the national income will be less than $125,000,000,000 a year. That should be reflected in the reorganization plan of the railroads. Without the Reed bill the enlarged national income will not be considered. The stockholders will be wiped out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Changed and improved conditions in the Nation should be reflected in the reorganization plan, because it means that much more goods will be hauled over these railroads. Now, the proponents of this amendment stand here in the well of the House and say to the public, to the small stockholders who invested $100 par for each and every share, that their stock is valueless, when you look at the record of the North Western, and remember that the reorganization plan was conceived in 1940 by the Interstate Commerce Commission. When the national income was low the reorganization plan allowed the North Western capitalization of $660,000,000 for rate making purposes to be reduced to $440,000,000. When you take off the RFC loan the reorganized capitalization is somewhat lower than that. The ICC 1940 reorganization plan washed out all of the common and preferred stockholders, gave it to a closed group, the insurance and banking group, the first and second bondholders, and let them take the $100,000,000 nearly all earned during bankruptcy operations and declare a dividend with it of $15-plus per share in the reorganized company. Is that honest? Is that fair dealing with the common and preferred stockholders who invested their $100 a share in this old corporation? At least there should have been a reflection in that reorganization plan amended as of 1944 so that at the very least that $15 a share in the reorganized company that went exclusively to the insurance companies and to the investment banks should have gone to the old company junior security holders, the common and preferred stockholders and the unsecured creditors of the old company who were washed out by the ICC 1940 plan.

That would have been the decent thing to do. But the insurance and banking groups did not do the decent thing. They washed out the common and preferred stockholders and passed among themselves the $15-per-share dividend from the $100,000,000, approximately, earned during bankruptcy proceedings. "Remember the North Western."

The opponents of the Reed bill do not want to return the railroads to the stockholders of the unreorganized companies. They have no confidence in the stockholders' management. The insurance and banking groups however bought the bonds when the stockholders managed the railroads. That makes the issue crystal clear. The insurance and banking groups want to run the railroads and run the stockholders out. "Remember the North Western."

The insurance companies and the investment bankers today say, "Close out the small stockholders; wipe them out; their interest is valueless." Oh, their memories are so short. Do you remember when the bankers were running to the State legislatures asking for a moratorium on the repayment of demand deposits or authority to put a limit on the amount that could be withdrawn from deposit accounts. Banking groups said to legislatures, "Do this so that we will not have to close our doors." Do you remember the march of the insurance companies to the insurance commissioners of the 48 States to save them during the depression? Did you try in 1933 to get the cash surrender value of your life insurance policy? You could not get it because insurance commissioners gave them moratoriums. Now these same folks come before you when the small stockholders are up against the 1939 and 1940 reorganization plans, conceived when the national economy was $60,000,000,000, compared with the present-day estimates of $125,000,000,000, in effect advocating now when the drought is over, when the old mortgaged farm has fields full of grain, the livestock are fat, that they will foreclose the old homestead and dispossess the farmer. Now they say, "We will confiscate stock of the common and preferred stockholders of the railroads and give the property, lands, and rolling stock to the insurance companies, free of their investment, and with it whatever cash increment during bankruptcy we pass among ourselves as a dividend to the banks and insurance companies."

Why are they so deficient of the milk of human kindness?

No; I shall not vote for this amendment because I feel that the proponent of the amendment is against the bill. He has already announced he is going to file a motion to recommit. Before this pending amendment is acted upon he announces he is going to try to recommit the bill, kill it, wipe out, as he says, the thousands of stockholders, advise them to sell that stock on the market for the present market value of 3, 4, and 5 cents on the dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, before there is a vote on the pending amendment, which, of course, the gentleman from Ohio did not discuss at all, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be rereported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reread the Walter amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALTER) there were—ayes 65, noes 4.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

FIGHT ON RAILROAD REORGANIZATION BILL SIMILAR TO FIGHT ON SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING BONDHOLDERS' PROTECTIVE COMMITTEES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] in his first speech opposing the bill stated that a good many bankers bought a large quantity of these stocks. Later on he said that they are worthless and the holders will not get a dollar for them. Now, I do not know which of his contradictory statements is correct. I do not think these bankers would have bought them had they considered them valueless.

REALTY BOND IN SIMILAR SITUATION

In the next place, I do not quite agree that these securities are worthless. I well remember, Mr. Chairman, how in 1934 the House created a special committee, of which I was chairman, to investigate the so-called bondholders' protective committees, the receivers, trustees, and so on of defaulted real-estate securities. At that time there were outstanding, in the hands of people throughout the United States, some $20,000,000,000—$20,000,000,000, which is twenty thousand millions—of defaulted bonds outstanding, selling for the most part, at 2, 3, or perhaps 5 cents on the dollar.

BONDS ROSE AFTER INVESTIGATION

After that committee began its investigation, and showed the market prices had been beaten down by milking and manipulation by the bondholders' protective committees themselves, within only a few months many of these worthless securities reached 25 cents or more of par, and many of them eventually reached full face value on the market. I believe if this railroad reorganization bill becomes law, many of the junior security holders will realize some fair consideration on their investments which they made on the tacit approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission which permitted issue of these bonds and stocks. Railroad financiers lost no time in unloading them on the public, just as the houses of issue made the American people believe, in the lush boom days of the twenties, that real-estate bonds were gilt-edged securities.

JUNIOR OWNERS SQUEEZED OUT

In 1934 and 1935, however, the smart railroad lawyers and stock manipulators, taking advantage of the loopholes in the law and the depressed conditions, applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the benefit of the first mortgagees, the insurance companies, and big banks, for reorganization and for declaration of repudiation of the secondary securities. The ICC permitted these shrewd lawyers to influence them, and the junior securities were wiped out.

Even at that time I considered such action unfair and unjustified, and soon thereafter the railroads began coming back by improved business rather than because of any great relief through repudiation, and have continued to increase their earnings so that they have been able to repay most of their indebtedness, have paid back interest on the first securities, and have accumulated vast surpluses.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the committee appreciates the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who back in the dark days of 1932 began this movement to clean up and stamp out the racket of prodigious attorneys' fees, receivers' fees, and trustees' fees in the reorganization of corporations and railroads. He was the trail blazer in this movement.

Mr. SABATH. I think the gentleman from Alabama, an outstanding member of the Committee on the Judiciary, with whom I may have differed on some legislation, but who aided me in obtaining the passage of the so-called Chandler Act to protect the interests of real-estate bondholders and who materially assisted me in obtaining favorable action in the House on a second measure which I had introduced which provided for a Conservator in Bankruptcy in real estate and other business reorganizations, and the placing of receivers and referees on a salary basis with the elimination of excessive fees allowed by the courts. Unfortunately this second bill died in the Senate in the closing days of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

QUOTATIONS FROM DEBATE

While I am satisfied that many thousands of bondholders at that time appreciated what was done for them, I regret the failure of the legislation, which would have put to an end the allowance by the courts of excessive fees to the committees, and to receivers, trustees, and lawyers. I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama that while I appreciated the many commendatory letters which I received from bondholders for my efforts I appreciate more today his laudatory statement than those complimentary letters. In this connection, I shall take the privilege of inserting in the RECORD excerpts from speeches of Members who served on the Select Committee To Investigate Real Estate Bondholders Reorganizations bearing on the work and accomplishments of the committee, and made some 6 months after the committee had concluded its work and ceased its functions.

First I shall quote from the remarks of the Honorable Thomas O'Malley, of Wisconsin, who served on that committee, and who, since leaving the House, has made a wonderful record as an administrator of the Wages and Hours Act in the western district, and in that capacity has recovered millions of dollars in wages for employees; this is quoted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 81, part 3, at page 2906:

Mr. O'MALLEY. The last report of our committee, which I have before me, shows that we have forced reduction of fees in over 600 cases, and in the Paramount-Publix case alone we forced a reduction of a fee, when the judge was ready to grant it, of $3,000,000, and that money went back into the assets of the bondholders, and the bondholders will eventually receive it in interest and dividends.

This last report of our committee gives a comprehensive summary of the work we have performed. More than 20 public hearings have been held, extending over 56 full days. We have forced reductions in scores of cases by submitting to the judges sitting on these cases facts which our investigators produced in the course of the hearings. Many of the judges have written our committee praising us for the aid we have been to their courts in seeing that justice was done the bondholders.

I am going to conclude by saying this about the chairman of the committee, under whom I have been proud to serve: He has conducted this committee without fear or favor to anyone * * * I am proud to stand on the side of our dean.

I now quote from the speech of the Honorable Francis D. Culkin, Republican, of New York, who served on the Select Investigating Committee for over 2 years, who ably worked in ferreting out the machinations of many of the unscrupulous bondholders protective committees, and whose aid and counsel I always sought. Excerpts from his remarks are from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 81, part 3, at page 2908, as follows:

Some months ago at the request of the distinguished minority leader I went upon the Sabath committee for the purpose of investigating the issue of real estate bonds and the maladministration of the committees that had been in charge. I did so unwillingly, but under the urge of the distinguished minority leader I entered upon that task.

The situation in America then was appalling. Approximately $10,000,000 of these bonds were in default. These bonds were not held by the conventional stock market gambler but by people who had reached the evening of life, people who had invested their little all for old-age security, retired school teachers, retired businessmen, under the high-powered salesmanship of that group that peddled those bonds. They were assured that these bonds rested upon the soil, upon the land, and that in their values they were eternal.

So this investment reached to the life savings, to the life earnings of some 4,000,000 people of America, who, as I said, had reached the evening of life.

Mr. Speaker, what did we find in this investigation? We found that bonds totaling some twelve to fourteen billion dollars had in fact been issued on deliberately inflated values. These bonds were predestined to default. When the dark hours of 1929 and subsequent years came they did default.

Then what happened? Protective committees were formed by the houses of issue, which called the bonds in and obtained powers of attorney from these far-scattered bondholders.

* * * * *

The bonds were then turned over by these houses of issue to the real estate sharks who usually bought the property at 15 cents on the dollar or less. The mortgage was foreclosed, and then another pilgrimage was made to the court and another division of proceeds was made. Thus, the bondholders were wiped out.

Mr. Speaker, this is what was occurring when the committee came into the picture.

I was impressed when I saw these bondholders who were cursing, if you please, the impotence of the Federal and State Governments. When this bond committee came into being we stopped that sort of performance. We were not always polite. We called a spade a spade. We were vigorous, but we stopped the performance. Mr. Speaker, we saved these bondholders at least $2,000,000,000 as a result of our labors.

* * * * *

Now in the conduct of the affairs of this committee, I have been greatly impressed with the sound character and absolute decency of the distinguished chairman, Judge SABATH. I am going to stay on the side of Judge SABATH in this controversy. I have not always agreed with Judge SABATH on the proceedings of the committee. We have differed. * * * I insist that, working with the tools it had, this committee has done a splendid job; not always, perhaps, entirely formal in its methods, but ever on the side of the bondholders, and ever against these oppressive, high-powered groups, these ghouls who were picking the carcasses of those properties even as did the carpetbaggers that of the fallen Confederacy.

Mr. Chairman, I now include excerpts from a speech by another Republican who was a member of that committee during its entire life, and has established a splendid record of constructive legislation, who said in part, as shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 81, part 3, at page 2910:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have served on the Sabath committee from its inception. I have attended every hearing in Chicago, every hearing in Detroit and in Milwaukee, and some of the hearings in New York and Philadelphia. I could speak an hour upon the accomplishments of the distinguished chairman of the committee, and when it was all over it could be boiled down into these words: I have found him to be of unimpeachable integrity ever since he has been a member of the committee and ever since he has been a Member of this House.

I shall allude to only one thing that may be of interest. This committee delved into a situation in one of the Northeastern States, where men who it is alleged bore my own party label, had been dipping into the treasury of a defunct corporation long after it had gone into insolvency, and dissipated the money of the stockholders to the extent of several million dollars. It came to our attention just shortly before election day, 1934. The distinguished chairman of this committee, who is a Democraat, out of respect for any sensibility that the minority members might have and to repel the faintest breath of suspicion that the committee was being used as an instrument for political advantage, said to us that he would let the matter ride until election day was over. * * * It is only added evidence of the great and fine spirit with which the chairman conducted this committee and how solicitious he was about the interest of the minority members.

He has labored early and late, in season and out, at the expense of his own health to achieve an excellent piece of work.

I could quote at length from many other Members of that Congress—from Republican Leader Bertrand Snell, of New York, from former Congressman Claude Fuller, of Arkansas, and from many others—but I shall not encumber the RECORD with so many remarks lauding the work of the committee and, if I may be permitted to say so, its chairman.

Mr. Chairman, coming back to the railroad reorganization legislation now before us, I have in my possession hundreds upon hundreds of letters from aged men and women from every section of the United States pleading for the passage of this legislation to enable them to recover at least a portion of what was, in many instances, their life savings invested in these railroad securities.

Some of the railroads have been in receivers' hands many times and for many years, and I feel that the bondholders who are the rightful owners should have the right to eliminate the receivers, trustees, and lawyers who have been growing fat from the exorbitant fees which they have been receiving to the detriment of thousands of junior security holders. Just a few days ago it came to my notice that a judge had approved the payment of $850,000 or $860,000 in fees to receivers, trustees, and lawyers in a railroad reorganization proceeding. That is a fair example of the allowance of unconscionably high fees paid in other railroad reorganizations.

Had my "conservator in bankruptcy" been enacted, receivers and referees in bankruptcy would have been placed on a fixed salary, and these exorbitant and unjustified fees would have been prohibited, and railroads and other corporations and real estate would have been kept out of the clutches of receivers and self-appointed trustees.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me say that the bill before us aims to replace the roads in the hands of the actual owners who, it is believed, will deal fairly and decently with the thousands of junior security holders, and I believe that the bill should pass.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, statements were made yesterday and today by opponents of this bill that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad now owes Federal, State, and municipal governments various taxes to the total of $30,000,000. I hold in my hand a certified copy dated the 24th day of July 1946 of the title page and pages 200 and 201 of the 1945 annual report of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. as filed with the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the balance sheet on page 201, taxes accrued at the beginning of the year 1945 are shown as $20,251,665, but at the end of 1945 they are shown to be only $4,813,101, so practically all of the taxes had been paid.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] spoke about the North Western. Your Committee on the Judiciary had that in mind several years ago. We foresaw what would happen to the North Western, and discussed it many times in our Subcommittee on Bankruptcy and Reorganization. In the Seventy-eighth Congress the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] introduced his bill, which we believe would have taken care of the North Western and would have saved the preferred and common stockholders and the unsecured creditors from being eliminated. But the thing that defeated us in the Seventy-eighth Congress was delay, delay, delay, and more delay. We held extensive hearings upon that bill. All the persons who were interested appeared before our subcommittee. They asked for additional time to file briefs, statements, and so on, and we allowed it to them, but we allowed it once or twice too often. We came to the end of the session just as we are coming to the end of this session, and we were unable to get that bill onto the floor of the House.

In the next session the Hobbs bill came to the floor of the House early and was passed with only one dissenting vote. But in the meantime the North Western case was disposed of. The preferred and common stocks of that great railroad were wiped out, as well as $40,000,000 of unsecured claims.

By the time this reorganization was completed, there was over $100,000,000 in the treasury, all of which was turned over to the new organization. It is a significant fact that when this new company elected its directors—who were these directors elected by the new owners of the Chicago & North Western? And who were the voting trustees selected? Three of those directors and voting trustees were men who had appeared before the subcommittee—men who did everything in their power to defeat the Hobbs bill in the Seventy-eighth Congress. They were successful. Delay was what defeated us in the Seventy-eighth Congress, and they are hoping that the same tactics will be able to defeat this legislation today.

Willful men with the same purposes in mind appeared a few months ago before the Senate committee which was considering legislation similar to that now before the House. The same technique was employed. If by any chance this legislation should not be enacted into law, I suggest a perusal of the list of witnesses opposing the Senate bill, for candidates for future directorships on these other roads that are held in captivity by section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FORAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further prceeedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, pursuant to House Resolution 687, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WALTER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALTER moves that the bill, H. R. 5924, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALTER) there were—ayes 41, noes 83.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 229, answered "present" 2, not voting 105, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the rule, the Chair lays before the house the bill (S. 1253) to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes, for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress, in order to promote the public interest in avoiding the deterioration of service by railroads and the interruption of employment which inevitably attend the threat of financial difficulties and which follow upon financial collapse and in order to promote the public interest in increased stability of values of railroad securities with resulting greater confidence therein of investors, to assure, insofar as possible, continuity of sound financial condition of said common carriers, to preserve the investments of security holders to the fullest possible extent, to prevent forfeitures of investments, and to enable said common carriers, insofar as possible, to avoid prospective financial difficulties, inability to meet debts as they mature, and insolvency. To assist in accomplishing these ends and because certain classes of the obligations of such carriers are in the usual case held by a very large number of holders, and further to enable modification and reformation of provisions of the aforesaid classes of obligations and of provisions of the instruments pursuant to which they are issued or by which they are secured in cases where such modification and reformation shall have become necessary or desirable in the public interest in order to avoid obstruction to or interference with the economical, efficient, and orderly conduct by such carriers of their affairs, it is deemed necessary to provide means, in the manner and with the safeguards herein provided, for the alteration and modification, without the assent of every holder thereof, of the provisions of such classes of obligations and of the instruments pursuant to which they are outstanding or by which they are secured.

SEC. 1. It shall be lawful (any express provision contained in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding), with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission), as provided in paragraph (2) hereof, for a carrier as defined in section 20a of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act (1) to alter or modify (a) any provision of any class or classes of its bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness (whether secured, unsecured, matured, or unmatured), issued under any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument of like nature, such bonds, notes, debentures, or other evidences of indebtedness being hereinafter in this section sometimes called "obligations"; (b) any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument pursuant to which any class of its obligations shall have been issued or by which any class of its obligations is secured: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any equipment-trust certificates in respect of which a carrier is obligated, or to any evidences of indebtedness of a carrier the payment of which is secured in any manner solely by equipment, or to any instrument, whether an agreement, lease, conditional-sale agreement, or otherwise, pursuant to which such equipment-trust certificates or such evidences of indebtedness shall have been issued or by which they are secured.

(2) Whenever an alteration or modification is proposed under paragraph (1) hereof, the carrier seeking authority therefor shall, pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, present an application to the Commission. Upon presentation of any such application, the Commission may, in its discretion, but need not, as a condition precedent to further consideration, require the applicant to secure assurances of assent to such alteration or modification by holders of such percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of the obligations affected by such alteration or modification as the Commission shall in its discretion determine. If the Commission shall not require the applicant to secure any such assurance, or when such assurances as the Commission may require shall have been secured, the Commission shall set such application for public hearing and the carrier shall give such notice of such hearing in such manner, by advertisement or otherwise, as the Commission may find practicable and may direct, to holders of such of its classes of securities and to such other persons in interest as the Commission shall determine to be appropriate and shall direct. If the Commission, after hearing, in addition to making (in any case where such alteration or modification involves an issuance of securities) the findings required by paragraph (2) of said section 20a, shall find that, subject to such terms and conditions and with such amendments as it shall determine to be just and reasonable, the proposed alteration or modification—

(a) is within the scope of paragraph (1);

(b) will be in the public interest;

(c) will be in the best interests of the carrier and of the holders of each class of its obligations affected by such modification or alteration; and

(d) will not be adverse to the interests of the holders of any other class of the carrier's securities or to the interests of any creditor of the carrier not affected by such modification or alteration,

then (unless the applicant carrier shall withdraw its application) the Commission shall cause the carrier, in such manner as it shall direct, to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any) to the holders of each class of its obligations affected thereby, for acceptance or rejection. All letters, circulars, advertisements, and other communications, and all financial and statistical statements, or summaries thereof, to be used in soliciting the assents or the opposition of such holders shall, before being so used, be submitted to the Commission for its approval as to correctness and sufficiency of the material facts stated therein. If the Commission shall find that as a result of such submission the proposed alteration or modification has been assented to by the holders—

(i) of at least 66⅔ percent of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected thereby; or

(ii) of less than 66⅔ percent but not less than 51 percent of any particular class or classes of securities affected, and the Commission, after hearing, finds that such reduction in percentage will be just and reasonable and in the public interest; or

(iii) in any case where 66⅔ percent thereof is held by fewer than 25 holders, of such larger percentage, if any, as the Commission, after hearing, finds will be just and reasonable and in the public interest;

the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification upon the terms and conditions and with the amendments, if any, so determined to be just and reasonable. Such order shall make provision as to the time when such alteration or modification shall become and be binding, which may be upon publication of a declaration to that effect by the carrier, or otherwise, as the Commission may determine. Any alteration or modification which shall become and be binding pursuant to the approval and authority of the Commission hereunder shall be binding upon each holder of any obligation of the carrier of each class affected by such alteration or modification, and upon any trustee or other party to any instrument under which any such class of obligations shall have been issued or by which it is secured, and when any alteration or modification shall become and be binding the rights of each such holder and of any such trustee or other party shall be correspondingly altered or modified.

(3) For the purposes of this section a class of obligations shall be deemed to be affected by any modification or alteration proposed only (a) if a modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of such class of obligations, or (b) if any modification or alteration is proposed as to any provision of any instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations shall have been issued or shall be secured: Provided, That in any case where more than one class of obligations shall have been issued and be outstanding or shall be secured pursuant to any instrument, any alteration or modification proposed as to any provision of such instrument, which does not relate to all of the classes of obligations issued thereunder, shall be deemed to affect only the class or classes of obligations to which such alteration or modification is related. For the purpose of the finding of the Commission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section as to whether the required percentage of the aggregate principal amount outstanding of each class of obligations affected by any proposed alteration or modification has assented to the making of such alteration or modification, any obligation which secures any evidence or evidences of indebtedness of the carrier or of any company controlling or controlled by the carrier shall be deemed to be outstanding unless the Commission in its discretion determines that the proposed alteration or modification does not materially affect the interests of the holder or holders of the evidence or evidences of indebtedness secured by such obligation. Whenever any such pledged obligation is, for said purposes, to be deemed outstanding, assent in respect of such obligation, as to any proposed alteration or modification, may be given only (any express or implied provision in any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, note, or other instrument to the contrary notwithstanding) as follows: (a) where such obligation is pledged as security under a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, pursuant to which any evidences of indebtedness are issued and outstanding, by the holders of a majority in principal amount of such evidences of indebtedness, or (b) where such obligation secures an evidence or evidences of indebtedness not issued pursuant to such a mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, by the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness; and in any such case the Commission, in addition to the submission referred to in paragraph (2) of this section, shall cause the carrier in such manner as it shall direct to submit the proposed alteration or modification (with such terms, conditions, and amendments, if any, as the Commission shall have determined to be just and reasonable) for acceptance or rejection, to the holders of the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding pursuant to such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or to the holder or holders of such evidence or evidences of indebtedness not so issued, and such proposed alteration or modification need not be submitted to the trustee of any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, but assent in respect of any such obligation shall be determined as hereinbefore in this section provided. For the purpose of any such assent the evidences of indebtedness issued and outstanding under any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument shall be determined by the Commission.

(4) (a) Any authorization and approval hereunder of any alteration or modification of a provision of any class of obligations of a carrier or of a provision of any instrument pursuant to which a class of obligations has been issued, or by which it is secured, shall be deemed to constitute authorization and approval of a corresponding alteration or modification of the obligation of any other carrier which has assumed liability in respect of such class of obligations as guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise: Provided, That such other carrier consents in writing to such alteration or modification of such class of obligations in respect of which it has assumed liability or of the instrument pursuant to which such class of obligations has been issued or by which it is secured, and such consent having been given, any such corresponding alteration or modification shall become effective, without other action, when the alteration or modification of such class of obligations or of such instrument shall become and be binding.

(b) Any person who is liable or obligated contingently or otherwise on any class or classes of obligations issued by a carrier shall, with respect to such class or classes of obligations, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a carrier.

(5) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary and any carrier, in respect of any alteration or modification authorized and approved by the Commission hereunder, shall have full power to make any such alteration or modification and to take any actions incidental or appropriate thereto, and may make any such alteration or modification and take any such actions, and any such alteration or modification may be made without securing the approval of the Commission under any other section of the Interstate Commerce Act or other paragraph of this section, and without securing approval of any State authority, and any carrier and its officers and employees and any other persons, participating in the making of an alteration or modification approved and authorized under the provisions of this section or the taking of any such actions, shall be, and they hereby are, relieved from the operation of all restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to make and carry into effect the alteration or modification so approved and authorized, in accordance with the conditions and with the amendments, if any, imposed by the Commission. Any power granted by this section to any carrier shall be deemed to be in addition to and in modification of its powers under its corporate charter or under the laws of any State. The provisions of this section shall not affect in any way the negotiability of any obligation of any carrier or of the obligation of any carrier which has assumed liability in respect thereto.

(6) The Commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier which shall hereafter secure from the Commission approval and authorization of any alteration or modification under this section, which shall show, in such detail as the Commission may require, the action taken by the carrier in the making of such alteration or modification.

(7) The provisions of this section are permissive and not mandatory and shall not require any carrier to obtain authorization and approval of the Commisssion hereunder for the making of any alteration or modification of any provision of any of its obligations or of any class thereof or of any provision of any mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, which it may be able lawfully to make in any other manner, whether by reason of provisions for the making of such alteration or modification in any such mortgage, indenture, deed of trust, or other instrument, or otherwise: Provided, That the provisions of paragraph (2) of said section 20a, if applicable to such alteration or modification made otherwise than pursuant to the provisions of this section, shall continue to be so applicable.

(8) The provisions of paragraph (6) of said section 20a, except the provisions thereof in respect of hearings, shall apply to applications made under this section. In connection with any order entered by the Commission pursuant to paragraph (2) hereof, the Commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any such order, subject always to the requirements of said paragraph (2).

(9) The provisions of subdivision (a) of section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall not apply to the solicitation by or on behalf of a carrier of assents (or assurances of assents) by holders of its obligations to a proposed alteration or modification pursuant to this section.

(10) The Commission shall have the power to make such rules and regulations appropriate to its administration of the provisions of this section as it shall deem necessary or desirable.

SEC. 2. (1) All proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, whether before the Interstate Commerce Commission or United States courts, relating to the preparation or effectuation of plans of reorganization of each carrier by railroad as defined in said section 20a (1) whose properties on the effective date of this section or at any time thereafter are in the custody of the United States courts, and—

(a) whose gross railway operating revenues for any of the calendar years 1942 to 1944, inclusive, were in excess of $50,000,000; or shall be forthwith suspended and discontinued as of the effective date of this section.

(2) Carriers to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable shall institute proceedings and file application under section 1 of this act as expeditiously as possible but in no event later than 6 months after the effective date of this section, of such longer period as the Commission, on application, may approve.

(3) The properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall continue in the custody of the United States courts having custody of them; except that, the following portions of said section 77 shall not be applicable in any such case:

(a) The first two paragraphs of subsection (b).

(b) Subdivision (1) of subsection (c).

(c) The first five sentences and the first seven words of the sixth sentence of subdivision (2) of subsection (c).

(d) Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (k).

In addition to the foregoing exceptions and for the purpose of applying to such carriers in the cases in which and during the period for which such custody is held under said section 77, and pending the consummation of proceedings under section 1 of this act, the word "debtor" shall be substituted for the words "trustee or trustees" wherever such latter words occur in subdivisions (3), (5), (9), and (10) of subsection (c), and subsections (i) and (o), of said section 77. The final determination heretofore or hereafter made in the United States courts with respect to the relative priorities as between the respective classes of security holders, the subordination of the interest of a creditor or security holder of the debtor to the interest of other creditors or security holders, or the validity, amount and priority of any claim shall continue in full force and effect. Nothing herein is intended or shall be construed to modify or rescind any such determination or to prevent or delay the prosecution to final determination of any such issue now pending, and not yet finally determined, in the United States courts.

(4) The proceedings with respect to any such carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act shall be dismissed upon consummation of proceedings affecting such carrier under section 1 of this act, or upon payment of its matured, unpaid obligations, or the making of other arrangements with reference to such obligations satisfactory to the owners of the claims therefor, and such proceedings may be dismissed under the conditions and in the manner prescribed in subsection (g) of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

(5) The appointment, term of office, powers, authority, compensation and fees of each trustee appointed by the court, and of each counsel of such trustee, shall be terminated on or before 30 days after the effective date of this section. The United States court having custody of the properties of any carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section shall have the power, in its discretion, to require the carrier to appoint the present trustee or trustees in a managerial or lesser capacity, for the performance of such duties in behalf of such carrier as the court may specify, for such period or periods during said proceeding and under such terms and conditions as the court may specify; the court shall also have the power to terminate such services and appointment.

(6) If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of any such carrier, the President of the United States or any officer or agency he may designate, is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interest or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation.

(7) The Commission shall designate one or more qualified members of its staff to serve as mediator or mediators in each of the proceedings under section 1 with respect to carriers specified under paragraph (1) of this section for the purpose of bringing the different classes of creditors and other security holders together, of being available to advise with them, of assisting in the effectuation of changes, compromises, arrangements, negotiations, and dealings with the various classes of creditors and other security holders and with individuals, groups, and committees representing creditors or other security holders, of assisting in expediting all stages of the proceedings and the early termination and the consummation of all transactions hereunder, including all steps requisite for the effectuation thereof.

(8) In proceedings under section 1 with respect to a carrier specified in paragraph (1) of this section the Commission shall have the power, in its discretion, to submit to holders of obligations, any proposed alteration or modification affecting them which the Commission has caused the carrier to submit to such holders under the provisions of the fourth sentence of paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof; in the event that it is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by or on behalf of creditors of each class to which submission is required under section 1 holding more than two-thirds in amount of the total of the allowed claims of such class which have voted on said alteration or modification, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the proposed alteration or modification as provided in said paragraph (2) of section 1 hereof: Provided, That it shall enter such order in any case in which such alteration or modification has not been so accepted by the creditors of any class or classes if it finds, after hearing, that such rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests of those rejecting them and all the relevant facts.

(9) If after having submitted a proposed alteration or modification to holders of affected obligations as provided in paragraph (8), the Commission shall not have entered an order approving and authorizing such proposed alteration or modification within a period of 12 months following the date of the filing of an application in accordance with paragraph (2) of this section, or such extended periods as the Commission on application therefor may approve, then the Commission, after hearings, shall formulate and submit to holders of affected obligations such alteration or modification as in its opinion meets the standards set forth in section 1 above; in applying such standards of section 1 for the purpose of any such alteration or modification under this paragraph, the Commission shall give full effect to all changes, facts, and developments since 1940, including, without limitation, for such period total railway operating revenues, operating expenses and other charges, net earnings, the full effect of amortization deductions on earnings of past and future years, improvements to the property, the effect of the released collateral through past or future payment of loans, cash and net current assets, retirements and purchases of debt, including retirements and purchases at a discount that have been made or that can reasonably be made, adjustment and reduction of interest rates on outstanding debt that may be made including the adjustment and reduction of interest rates for prior years. In the event the Commission is satisfied that such alteration or modification has been accepted by the percentages required for acceptance under the provisions of section 1 or of paragraph (8) of this section (or, if not so accepted, its finds after hearing as provided in paragraph (8) that such rejection is not reasonably justified) it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification, unless it finds that, prior to the entry of such order, the alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8) has been accepted by the percentages required by the provisions of that paragraph or of section 1, in which event it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such alteration or modification submitted under paragraph (8).

(10) No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding a common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act)—

(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more carriers the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and

(B) which also owns shares of voting stock of any carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable, in sufficient number to enable the owner thereof to control such carrier, shall, during the proceedings under section 1, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of such carrier to which paragraph (1) of this section is applicable.

(11) The provisions of this section shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act as amended, more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation and/or by a corporation owning or controlling more than 90 percent of the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation. The term "Corporation" as used in this paragraph shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act.

SEC. 20d. If any provision of section 1 or 2, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of such sections and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOBBS moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill S. 1253, and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 5924, as amended, as follows:

"That if the properties of any railroad corporation, debtor in a proceeding pending under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, shall have produced average annual earnings during the period of the preceding seven calendar years sufficient to pay the fixed charges of the said debtor in the said years, and the judge shall so find, the judge upon application therefor within 60 days from the effective date of this act by the debtor or by any other party in the proceedings shall enter an order directing the return of the possession of the said properties and the management and operation thereof to the debtor upon the following condition:

"1. That the debtor shall proceed immediately to effect such readjustment of its financial structure as in the light of the present prospective earnings and of other relative facts and circumstances may be consistent with sound financial practice;

"2. That if within a period of 18 months, or such extended periods as the judge upon application therefor may approve, following the entry of such order, (a) the several classes of security holders shall provide a plan for readjustment of such financial structure, and (b) such readjustment provides for such reduction in fixed charges as may be consistent with sound financial practice, and (c) the Interstate Commerce Commission shall authorize the issuance of such new securities as may be required by such readjustment, and (d) the judge shall so find, the judge upon application therefor by the debtor or by any other party in the proceedings, shall enter an order dismissing the proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and providing for or requiring, the transfer by the trustees or any other party or parties in possession of the properties of the debtor pursuant to order of the court of all their right, title, and interest in and to the properties to the debtor, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall dismiss the proceedings before that Commission for the reorganization of the debtor under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"3. That if upon termination of the said period of 18 months or such extended period as the judge may approve, an order shall not have been entered by the judge as provided in the foregoing subdivision 2, the judge shall enter an order providing for the return of possession of the properties to the trustees or to such successor trustees as may be appointed pursuant to the provisions of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, or to any other party or parties previously in possession of the properties of the debtor pursuant to order of the court, and directing that the most recent plan of reorganization certified to the court by the Commission and the proceedings shall be referred back to the Commission for such further proceedings under said section 77, as amended, as would be had if an order was thereupon entered by the judge refusing to confirm such plan and referring the case back to the Commission under the applicable provisions of subsection (e) of said section 77, as amended.

"SEC. 2. In effecting any such readjustment of financial structure, the debtor may proceed under any Federal statute or statutes providing for the relief of railroad corporations or under which such financial structure may be readjusted without resort to the provisions of section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and for jurisdictional or other purposes under any such statute or statutes, the debtor shall be considered as though it had not been involved in any proceeding or proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"SEC. 3. The provisions hereof shall not limit or affect any rights which the debtor or any party in any such proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, may otherwise have to effect a voluntary readjustment of financial structure, or to a dismissal or discontinuance of proceedings pending under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"SEC. 4. No holding company, individual, group, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity (excluding any operating common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, but not excluding any holding company or other nonoperating corporation which has been held or which may be held to be a common carrier within the meaning of said act)—

"(A) which exercises direct or indirect control of one or more railroad corporations the properties of which are not in the custody of a court in proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and shall, during the period the debtor shall be in possession of its properties and in control of the management and operation thereof under this act, vote such shares for the election of more than a minority of the directors of any railroad corporation to which this act is applicable.

"SEC. 5. No readjustment of financial structure or other proceeding under this act and no order of the court or Commission in connection therewith shall relieve any carrier from the obligation of any final judgment of any Federal or State court rendered prior to January 1, 1929, against such carrier or against one of its predecessors in title, requiring the maintenance of offices, shops, and roundhouses at any place, where such judgment was rendered on account of the making of a valid contract or contracts by such carrier or one of its predecessors in title.

"SEC. 6. With respect to any debtor railroad corporation of which at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, the outstanding voting stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by voting trust or otherwise, by another railroad corporation and by a corporation owning or controlling the outstanding voting stock of another railroad corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby invested with plenary power and authority to require the maintenance and operation of the properties of such controlled debtor railroad corporation (including solicitation by its traffic organization) to be without discrimination in favor of one route over any other route or in favor of one connecting carrier over any other connecting carrier, to the end that the neutrality of such controlled debtor railroad corporation with respect to the solicitation and interchange of traffic with competing connecting carriers shall be assured. The term 'corporation' as used in this section shall be deemed to include its trustees appointed under the aforesaid section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended.

"SEC. 7. The provisions hereof shall not apply if at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, more than 90 percent of the aggregate number of the outstanding shares of all classes of stock of the debtor railroad corporation shall have been owned or controlled by another railroad corporation which had not on the same day nor prior thereto filed a petition for reorganization under said section 77; nor shall the provisions hereof apply to any debtor railroad corporation, which did not have more than five stockholders (exclusive of directors holding only qualifying shares) none of whom is a railroad corporation, at the time of filing the petition for reorganization under said section 77.

"SEC. 8. The act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting after chapter XIV the following:

"'CHAPTER XV—RAILROAD ADJUSTMENTS

"'ARTICLE I—JURISDICTION

"'SEC. 700. In addition to the jurisdiction otherwise exercised, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction, as provided in this chapter, for postponements or modifications of debt, interest, rent, and maturities or for modifications of the securities or capital structures of railroads.

"'ARTICLE II—DEFINITIONS

"'SEC. 705. The following terms, as used in this chapter, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, shall be construed as follows:

"'(1) "Petitioner" means any carrier as defined in section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, excluding any corporation in equity receivership or in proceedings for reorganization under section 77 of this act, petitioning for a plan of adjustment, as hereinafter defined, or any corporation filing a petition under the provisions of section 711 of this chapter.

"'(2) "Claims" includes debts whether liquidated or unliquidated, certificates of deposits of securities (other than stock and option warrants to subscribe to stock), including demands and obligations of whatever character made, assumed, or guaranteed by the petitioner.

"'(3) "Debt" shall be considered to include all claims held or owned by "creditors" as hereinafter defined.

"'(4) "Creditors" shall include all holders of claims, demands, and obligations of whatever character against the petitioner or its property, whether or not such claims would otherwise constitute provable claims in bankruptcy, including the holders of claims made, assumed, or guaranteed by the petitioner.

"'(5) "Securities" shall include those defined in section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, also securities in respect of which any carrier, as defined in section 20a, has assumed any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, endorser, surety, or otherwise, and also certificates of deposit and all other evidences of ownership of or interest in securities.

"'(6) "Commission" refers to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"'(7) "Adjustment" shall include postponements or modifications of debt, interest, rent, and maturities and modifications of the securities or capital structures.

"'SEC. 706. No creditor shall be deemed to be "affected" by any plan unless such plan proposes a modification of the evidence of debt or other instrument defining the rights of such creditor, or a modification of the security, if any, for the claim of such creditor.

"'ARTICLE III—PETITION AND POWERS OF COURT

"'SEC. 710. Any railroad corporation not in equity receivership or in process of reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act at the time of filing its petition hereunder, and which has not been in equity receivership or in process of reorganization under said section 77 within 10 years prior to the filing of such petition, which shall have—

"'(1) prepared a plan of adjustment and secured assurances satisfactory to the Commission of the acceptance of such plan from creditors holding at least 25 percent of the aggregate amount of all claims affected by said plan of adjustment (including all such affected claims against said corporation, its parents, and subsidiaries); and

"'(2) thereafter obtained an order from the Commission (but not a division thereof) under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act authorizing the issuance or modification of securities (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation) as proposed by such plan of adjustment as filed, or as modified by, or with the approval of, the Commission, such order of the Commission to include also specific findings—

"'(a) that such corporation is not in need of financial reorganization of the character provided for under section 77 of this act;

"'(b) that such corporation's inability to meet its debts matured or about to mature is reasonably expected to be temporary only; and

"'(c) that such plan of adjustment, after due consideration of the probable prospective earnings of the property in the light of its earnings experience and of such changes as may reasonably be expected—

"'(i) is in the public interest and in the best interests of each class of creditors and stockholders;

"'(ii) is feasible, financially advisable, and not likely to be followed by the insolvency of said corporation, or by need of financial reorganization or adjustment;

"'(iii) does not provide for fixed charges (of whatsoever nature including fixed charges on debt, amortization of discount on debt, and rent for leased roads), in an amount in excess of what will be adequately covered by the probable earnings available for the payment thereof;

"'(iv) leaves adequate means for such future financing as may be requisite;

"'(v) is consistent with adequate maintenance of the property; and

"'(vi) is consistent with the proper performance by such railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, will not impair its ability to perform such service;

Provided, That in making the foregoing specific findings the Commission shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptances of such plan and of any lack of opposition thereto: Provided further, That an order of the Commission (or of a division thereof) under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, made prior to the effective date of this chapter, authorizing the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by a plan of adjustment (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation), shall be effective for the purpose of this subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, notwithstanding failure to include therein the foregoing specific findings, if such order did include the specific findings that such proposed issuance or modification of securities is compatible with the public interest, is consistent with the proper performance by the railroad corporation of service to the public as a common carrier, and will not impair its ability to perform such service; and

"'(3) secured assents to such plan of adjustment or such plan of adjustment as modified by, or with approval of, the Commission, by creditors holding more than two-thirds of the aggregate amount of the claims affected by said plan, which two-thirds shall include at least a majority of the aggregate amount of the claims of each affected class.

may file in the United States district court in whose territorial jurisdiction such railroad corporation has had its principal executive or principal operating office during the preceding 6 months or a greater period thereof, its petition averring that it is unable to meet its debts, matured or about to mature, and desires to carry out the plan of adjustment.

"'A copy of the order obtained from the Commission, as above provided, shall be filed with the petition and made a part thereof.

"'SEC. 711. Any corporation which has complied with subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of the first sentence of section 710, and in which corporation the majority of the capital stock having power to vote for the election of directors is owned directly, or indirectly through an intervening medium by any railroad corporation which has filed a petition hereunder, or any corporation which is a lessor of the petitioning corporation and which has complied with the aforesaid subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 710, or any corporation which is liable or obligated, contingently or otherwise, on securities issued by or on which the obligation or liability has been assumed by, the petitioning carrier corporation and which has complied with the aforesaid subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 710, may file its petition in the same court in which the petition first aforesaid shall have been filed, and such petitions shall be heard and disposed of in a single proceeding. Any corporation liable or obligated, contingently or otherwise, upon the securities of a carrier shall, with respect to such securities and any securities issued in lieu thereof and for the purposes of this chapter, be deemed a carrier within the intent and meaning of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and if such corporation is a holding company, controlling two or more carriers, it shall, to the extent provided by the Commission in its order, be subject to such of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act as, under the provisions of paragraph (3) of section 5 thereof, are applicable to a person, not a carrier, authorized by an order entered under paragraph (2) of that section to acquire control of any carrier or two or more carriers.

"'SEC. 712. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in addition to the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other sections of this act or any other act.

"'SEC. 713. Immediately following the filing of the petition, there shall be convened a special court of three judges in the manner provided by section 266, as amended, of the Judicial Code, and thereafter all proceedings relative to such plan or any modification thereof shall be conducted before such court. Such three-judge court shall be vested with and shall exercise all the powers of a district court sitting in equity and all the powers as a court of bankruptcy necessary to carry out the intent and provisions of this chapter, including the classification of claims at such time and in such manner as the court may direct: Provided, however, That any one of the three judges constituting the special court who may be designated by the special court, may perform all functions, conduct all proceedings, and enter all orders, except that such single judge shall not hold a hearing for approval of a plan as provided in section 720 or for confirmation of a plan as provided in section 725 or enter the final decree. Any act of a single judge hereby permitted shall be subject to review by the special court on application by any party in interest filed within 30 days after said act or by order of such court on its own motion made within such period of 30 days.

"'SEC. 714. The special court, after hearing, promptly shall enter an order approving the petition as properly filed under this chapter if satisfied that such petition complies with this chapter and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing such petition if not so satisfied.

"'SEC. 715. If the petition is approved by the special court, the said court, during the pendency of the proceedings under this chapter, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the petitioner and of its property wherever located to the extent which may be necessary to protect the same against any action which might be inconsistent with said plan of adjustment or might interfere with the effective execution of said plan if approved by the court, or otherwise inconsistent with or contrary to the purposes and provisions of this chapter: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the court to appoint any trustee or receiver for said properties or any part thereof, or otherwise take possession of such properties or control the operation or administration thereof.

"'ARTICLE IV—HEARINGS

"'SEC. 720. The special court shall fix a date for a hearing to be held promptly after the filing of the petition and notice of such hearing or hearings shall be given to all persons in interest in such reasonable manner as the court shall direct. In such proceeding, the court may allow such interventions of persons in interest as it may deem just and proper, but any person in interest shall have the right to present evidence and be heard thereon, in person or by attorney, with or without intervention. Any person or persons in interest who shall be permitted to intervene or who shall present evidence and be heard thereon, in person or by attorney, with or without intervention, proposing any modification of the plan of adjustment, which modification shall be adopted and which shall be found by the court to be of benefit to the petition or to any class of creditors of petitioner or to be in the public interest, may be allowed actual and reasonable expense (including reasonable attorneys fees), which expenses may be entered as a part of the decree approving and confirming the plan and the adjustment provided thereby pursuant to the provisions of section 725 of this chapter.

"'SEC. 721. After such hearing, the special court may approve the plan as filed or propose to modify such plan and as hereinafter provided approve the same as so modified. If the court shall propose to modify the plan, then: (a) if such modification substantially alters the basis for the specific findings included in the order made by the Commission under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, the plan as so proposed to be modified shall be resubmitted to the Commission and shall not be finally approved by the court until the Commission (but not a division thereof) has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by the plan as so modified (other than securities held by, or to be issued to, Reconstruction Finance Corporation) making the findings required by clause (c) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, even in a case where the original order of the Commission under said section 20a was made prior to the effective date of this chapter; and (b) if such modification substantially or adversely affects the interests of any class or classes of creditors, such plan shall be resubmitted, in such manner as the court may direct, to those creditors so affected by such modification and shall not be finally approved until after (1) a hearing on such modification, to be held within such reasonable time as the court may fix, at which hearing any person in interest may object to such modification, and (2) a reasonable opportunity (within a period to be fixed by the court), following such hearing, within which such affected creditors who have assented to the plan may withdraw or cancel their assents to the plan, and failure by any such creditor to withdraw or cancel an assent within such period shall constitute an acceptance by such assenting creditor of the plan as so modified. After such authorization and finding by the Commission, where required hereby, and after such hearing and opportunity to withdraw or cancel, where required hereby, the court may make the proposed modification, and as provided in section 725 finally approve and confirm the plan as so modified.

"'SEC. 722. If the United States or any agency thereof, or any corporation (other than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation) the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, is a creditor or stockholder, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to act in respect of the interests or claims of the United States or of such agency or other corporation. If in any proceeding under this chapter the United States is a creditor on claims for taxes or customs duties (whether or not the United States has any other interest in or claim against the debtor as creditor or stockholder), no plan which does not provide for the payment thereof shall be approved or confirmed by the court except upon the acceptance of a lesser amount or of a postponement by the Secretary of the Treasury certified to the court: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall fail to accept or reject such lesser amount or such postponement for more than 60 days after receipt of written notice so to do from the court, accompanied by a certified copy of the plan, the consent of the United States insofar as its claims for taxes or customs duties are concerned shall be conclusively presumed.

"'ARTICLE V—PROCEEDINGS SUBSEQUENT TO APPROVAL OF PETITION

"'SEC. 725. If the special court shall find—

"'(1) that, at the time of the filing of said petition as provided in article III hereof, the proposed plan of adjustment had been assented to by not less than two-thirds of the aggregate amount of all claims of the petitioner affected by such plan, including at least a majority of the aggregate amount of claims of each such class;

"'(2) that the plan of adjustment as submitted or as modified by the court has been accepted as submitted or, if modified, then as modified by or on behalf of creditors affected by such plan holding more than three-fourths of the aggregate amount of the claims affected by said plan, including at least three-fifths of the aggregate amount of the claims of each affected class;

"'(3) that the plan meets the requirements of clause (c), and the petitioner meets the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) of subparagraph (2) of the first sentence of section 710, and that the plan is fair and equitable as an adjustment and as such will: (a) afford due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders and fair consideration to each class adversely affected and (b) will conform to the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders: Provided, That in making the findings required by this clause (3), the court shall scrutinize the facts independently of the extent of acceptance of such plan, and of any lack of opposition thereto, and of the fact that the Commission, under section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, has authorized the issuance or modification of securities as proposed by such plan, and of the fact that the Commission has made such or similar findings;

"'(4) that all corporate action required to authorize the issuance or modification of securities pursuant to such plan shall have been duly taken either before or since the enactment of this chapter;

"'(5) that the petitioner has not, in connection with said plan or the effectuation thereof, done any act or failed to perform any duty which act or failure would be a bar to the discharge of a bankrupt, and that the plan and the acceptance thereof are in good faith and have not been made or procured by any means, promises, or acts forbidden by this act;

"'(6) that, after hearings for the purpose, all amounts or considerations, directly or indirectly paid or to be paid by or for the petitioner for expenses, fees, reimbursement, or compensation of any character whatsoever incurred in connection with the proceeding and plan, or preliminary thereto or in aid thereof, together with all the facts and circumstances relating to the incurring thereof, have been fully disclosed to the court so far as such amounts or considerations can be ascertained at the time of such hearings, that all such amounts or considerations are fair and reasonable, and to the extent that any such amounts or considerations are not then ascertainable, the same are to be so disclosed to the court when ascertained, and are to be subject to approval by the special court as fair and reasonable, and except with such approval no amounts or considerations covered by this clause (6) shall be paid; and—

"'(7) that the provisions of sections 722, 736, and 737 of this chapter have been complied with.

Said court shall file an opinion setting forth its conclusions and the reasons therefor and shall enter a decree approving and confirming such plan and the adjustment provided thereby, which decree shall be binding upon the petitioner and upon all creditors and security holders of the petitioner; and thereafter the petitioner shall have full power and authority to and shall put into effect and carry out the plan and the orders of the special court relative thereto and issue the securities provided by the plan without further reference to or authority from the Commission or any other authority, State or Federal, except where required by any law relating to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the rights of all creditors and security holders with respect to claims and securities affected by the plan shall be those provided by the plan as so approved and confirmed: Provided, however, That the title of any owner, whether as trustee or otherwise, to rolling-stock equipment leased or conditionally sold to the petitioner, and any right of such owner to take possession of such property in compliance with the provisions of any such lease or conditional sale contract, shall not be affected by the provisions of this chapter.

"'No plan shall be approved under this chapter unless the special court finds that with respect to the continuation of, or any change in, the voting rights in the petitioner, control of the petitioner, and the identity of, and the power and manner of selection of the persons who are to be directors, officers, or voting trustees, if any, upon the consummation of the plan and their respective successors, the plan makes full disclosure, is adequate, equitable, in the best interests of creditors and stockholders of each class, and consistent with public policy.

"'SEC. 726. After the special court shall have approved as properly filed a petition pursuant to article III hereof, the special court, from time to time during the pendency of the proceedings hereunder, may enjoin the institution of, or stay, for a reasonable time, any action or proceeding to enforce any right against the petitioner or its property based upon claims affected by the proposed plan of adjustment in any court, State or Federal, whether for the enforcement of any such claim or for the appointment of receivers in equity or of the institution or prosecution of a proceeding under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act or otherwise: Provided, however, That no such stay shall affect any proceeding based on or to enforce any claim which would be required to be paid if the plan of adjustment proposed by the petitioner were then in effect.

"'SEC. 727. Unless the plan of adjustment as submitted or as modified shall have been confirmed by the special court within 1 year from the date of filing the petition, the proceedings shall be dismissed unless, for good cause shown, on motion of any party in interest, the court, if satisfied that confirmation of a plan is in immediate prospect, shall determine otherwise.

"'SEC. 728. Without prejudice to existing rights of all creditors, including those affected by the plan, and as a condition to the approval of any plan by the special court, the petitioner, from and after the filing of the petition with the court and until the making of a final order by the special court approving a plan or dismissing the petition, shall continue to make or tender payments to all creditors affected by the plan of sums currently payable to such creditors equal to the amounts proposed to be paid to such creditors under the plan: Provided, That the making of such payments shall not constitute a preference within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, nor shall acceptance of such payments constitute an acceptance of a plan. If, from and after the filing of the petition with the special court, there shall be any failure to make or tender such payments, the special court, unless there is good cause shown for the failure, shall dismiss the proceedings. In finally approving any plan, the court may make or require to be made such adjustments with respect to said payments or any of them as may be necessary to make the same conform to the provisions of said plan as finally approved.

"'SEC. 729. In providing for any such payments the petitioner may require any bond or other security, including interest coupons affected by such payments to be presented to or deposited with a paying agent or depositary named by the petitioner for appropriate stamping to show the amounts of such payment.

"'ARTICLE VI—TAX PROVISIONS

"'SEC. 735. The provisions of sections 1801, 1802, 3481, and 3482 of the Internal Revenue Code and any amendments thereto, unless specifically providing to the contrary, shall not apply to the issuance, transfer, or exchange of securities or the making or delivery of conveyances to make effective any plan of adjustment confirmed under the provisions of this chapter.

"'SEC. 736. In addition to the notices elsewhere expressly provided, the clerk of this court in which any proceedings under this chapter are pending shall forthwith transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury copies of—

"'(1) every petition filed under this chapter;

"'(2) the orders approving or dismissing petitions;

"'(3) the orders approving plans as filed or as modified, together with copies of such plans as approved;

"'(4) the decrees approving and confirming plans and the adjustments provided thereby, together with copies of such plans as approved;

"'(5) the injunctions or other orders made under section 726 of this chapter;

"'(6) the orders dismissing proceedings under this chapter; and

"'(7) such other papers filed in the proceedings as the Secretary of the Treasury may request or which the court may direct to be transmitted to him.

"'SEC. 737. Any order fixing the time for confirming a plan which affects claims or stock of the United States shall include a notice of not less than 30 days to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"'SEC. 738. The special court shall have power to determine the amount and legality of claims of the United States for taxes or customs duties, and to order payment thereof; and the order of the special court (provided for in section 714) approving the petition shall have the effect of an adjudication of bankruptcy of the petitioner for the purposes of section 274 of the Internal Revenue Code and the corresponding provisions of prior and subsequent revenue acts. The running of the statute of limitations on the assessment or collection of any internal-revenue tax shall be suspended while a proceeding under this chapter is pending and until it is finally dismissed.

"'ARTICLE VII—INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

"'SEC. 740. If, in any application filed with the Commission pursuant to section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act for authority to issue or modify securities, the applicant shall allege that the purpose in making such application is to enable it to file a petition under the provisions of this chapter, the Commission shall take final action on such application as promptly as possible, and in any event within 120 days after the filing of such application, unless the Commission finds that a longer time, not exceeding 60 days, is needed in the public interest.

"'ARTICLE VIII—FINAL DECREE AND REVIEW

"'SEC. 745. Any final order or decree of the special court shall be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal made by any person affected by the plan who deems himself aggrieved within 60 days after the entry of such order or decree, pursuant to the applicable provisions of the Judicial Code.

"'SEC. 746. In the decree approving and confirming the plan the court may require such reports of the action taken by the petitioner thereunder in the execution of the plan as may be necessary to a final disposition of the cause, and in its final decree disposing of the cause the court shall retain jurisdiction in the district court to the extent necessary to protect and enforce the rights of the parties under said plan and the orders of the court thereon.

"'ARTICLE IX—FILING RECORD WITH COMMISSION

"'SEC. 750. The clerk of the court in which any proceedings under this chapter are pending, shall forthwith transmit to the Interstate Commerce Commission copies of all pleadings, petitions, motions, applications, orders, judgments, decrees, and other papers in such proceedings filed with the court or entered therein, including copies of any transcripts of testimony, hearings or other proceedings that may be transcribed and filed in such proceedings together with copies of all exhibits, except to the extent that the court finds that compliance with this section would be impracticable.

"'ARTICLE X—TERMINATION OF JURISDICTION

"'SEC. 755. The jurisdiction conferred upon any court by this chapter shall not be exercised by such court after November 1, 1950, except in respect of any proceeding initiated by filing a petition under section 710 hereof on or before November 1, 1950.'

"SEC. 9. Section 77 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' as amended, is amended as follows:

"1. Subsection (b) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

" 'The capitalization of the reorganized company shall not be less than the capitalization existing on the date on which the debtor's petition to the court was approved as properly filed, with such adjustment therein as may result from the issue or retirement of securities during the reorganization proceedings: Provided, That such existing capitalization does not exceed either—

" '(i) the actual investment in the debtor's properties; or

" '(ii) the valuation found by the Commission under section 19 (a) of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended (together with investments), plus expenditures for additions and betterments less retirements since the date of such valuation, whichever is the lower: And provided further, That any part of such capitalization in excess of the value of all of the debtor's property as certified by the Commission pursuant to subsection (e) shall be represented by shares of stock without par value of the reorganized company at the rate of one share of such stock for each $100 of such excess.'

"2. That so much of subsection (d) of such section as reads as follows: 'After the filing of such a plan, the Commission, unless such plan shall be considered by it, to be prima facie impracticable, shall, after due notice to all stockholders and creditors given in such manner as it shall determine, hold public hearings,' is hereby amended to read as follows: 'After the filing of such a plan, the Commission shall name one of its members to confer with the parties in interest and to endeavor as a mediator to reconcile differences which may exist between them and unless such plan shall be considered by it to be prima facie impracticable, shall, after due notice to all stockholders and creditors given in such manner as it shall determine, hold public hearings.'

"3. That so much of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'After such hearings, and without any hearing if no objections are filed, the judge shall approve the plan if satisfied that (1) it complies with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders;', is hereby amended to read as follows: 'After such hearing, and without any hearing if no objection is filed, the judge shall make full and independent judicial reexamination and review of the plan and of the evidence presented at such hearing, in the event of such hearing, and thereafter shall approve the plan if, in the exercise of his independent judgment based upon such judicial reexamination and review, he is satisfied that (1) the plan complies with the provisions of subsections (b) and (d) of this section, is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class thereof, and will conform to the requirements of the Constitution and statutes of the United States; (2) the determination of value made by the Commission and certified to the court under the provisions of this subsection is supported by substantial evidence, adequately reflects the true value of the property at the time of hearing, or at the time of certification of the plan by the Commission, in the event no hearing is had before the court, and does not omit consideration of any relevant facts;'.

"4. Subsection (e) of such section is amended by redesignating clauses '(2)' and '(3)' as '(3)' and '(4)', respectively.

"5. So much of the first proviso of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'Provided, That submission to any class of stockholders shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding,' is amended by striking out 'shall have affirmed the finding,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in the exercise of his independent judgment, after consideration of the evidence presented at the hearing before the court, in the event of such hearings, shall also find.'

"6. So much of the second proviso of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'Provided further, That submission to any class of creditors shall not be necessary if the Commission shall have found, and the judge shall have affirmed the finding,' is amended by striking out 'shall have affirmed the finding,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'in the exercise of his independent judgment, after consideration of the evidence presented at the hearing before the court, in the event of such hearing, shall also find.'

"7. So much of the fourth paragraph of subsection (e) of such section as reads as follows: 'The value of any property used in railroad operation shall be determined on a basis which will give due consideration to the earning power of the property, past, present, and prospective, and all other relevant facts. In determining such value only such effect shall be given to the present cost of reproduction new and less depreciation and original cost of the property, and the actual investment therein, as may be required under the law of the land, in light of its earning power and all other relevant facts,' is amended by striking out 'as may be required under the law of the land' and inserting in lieu thereof 'as will conform to the requirements of the Constitution and statutes of the United States.' "

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended, and to further amend said act, as amended."

The proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 5924) was passed were vacated and that bill laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the section numbers of the bill.

There was no objection.

SOCIAL-SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 710 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but such amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

I now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have a very poor disposition for speaking to people who do not want to be spoken to and try not to do it. I thought there might be some interest in the legislative situation that confronts the House now.

This rule, if adopted, will make in order consideration of social-security legislation and is what is frequently referred to as a gag rule. It is a closed rule, that permits amendments to be offered only by members of the legislative committee, which in this instance is the Ways and Means Committee.

As a matter of fact, there is not any power that can gag this House except a majority of the House itself. On this rule you can pursue one of three courses. You can accept the rule as written, you can vote down the rule, or you can vote down the previous question and amend the rule to suit your own taste. That is true in every case. I have never seen an instance in which the majority of this House could not work its will in a matter presented here, if it is of a mind to do so.

The Ways and Means Committee at first sharply divided on the original bill that was reported. They felt that the situation was so complicated and the legislation in question was so involved that it should be considered on the floor under a closed rule. The Rules Committee was reluctant, with a divided legislative committee, to grant a closed rule. Eventually, the Ways and Means Committee was able to get together and unanimously asked us to grant a closed rule on this particular legislation. The House does not have to accept that, but if you do not accept the judgment of your Ways and Means Committee, which is certainly one of the great committees of this House, you will then yourselves undertake to write legislation on the floor; legislation of a very involved and complicated nature. I think practically all the Members have seen that in the Congress and know what confusion and poor results were arrived at in that way.

It may be suggested by some who are opposed to the adoption of this rule that they only want to substitute a bill adopted by the Ways and Means Committee prior to this bill and that on that they want a closed rule. Either we must have a closed rule for the consideration of this bill or the previous bill or we must throw the whole situation open to any kind of amendment that anybody may wish to offer.

I cannot see how it is logical for Members to oppose this rule because it is a closed rule on this particular bill and then advocate substituting the other bill under a closed rule, for exactly the same situation would prevail.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. McGREGOR. Does not the gentleman feel that it would be logical, though, to vote against any closed rule so we could all be given an opportunity to vote our sincere opinions on legislation?

Mr. CLARK. My own opinion is, sir, if you do that and open up this subject under present conditions we will not be able to accomplish much of anything.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Do you not think it would be better to let the House vote on the matters that are in controversy in the committee?

Mr. CLARK. That is entirely up to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as has been explained by the gentleman from North Carolina, this resolution makes in order H. R. 7037 under a closed rule which would prohibit any amendments to the measure being considered. The Rules Committee was very reluctant, as it always is, to grant a closed rule on this legislation, and the rule was granted simply because of the realization that this legislation is very complicated. It deals with the whole field of social security, and if a closed rule is not adopted and an open rule becomes in order, then all sorts of amendments and substitute measures could be considered in the most controversial fields. In fact, when this bill was first presented to the Rules Committee there was a controversy existing within the Ways and Means Committee over some of the provisions of the bill, and the Rules Committee, feeling that a controversial measure, on which the great Ways and Means Committee itself could not agree, should not be sent to the floor under a closed rule, held several hearings and discussed this matter rather fully. In the meantime the Ways and Means Committee had subsequent meetings and reached an agreement on H. R. 7037, as it now appears before us, whereby the committee eliminated the controversial sections of the original bill so as to permit the Congress to give certain very necessary relief under the social security laws at this time. In these closing days of the session I believe it is often necessary for us to compromise our differences and try to work out some sort of a program upon which all of us can agree. I, therefore, compliment the Ways and Means Committee of the House for the manner in which they met this particular problem, worked out their differences, and presented to the House agreed legislation of this type. For that reason the Rules Committee has granted a closed rule so that this matter can be decided quickly by passing a bill that I believe is not controversial.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I want the gentleman to name one single controversial section that has been eliminated in the bill reported by the House. Every section that was in the previous bill is still in this bill in a different form.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. The gentleman is a member of this great committee, but he will find that the section providing for variable grants is not in this bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. You change the formula, that is all.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The provision is not the same. I am sorry that the gentleman has not given more careful study to a bill that has been reported by his own committee.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I would like to reply to that. The section is still in the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It certainly is not in the bill in the same form, and the controversy over that provision has been eliminated.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. In response to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may I say there are many controversial matters in the bills which were worked out in the committee. It was a matter of give and take. There are other amendments that are still in controversy.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio if this is not the situation: An effort will be made to vote down the previous question. If the previous question is voted down, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] may offer a motion to amend the rule, if he is recognized by the Speaker. He will then have 1 hour. The Rules Committee will lose control. Then the next gentleman who is recognized will have 1 hour. This procedure will continue until the previous question is ordered. We might be here indefinitely if the previous question is voted down.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his comment. That is exactly the thing as I expected to say in connection with this measure. If the previous question is voted down and this bill is considered under an open rule, then we will have before the House, immediately, all sorts of controversial legislation on the general subject of social security. We will be endeavoring to consider such important matters on the floor of the House where technical and intricate legislation cannot be considered logically and properly.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LYNCH. It was brought out before the Rules Committee that there were some eighty-odd bills introduced into the present Congress with respect to social security. If this is considered under an open rule all of these eighty-odd bills may be offered as amendments?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman from New York is entirely correct, and let me go one step further and say to the House that the presentation of this bill by the Ways and Means Committee does not mean that that great committee has completed its work on social security, but instead is only presenting to the House legislation which it can approve and recommend at this time. In the next session it will continue the study of social security legislation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Carrying the suggestion of the gentleman from New York one step further, if the rule is voted down the chances are we will turn out a legislative Mother Hubbard that will cover everything and produce nothing.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and include a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. The letter by J. Milton Patterson, director, State Department of Public Welfare of Maryland, is as follows:

Re H. R. 6911: Amendments to Social Security Act.

STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE,
Baltimore, Md. July 3, 1946.

Hon. THOMAS D'ALESANDRO,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN D'ALESANDRO: The Ways and Means Committee has reported H. R. 6911, which is a bill prepared to cover amendments to the Social Security Act, including some amendments to our public assistance program.

While it does not cover all of the things that the public welfare people have been recommending, it does include provision for raising ceilings that will make it possible for us to provide more adequately for those people who receive public assistance.

I notice that there has already been some attack upon the bill on account of the variable grant provision that would make additional funds available to the low-income States. Maryland, of course, would not be the beneficiary under this provision, but it is a philosophy that we believe in within the State, whereby we make funds available to the low-income counties to enable them to meet their actual need.

The point has been raised that if something isn't done to make available funds to these low-income States and we get into an emergency situation, we will have another WPA where the Federal Government pays the entire bill.

I am sure that you will give this matter your serious consideration when you have the opportunity to act on it.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely,

J. MILTON PATTERSON,
Director.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. The way this strikes me is this: We had the OPA bill and it was considered under a wide-open rule. It was of interest to the whole of the Nation. Now, every time we get a bill from the Ways and Means Committee the House is prevented from offering any amendment. We can just take it or leave it. Then we go before the country and brag that the House writes this type of legislation. We have been handing it to the Senate and that body amends it as it pleases. For one, I am tired of such procedure.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, this question of the adoption of the rule as granted by my distinguished Committee on Rules is most important. It affects the lives of many thousands of our aged needy and the blind.

This rule was granted by the Rules Committee at a time when I was unfortunately detained in Mississippi in a primary election contest. Had it been possible for me to have been here and in attendance at the Rules Committee, as I should like to have done, when this rule was granted, I would have exercised myself to see that a different type of rule was granted. For, Mr. Speaker, I am most concerned about this matter of increasing the amounts paid to the aged needy of this great country of ours. Particularly am I interested in seeing the inequalities which now exist in the Federal contributions to this worthy cause righted.

For several years, in fact from the time that the first social-security bill was passed, I have vigorously opposed this formula by which the several States are required to match dollar for dollar the amount contributed by the Federal Government. In fact, when that bill was first considered by the Ways and Means Committee, I appeared before that committee and pointed out with all of the logic and force that I could command that such a formula was unjust and unfair to the so-called poorer States. I emphasized that States like Mississippi in the deep South, where agriculture predominated and where the State revenue was small as compared with the industrial States, that these less wealthy States could not match the amount then proposed of $15 per month. I emphasized that the result would be that the aged of the wealthier States would receive larger pensions than the needy aged in the southern or agricultural States.

When my efforts did not prevail before the committee and when the bill reached the floor of the House, I offered an amendment there to equalize these payments by requiring the Federal contribution of $15 to be paid in all States regardless of State contribution. Had my amendment prevailed those qualified to receive pensions in these so-called poorer States then would have received $19 as against $8 which they received under the bill as finally passed.

Again, Mr. Speaker, when this matter was up in 1939 I appealed to the Ways and Means Committee to adopt a more just and equitable program so that the pensioners throughout the country would have received a more uniform pension. At that time I asked that the States only be required to contribute $1 for every $4 that the Federal Government put up, up to the Federal Government's limit of $20, as proposed in the 1939 bill.

Under this formula thus proposed by me, if adopted, in a State that was only able to put up $5 the Federal Government would have put up $20 and the aged needy of States like mine would have received a pension of $25. Moreover, under this formula every other State that was unable to match the $20 Federal contribution would have benefited. At that time there was only one State, California, that was fully matching the Federal contribution. But again the powerful Ways and Means Committee of the House rejected my amendment.

Thereupon, I issued an invitation to all Members of the House interested in this worthy subject to meet with me and join with me in the fight that I then proposed to make upon the floor of the House. At that meeting there were some 86 Members present and others expressed sympathy with our efforts. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I quote from an extension of my remarks in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 84, part 13, at page 2489, as follows:

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to call the attention of the Members of the House to the developments that have taken place in the last 24 hours with reference to the concerted effort that is being made by those of us who are interested in seeing benefits for the aged needy liberalized.

Mr. Speaker, there is a disposition upon the part of this Congress to liberalize these benefits to the aged needy. The bill as reported out by the powerful Ways and Means Committee, with all due deference to the distinguished gentleman of that committee, does not in any sense liberalize these pensions over and above that provided in the existing law. The increase granted from $15 of Federal contribution to $20 is at the most a gesture. The truth of this statement can readily be verified by glancing at the chart which I placed in the RECORD on June 6, showing that at present there is only one State in the Union that matches the present $15. So far as the aged needy are concerned, the Ways and Means Committee could just as well have provided a Federal contribution of $100 provided the States matched it.

The membership realizing this status of affairs, and desiring to see these benefits increased for these aged people, is giving this matter considerable thought and study. In response to a few hours' notice which I gave from the floor yesterday, and by letter this morning, there were 86 Members who met in the caucus room of the Old House Office Building this morning to consider this proposition of liberalizingf the old-age pensions. In spite of the short notice and the fact that Their Majesties the King and Queen of England were expected on the Capitol Grounds this morning, this large number appeared and discussed this momentous question.

After a discussion thereof the following things were done. The group—

First. Adopted a resolution favoring the Colmer amendment.

Second. Resolved itself into a steering committee to foster a liberal amendment.

Third. Elected a chairman and a secretary. WILLIAM M. COLMER (Mississippi) and John J. Dempsey (New Mexico), respectively.

Fourth. Authorized the chairman to appoint a committee of not less than 15 members from the steering committee to serve as an executive committee.

The following Members of the House were present and constituted the steering committe:

Alabama: Sam Hobbs, Pete Jarman, John J. Sparkman, Joe Starnes.

Many others who did not have an opportunity to attend due to the shortness of the notice and other unavoidable circumstances have expressed a desire to foster this legislation and be considered on the steering committee. Their names will be added to the list and will appear in a future issue of the RECORD.

Unfortunately, we have not been able to get an accurate figure as to what the additional cost to the Federal Government would be if this amendment is adopted. The best figures obtainable upon the basis which the Social Security Board is now operating indicate that the additional cost to the Federal Government would be $114,000,000. Of course, if more people qualified it would cost more, just as it would cost more if more people qualified under the bill as reported out by the Ways and Means Committee. But in no event will the additional cost amount to more than the additional cost of the present bill under consideration, providing for a $20 Federal contribution, if the several States matched that $20 Federal contribution. In fact, it would not amount to nearly as much.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the membership and the country at large, I have secured a statement, which was prepared by an officer of the Federal Social Security Board, which shows how our amendment would affect the aged who qualify under the bill. This chart discloses that upon the present basis, with the adoption of our amendment, the aged needy of every State of the Union would be benefited and their pensions increased, as follows:

Average amount of old-age assistance per aged needy individual for April 1939, by States, compared with maximum possible average amount under a revised plan of four-fifths Federal matching on $25 per month per aged individual

NOTE.—The average payments shown for the revised plan are made on the assumption that each State maintains the number of recipients as at present and uses all the additional Federal funds for increased grants to the aged. Those States which wish to put additional individuals on the rolls and also raise the payment somewhat would have different averages than shown above.

In conclusion, allow me to say that there are many who favor a larger pension. There are some who do not favor as much. All legislation is a compromise. Many Members who have bills pending and who are prepared to offer amendments have, out of their very fine and broad spirit, seen fit to subjugate their own private opinions and bills on the theory that this is the best that we can hope to do. In other words, they have realized that this is a common ground upon which we who favor a more adequate pension can all get together. They are willing to lay aside pride of opinion and authorship. Moreover, they are willing to agree upon the principle that this is an opportunity to render some real service to the aged needy of this country rather than to render lip service. We respectfully submit our views to the House Members as a whole and ask you to go along with us.

Again, Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1939, when the social-security bill was under consideration on the floor of the House, I addressed the House in support of my amendment, in part, as follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 84, pt. 6, at p. 6683):

Mr. COLMER. The gentleman is entirely correct. This bill does not help the needy of his State one dollar.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In other words, the people who need help most are to receive no benefits by it.

Mr. COLMER. Quite so.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Not only will this not benefit the old people in those States, what are called the poor States, but the poor States off which the other States have grown rich are agricultural States, where the social-security part of this bill and the social-security part of the original bill left the farmers out of it entirely.

Mr. COLMER. Quite so.

Mr. RANKIN. So the only thing the people in the farming States get is the privilege of paying the bill?

Mr. COLMER. I thank my colleague for his contribution. When this bill is considered under the 5-minute rule—and we have an open rule on this bill and will have an opportunity to legislate, as we did not have the other day—I will offer an amendment on page 3, line 9, strike out "one-half" and insert "four-fifths"; on page 4, line 6, strike out "one-half" and insert "fourth-fifths"; and in line 15, strike out the word "forty" and insert the words "twenty-five."

That would do simply this: That would say that for every dollar that the States put up the Federal Government would match it by $4 up to the $20 limitation of the Federal Government. In other words, it would not cost the Federal Government one cent more as far as those States that are able to match it are concerned; but it would benefit the aged needy of the less wealthy States by increasing their present pittance by $4 for every dollar their State now contributes. The need of the aged in New Mexico is just as great as it is in California or Massachusetts.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Since I come from California, I would like to say that I would be glad to support the gentleman's amendments.

Mr. COLMER. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. He is always fair and broad-minded.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. In just a moment. Not only that but let me call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that if my amendment is adopted the aged people of his State, which now matches the full $15 that the Federal Government puts up, will get $5 more per capita than they are now getting. In other words, they would get $20 for the $15 contributed where they are now getting $15 from the Federal Government.

I now yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Under the gentleman's plan, as I understand it, if a State matched fully the $20, the maximum pension would be $25 per month.

Mr. COLMER. Oh, no, not at all. The maximum pension would be $40, as it is now written in the bill, where the State puts up $20.

Mr. LEAVY. But in order to get $20 from the Federal Treasury a State would only be required to put up $5?

Mr. COLMER. That is correct.

Mr. LEAVY. And that would make a $25 pension?

Mr. COLMER. Quite so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In my State of Montana where the State and counties put $10, under the gentleman's amendment, how much pension would go to my qualified people in Montana, assuming that they continue to put up the amount of money they are now advancing, namely, approximately $10?

Mr. COLMER. If they put up $10 they would get a maximum of $20 from the Federal Government. That would make a $30 pension.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is, under your proposed amendment?

Mr. COLMER. Under my proposed amendment; yes.

Now, let me say that we had before this House the other day a utopian scheme that would give people as much as $200 a month; $400 for an aged couple. This House, by an overwhelming vote, turned down that proposition, as was expected. Aged pensions are something new in our governmental scheme. I think it is cruel to attempt to lead these old people to believe that a $200 or $300 pension is an attainable goal. But I say to you that this question of pensions for the aged is one of the most pertinent questions, one of the most pressing questions that confronts this country today. I want to say to you further, you people from Massachusetts and California, if you think you are getting something out of this and the other States are not, let me remind you that if this continues you are going to have the same proposition in pensions for the aged that you now have in the WPA and these other relief agencies.

You are going to have the aged and needy from those States that cannot match this proposition coming to your State to live with you, and you are going to have to take care of them. That is what is being done in the WPA. That is what is being done in the other relief agencies. We ask by this amendment that you treat the aged needy of these so-called less wealthy States not as well as they are treated in Massachusetts and California and some of the other States, but to give them a break; give them an opportunity to get something. They should in justice all receive the same treatment. In my own State of Mississippi it would require more money than all of the money that is now collected for general revenue purposes in the State of Mississippi, to match the proposition of $20 with $20. It is therefore apparent that it is impractical and not feasible for them to match it on an equal basis.

I want you to think seriously about this proposition, which I am advocating. It is something this House ought to consider and correct.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention, in conclusion, to the fact that the Senate committee on relief and unemployment recognized the justice of this cause which I am advocating, in its Report No. 2, part 1, submitted by Senator Byrnes on January 4, 1939, wherein it is stated:

"In certain States this grant is so inadequate as to be of little value. It is recommended that the contribution of the United States for public assistance to the aged, the blind, and dependent children be 50 percent of the amount paid, but that in those States where the average per capita income is less than the average per capita income of the United States, the Federal contribution be increased in proportion to such differences, and that a provision of the grant should be the guaranty of certain minimum payments, as follows: To the aged, $15; to the blind, $15; to the dependent children, $20."

For the benefit of the membership and for their consideration between now and the time that we vote on the bill, I want to quote the amendment again, as follows:

"Amendment: On page 3, line 9, strike out 'one-half' and insert 'four-fifths'; and in line 15 strike out the figure '40' and insert the figure '25', and on page 4, line 6, strike out 'one-half' and insert 'one-fifth.'"

This report recommends a minimum to the aged of $15, to the blind $15, and to dependent children $20 as the Federal Government's contribution.

The President's Board recognized this principle in its report to the President which the President sent to this Congress with this statement:

"The Board believes it is essential to change the present system of uniform percentage grants to a system whereby the percentage of the total cost in each State made through a Federal grant would vary in accordance with the relative economic capacity of that State."

Mr. Speaker, the following table graphically describes the unjust discrepancies in the amount received under the present set-up which this amendment would tend to equalize:

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I have given much thought and consideration to this subject. I was never more convinced of anything in my life than I am of the injustice of this set-up. Pensions for the aged needy will eventually be recognized as a national problem. We are not going that far here. We are merely asking for a little better treatment for those aged, needy people who live in the less densely populated areas of the country. This is by no means as far as I would like to see the Congress go, but this is as far as I have any assurance or the right to feel that the Congress will go at this time. And so far as I am concerned, I would prefer to get something tangible like this than to render lip service to these poor, aged people, as has been such a popular pastime with so many of our public people, and especially candidates for office. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have referred to this past history of this legislation to impress upon the membership here today that this fight is not a new one. Today we are faced with the practical proposition of an effort to give this House an opportunity to pass upon this question again. The learned Ways and Means Committee, as has already been pointed out, first reported H. R. 6911 of the so-called variable grant provision which is in effect and principle the same system for which I have been fighting for these past 6 or 7 years.

But something happened in that Committee which is not clear to the House. It is charged that our Republican brethren brought sufficient pressure to change the minds of some gentlemen on the Committee, and as a result the Ways and Means Committee reported out H. R. 7037, which embodies the old principle of requiring the States to match the Federal Government's contribution dollar for dollar. It is true that H. R. 7037 increases the Federal Government's contribution from $20 to $25, but this is purely an idle gesture so far as those States, like my own, are concerned where they are unable because of the lack of revenue to match the $20 now provided.

Under the provisions of H. R. 6911 all of the States would benefit, whereas under provision of H. R. 7037, which the Committee is now trying to jam down our throats under a closed rule, only one or two States who are now able to match the present Federal contribution of $20 would benefit.

The following table, computed by the Social Security Board, illustrates how the Federal expenditures for old age assistance to each State in the 1943–44 period would be provided by H. R. 6911. I quote:

Old-age assistance from Federal funds in 1943–44 and under H. R. 6911

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I am reliably informed that those figures the gentleman now alludes to are statistics for 1943 and that later statistics for the last part of 1945 would not support those figures.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the source of that information was the Social Security Board.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I still stand by my statement.

Mr. COLMER. It will be noted that under this provision the aged needy of my State would receive as a Federal contribution $2,922,000 if H. R. 6911 is adopted, whereas under the present system it receives only $1,462,000, just a little more than double. Now, I am convinced that if this House is permitted to work its will, it will adopt H. R. 6911 with the variable grant provision and not H. R. 7037 as finally voted out of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one thing for the House to do if it wants to do that, and that is to vote down the previous question on the rule. If this is done, as a member of the Rules Committee, I propose to offer H. R. 6911 as an amendment in lieu of H. R. 7037. Then if this is adopted, the aged needy and the blind of all States will benefit rather than just those in a few States. This is simple justice. It should be done. Need is not confined to States. It should not be hampered by State lines. All aged needy citizens should receive equal and fair treatment at the hands of their Federal Government, regardless of State lines.

Mr. Speaker, should we fail in this, I have reason to believe that the Senate will make the correction. In fact, I have already contacted that distinguished and able southern Senator, Senator WALTER F. GEORGE, of Georgia, who has promised me that he would use his best efforts to that end.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio has said, this is a compromise bill. A compromise seldom suits anyone in toto. This bill does not completely suit any member of our committee, and we would not expect it to completely suit any Member of the House. But I tell you in all sincerity that after we have spent nearly 6 months in hearings and study and then were unable to bring you a complete bill on the subject of social security, those of you who so far have spent no time on it need not expect that you can write a bill on the floor. It cannot be done.

There are two practical things you can do. If you do not like this bill, vote the rule down. If you do like this bill, vote the rule up, which will mean that you are going to vote for the bill.

The bill does three things that most people will like to see done. It freezes the social-security tax for another year at 1 percent. Otherwise on January 1 it goes up to 2½ percent on both industry and the employees.

It covers maritime workers, and everybody has conceded for the past 2 or 3 years that they are richly entitled to be covered by unemployment compensation benefits.

It covers veterans for 3 years on the same basis as if they had been in covered industry during their war service.

Those three things I think everybody would like to see done. Bear in mind that when you vote this bill down you take a chance on whether or not on January 1 the tax goes up to 2½ percent.

The controversial matter is the $25 maximum, which benefits a few States. It will benefit more than 5; it will benefit about 39 States on the basis of 1945 figures. In the case of dependent children it will benefit all except five States. Virginia, for instance, will gain about $153,000 and more as State contributions are increased. I asked the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate about 10 days ago what would be the action in the Senate if we sent them a bill with variable grants. He said, "It is so highly controversial we will not even consider it." We will be engaging in a futility to debate variable grants on this floor, and no one knows, if you vote the previous question down, whether the only amendment that will be adopted will be one dealing with variable grants. I tell you, if you have a lot of amendments added to this bill, the chairman of our committee will never, with my consent, ask for the bill to be called up for any action at all.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In the event we do not get legislation, the pay-roll tax goes up to 2½ percent on the worker as well as the employer?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. That is true.

Mr. KNUTSON. Better remember that when you vote.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. It is up to you whether you want that to go up or not, but we thought it was of sufficient importance to bring a compromise measure out which does not satisfy us and does not satisfy you, but it was the best we could do in a limited time.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. The increase to $25 carries only for the period up until December 31, 1947.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. That is correct. Next year we expect to go into the full subject of proper treatment for the aged, for the blind, for dependent children, for increased coverage, and the other things we did not have time to go into now. It was just too big a subject for the few days we had in executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this does increase the allowance for the blind and for dependent children.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Yes; and more, if you match it.

Mr. CURTIS. It will benefit them in a good many States.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Yes; in all except five.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, naturally I am of the minority side. We are trying to cooperate with the majority side, and we have gone a long way in an endeavor to do that. I say to you, and I think every man on the floor will agree with me, that we hold your chairman in the highest admiration, respect, and esteem. I marvel at the work he has been able to do. It has been no easy matter to work out this bill, for this very reason, that we have had 157 witnesses who were heard during the last 6 months. Here is a book that is literally a textbook for everybody in this country who is interested in social legislation. It is so comprehensive and has so many problems in it that for us to attempt, even after the completion of the hearings and a study of this book with the aid of the experts, to frame a bill is utterly impossible. What we have done is to bring forth a few essential things that could be passed by this House and eventually be passed in the Senate in the short period which remains of this Seventy-ninth Congress. Every man on this floor knows from his experience here that you just cannot write a bill of this character on the floor of the House. This bill lends itself naturally to the heart throbs of every man in the House.

Another thing: At this season of the year when people are interested in politics there is a great temptation to offer every type of amendment that will bring some of this money to the deserving blind, the children, the aged, and what not. If this bill is opened up to amendment and we start in on that kind of a program, we will not only render the committee ridiculous but render the House of Representatives ridiculous before the country. Here is a great study by experts. It is only a question of time when each one of the problems brought forth by this intensive study will be brought to the floor. They have broad implications because they relate to the financial ability and stability of this country to meet all these problems. Every one of us knows that the social security bill is a bill of discriminations. There are large groups of people which would like to be covered under social security. I would like to see them covered.

Well, now is the time when pressure groups are very effective, but under an open rule you will load the bill down with provisions which have not been thought out. The result will be that if amendments are permitted you may work an injury to the whole social-security plan. We have lined up here to help your distinguished chairman and the majority to bring in a bill that can be passed and which will accomplish great good to a large number of people. It will accomplish some good for the elderly people, the veterans, and for the blind and dependent children. All of us would like to do more. Each of us would like to go home and say, "I offered an amendment to the social security bill to pay you a large pension." We would love to do that. We would be champions of the unfortunate. We would get their votes. There would not be any question about that, but let us be realistic about this and let us realize that our job here is to treat the people fairly who are covered in the bill. Let us look forward to the time when we can take this study that has been brought out here and frame a bill that will work justice, equality, and equity to those folks who should eventually be covered. I hope the rule as brought in will be supported by the House in the interest of just legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SIMPSON).

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I hope very much that this rule is adopted. I fear, that if it is not adopted we will not have any Social Security Act amendments during the present session of Congress. If we adopt this rule and pass the bill as it is before us, we will accomplish a great deal of good. We will not do the best we could have done if at the beginning of the session we had available the information that we now have, but I suggest to you that as the committee found, as we studied this legislation, it is too late for us today to attempt to write in detail the full amendments needed to properly amend the Social Security Act.

By adopting this bill we will settle for another year the question of social security taxes. We will temporarily provide some benefits to the survivors and heirs of deceased soldiers, men who died in action during the war just closed or die within 3 years of its close. I hope very much that we may give that benefit to those people in the near future. We will provide unemployment compensation for that great mass of maritime workers who are today without unemployment-compensation coverage, and we will increase, under certain conditions, the old-age and survivors' assistance payments.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman explain to the House how it happened that on July 1 the great Ways and Means Committee reported one bill and then on July 15 they reported another bill substantially different? Under the first bill the State of North Carolina would have received in excess of $2,250,000 and under the bill before the House the old-age people of the State of North Carolina do not receive a dime.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. If I might suggest to the gentleman, if the State of North Carolina saw fit to increase by its own legislative action pensions payable to its old-age citizens who are eligible for old-age assistance, the State of North Carolina would under this bill, and under existing law today, receive from the Federal Government the amount of money the gentleman suggests.

Mr. COOLEY. The fact is that our legislature does not meet until January.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The fact is that your legislature, when it met in years past, saw fit to overlook what you now suggest are the needs of the citizens of your State.

Mr. COOLEY. This bill goes into effect on October 1. That is right, is it not?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. The bill goes into effect on October 1; yes.

Mr. COOLEY. So it means that North Carolina gets not a dime under this bill, whereas it would have gotten $2,250,000 under the former bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. It means specifically that those States which in the past have seen fit to recognize the needs existing in those States for old-age citizens will immediately receive benefits. It means further that in the gentleman's State, if your legislature either in October, or subsequently, sees fit to increase the benefits to the aged citizens of your State, they will then receive increased benefits from the Federal Government.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not unreasonable for the General Assembly of North Carolina to anticipate the acts of the Ways and Means Committee, when they change their minds in a 15-day period?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Let me suggest that under the bill as it was on the 1st day of July, there would have been required in many States legislative acts before they would have received any benefits. May I also say that the gentleman's State, and any of the States which do not begin to receive benefits under this bill immediately on its passage, may if the demand within that State is sufficiently great, call its legislature together and change their law and immediately, on a matching basis, begin to receive benefits under this law. It is the States obligation to declare the needs of its citizens.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GORE. But the difficulty is there are many States in the Union which are simply not financially able to match the Federal funds already available. So this merely holds a delusion and an empty snare before the people, promising them something they can never obtain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, this is a very unusual situation. After 5 months of study and after the employment of a fine technical staff and deliberate consideration extending over this entire year, on July 1 the great Ways and Means Committee reported a bill embodying some of the recommendations of this expert technical staff which the Congress had authorized them to employ. Then 2 weeks later, for some reason unknown to me, the committee has completely changed its mind on two very important matters and now it is said that we shall put upon ourselves a yoke, self-imposed, to deny ourselves even the right and privilege of considering the two bills which the Ways and Means Committee has reported. What manner of men are we? I resist the suggestion that this House is incapable of giving consideration to the problems of the old and needy people of this country, of the blind, and of the dependent children. I do not know how it ever happens, unless it is by some legislative miracle, that the body at the other end of the Capitol, with no gag rule, ever succeeds in passing a social security bill. Mr. Speaker, we considered a bill on the OPA applying to 8,000,000 commodities and yet no closed gag rule was requested. The issue here is whether this Congress wants to dodge its responsibility or whether they want to keep their hands free to work their majority will on fundamental questions of social security.

The question is—the issue is—between adequate consideration, on the one hand, of a problem vital to millions of people in this country or a go-home-quick abandonment of our responsibility, on the other. Why hold up this empty delusion to the millions of old people and dependent children who cannot speak for themselves and to those with sightless eyes—this delusion that we will increase the Federal appropriation if it is matched? The fundamental fact stands—and the committee in their report of July 1 gave eloquent recognition of the fact—that in many States the program is operating inequitably, unjustly, and unfairly, for the simple reason that many States cannot match Federal funds already available, though the record shows that the poor States are making a relatively greater effort than the rich States. How does it operate? The proof of the pudding is in the eating. The Federal Government is now paying more than three times as much to a needy old man or woman or a blind person in one State as in another, and this bill would but worsen that inequity. Need cannot be measured by State lines.

Mr. Speaker, the issue here is whether the Congress wants to stay on the job long enough to give adequate consideration to a pressing human problem and to consider giving succor to the wants of the people who so direly need assistance or shackle our ability and right to do so.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. If the previous question is voted down would the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee permit the bill to be amended so as to require equal treatment for persons who receive aid on the basis of no discrimination on account of race, creed, or condition of servitude?

Mr. GORE. I understand the gentleman's question. The Congress, as pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, has three choices: One is to vote down the previous question. If the previous question is voted down then the rule by which this bill will be considered is within the hands of Congress. We can then amend it as majority desires.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that a member of the committee gets but 2 minutes in which to discuss this very important measure under this proposed gag rule. Mr. Speaker, how can the Committee on Ways and Means after sending a report to you on July 1 recommending the adoption of a bill and asking for a closed rule, come to you 2 weeks later and ask for a closed rule on a bill that reverses the position it took 2 weeks before? It reversed itself after 6 months of study and now wants you to accept, and ram it down your throats, an entirely different proposition without having an opportunity to amend it. If this House accepts that proposal, Mr. Speaker, it might as well adjourn right this minute. It is a proposition of take it or leave it. What are you going to do, stand up or lay down?

Mr. Speaker, if we are going to legislate on matters in that way we better quit. We appropriated $50,000 to study this subject. In 2 weeks the committee reverses itself. Let it report a bill here on which there was unanimous agreement in the committee, those provisions on which there was a unanimous agreement. I dare them to do that, then let them ask for a closed rule.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Does not this mean that the increased Federal expenditures to the extent of about 90 percent will go to five States?

Mr. EBERHARTER. It means, according to the figures I have, that 76 percent will go to 3 States; 84 percent will go to the 10 richest States and the 10 poorest States will not get one cent. Are we going to legislate that way under a gag rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the previous question so as to try to secure an open rule on this bill for the following reasons:

In the first place, because the cost of living has risen and many of us believe that the old-age provisions of this bill ought to be more generous than they are. We believe the House should have an opportunity to vote on amendments that would give this Nation a true national old-age-pension system.

In the second place, the freezing of the taxes in this bill is wrong from an economic standpoint and unsound from every point of view. I think these taxes ought to have been allowed to go up at the beginning of the war. I believe with economic conditions as they are now the taxes should to be allowed to go up at this time.

Further I believe the coverage of the act should be extended to those groups not now covered, farmers, agricultural workers the self-employed and others.

In the next place I should like to see a provision in the bill so that the blind people will be encouraged to make earnings besides their pension. I have introduced such a bill.

I come from a State that would benefit under the provisions of the bill as written and I am certainly for the bill with the exception of the tax provisions. However, I believe the variable grant feature is a sound feature and is socially desirable.

In the next place I want to say that several States in the Union have passed disability insurance laws. California is one of them. I believe those States ought to be able to recover their own tax money so that they may make those disability payments.

I fully realize I cannot have my way about all the things. But I do think the House should have a chance to consider them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the social-security bill now under consideration was brought up under closed rule. I will vote against the rule and against the previous question. This is putting a gag upon all the Members of the House who desire to offer amendments to the bill and particularly those of us who are urging modification of the social-security program in order to provide a reasonable allowance for our elderly citizens who are now denied a sufficient income to keep body and soul together. I urge that this rule be voted down so that we may then offer amendments to the social-security legislation, providing for increased allowances to the old people of our country who are in dire need.

On February 16, 1945, I introduced H. R. 2230 which was a companion bill to H. R. 2229 and which had for its purpose the providing of monthly annuities to the aged as well as to certain disability and hardship cases. These bills were referred to the Ways and Means Committee. Eighty-seven Members of this House filed a petition with the Ways and Means Committee urging that a hearing be granted on these bills and the legislation reported out for consideration on the floor. The hearing was granted and extensive testimony was taken on the merits of the legislation. However, the Ways and Means Committee has taken no action to date on the bills, and with the imminent recess of the Congress, we will not have an opportunity to pass upon the legislation.

At the hearings I exhibited petitions signed by citizens throughout the United States in almost every State of the Union, aggregating 14,000 petitions requesting that legislation of this type be passed. In my own State alone an excess of 35,000 citizens signed the petition. These petitions show the widespread interest throughout the Nation for the enactment of old age security legislation. If this rule is voted down and the social-security bill is thereupon considered under an open rule, it is our purpose to offer this legislation as an amendment so that the House may have an opportunity to express its will on this most important legislation.

The Social Security Board reports that for August 1945 the average monthly allowance for aid to the aged in all the States of the Union was $29.97. It ranged from the high of $49.25 to the low of $12.79. In these postwar days, with high costs prevailing for the necessities of life, it does not require argument to demonstrate that such a niggardly payment for the care of our old folks is not only indefensible but a blot upon the good name of America which is presumed to be foremost in providing care for its citizens. We are expending billions from the Federal Treasury for relief in foreign countries, but we permit our old people to eke out an existence in this land of plenty on the miserly sum of $29.97 a month, which is wholly insufficient to maintain an old person in decency and health.

Under the provisions of these proposed bills, all of our people would contribute in proportion to their income in providing funds to meet these monthly payments, and every citizen, on attaining the age of 60 years and not gainfully employed, would be entitled to share on equality with every other citizen in like circumstances in the fund. Furthermore, it would replace many elderly citizens with younger men in the industrial and commercial work of our country and thereby give additional jobs to those on the unemployed rolls.

Before our entry into the war, it was estimated that in 1941 of the persons 60 years of age and over in the United States, 54.9 percent were supported wholly or partially by public or private social agencies or were dependent on children, relatives, or friends for their subsistence and care. A considerable proportion of the remainder received part or all of their support from various pension systems—Federal, State, municipal, industrial, or private.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention or purpose in this brief statement to discuss the merits of this or similar legislation, but merely to call the attention of my colleagues to the necessity of action now upon this important legislation which was sidetracked during the war. As a result of our ingenuity and accomplishments in adapting scientific processes and power machinery for mass production, our workers have not only been able to produce a much greater volume and variety of goods than heretofore to provide food, clothing and shelter, as well as a higher standard of living for our people, but in the process we have eliminated a large segment of our population from participation in the processes. As a result, together with other contributing factors, from 1929 to the beginning of our national defense program, some 10,000,000 or more of our workers were unable to find employment in productive enterprise, and even now with the increased demand for manpower in postwar production, we still have many unemployed workers. These calculations in the main do not take into consideration that larger group of unemployed who are 60 years of age or over, most of whom are denied the right to participate in productive enterprise. It is interesting to note that the United States census for 1890 shows at that time 75 percent of all our people over 65 years of age were gainfully employed. At the present time, 80 percent of our citizens 60 years of age or over are unable to obtain the minimum for decency and health.

The science of production has submerged the science of distribution. The very achievement of our goal, maximum of production with minimum of employment, has undermined our economy by reason of our failure to provide that distribution shall keep pace with production.

If we are to preserve the American way of life and protect our own democracy from disintegration and collapse, we must find a solution for our unemployment problems as well as providing a decent living for those of our citizens who under our economy are unable to be provided with remunerative employment in our system of production. The severest indictment that has been lodged against us is that while we are the richest and most favored Nation on earth, and while we have developed the greatest and most effective productive enterprise the world has ever known for providing the necessities of life—more than sufficient for all—we have failed miserably to provide a method by which the fruits of our industry may be shared equitably by all groups of our people.

National recovery without inflation in the United States is entirely dependent upon full production and an adequate and sustained purchasing power in the hands of the American people. If business and industry are to be assured of opportunity for the steady production of goods with reasonable profits, and if labor is to be assured stable and sufficient employment, with fair wages, purchasing power must keep pace with production. Economic stability depends today almost entirely upon the expansion of demand balanced with full production. With the adequate purchasing power available, demand for commodities and services will come naturally, and this demand will force increased production and in turn stabilize employment and make more work available.

The aged, through no fault of their own, cannot take part in production. In this age it is almost impossible for a man to get a job after he reaches the age of 60. This group over 60 years of age, who have toiled the longest, should not be deprived of taking part in the consumption of goods. They are the victims of an industrial system for which they are not responsible. We owe a duty to our old folks, and we can perform this duty by establishing a national annuity system on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Mr. Speaker, the present bill, as finally reported by the Ways and Means Committee, provides only $5 per month increase to our elderly citizens in the way of Federal help. This is a ridiculously low sum and with the existing allowances, will be wholly insufficient to provide for the bare necessities of life. We must not overlook the fact that they, too, must pay the high and inflated prices now prevailing for their needs and to provide a roof over their heads. I hope the rule will be voted down and an opportunity given to do justice to our elderly citizens. I am willing to forego our recess and stay in session until we pass legislation along the lines of H. R. 2230 and do justice to our old people who are in dire need.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my distinguished colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] was not able to be present at the last session of the Ways and Means Committee, when this bill was reported out.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I am glad to yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say to the gentleman that I was present and voted on every proposition before the committee up until the time it reported the first bill. It is too bad that the committee reversed its position on the other proposition.

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; I know that the gentleman was there quite regularly at first but the gentleman was not there when the bill was finally passed on by the committee. That is the only point I want to establish.

Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Committee is made up of 15 Members from the Democratic side and 10 Members from the Republican side. That committee is usually set up so as to give the party in power in the House a good working majority, for the Ways and Means Committee is considered the most important committee of the House.

The committee has worked for months on these social-security matters. It became evident a few weeks ago that we were not going to be able to bring out a bill that would deal with all phases of the social-security laws, so we decided to bring out a bill covering the most pressing matters and those that were noncontroversial. We went along pretty well and agreed on the first four sections of this bill. Then we decided that we should do something for the aged who draw old-age assistance and for the blind and for the dependent children. Of course I was strong for this plan as I had always voted for assistance for the aged and the dependent children, and if you will pardon me, I am proud to say that I am generally considered as having been the author of the blind pension. We decided to raise the Federal contribution to the aged by $5 per month and the blind by the same amount, and to raise the allowance for dependent children by a proportionate amount, when we had gotten this far, some members sought to adopt a new plan for distributing these amounts to these recipients. The plan is known as variable grants. This means that they would abandon the principle that has obtained from the beginning which was the principle of requiring the States to match every dollar that the Government paid. The new principle would require the Government in many instances to put up $2 while the State was only putting up $1. This precipitated a terrific battle in the committee which finally ended by the advocates of the new principle giving up the fight. We agreed unanimously to bring in the present bill and to ask for a closed rule. Many members of the committee today who are supporting this rule were on a different side, as it were, previously.

One of my colleagues who has preceded me made a remark or asked the question, "Why did the Ways and Means Committee change its mind?" The Ways and Means Committee changed its mind because there was involved in this proposition that some were advising a departure from any principle ever before announced in any social-security legislation. I think that the social-security legislation is one of the most comprehensive pieces of legislation that has ever been passed since the Constitution was adopted. Frequently the Ways and Means Committee is criticized for asking for closed rules. It may be that the Ways and Means Committee should be criticized for asking for a closed rule. But it does not request closed rules only when a complicated bill is being considered. When the original social-security bill was before the House no closed rule was requested. It took the House 2 weeks to write that bill that the committee had considered for 9 weeks.

As I have said this is not a gag rule. Here is what happened. Some members of the committee sought to inject a new principle, a principle we call the variable grant theory. That is the principle that the gentleman from Tennessee wants incorporated in this law. He wants to beat the previous question and then have the right to offer his new plan as a part of the bill. He in his own power wants to supplant in a few minutes here this afternoon what 24 members of the committee declined to ask for after months of study. Many of you who would like to offer the Townsend plan or any one of about 80 amendments that might be made, all of which are sensible and right proper, you have been led to believe that you could have that right if the rule is voted down, will not get a chance to put your plans before the House. You may think that you will have the chance, but may I say neither time nor expediency will permit as we are nearing the close of this session. You know how things move here. It is not the intention of those who are most active in their attempt to defeat this rule to permit the Townsend leaders to get a vote on their bill. I say this because all of you who know the history of Doctor Townsend and his efforts to get hearings before this House know that these hearings were had more because of the insistence of Republicans than that of the New Dealers. You well remember the flippant remarks made by Mrs. Roosevelt when Dr. Townsend first came to Washington in behalf of his plan. I know and the Townsend leaders of the early days will know what the Republican Members on the Ways and Means Committee did to procure hearings for him and his friends. I know because I did my humble part in securing complete hearings for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me devote a minute or two to the matter of the Ways and Means Committee changing its mind—I refer to the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Do you mean that our good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] did not have a right to change his mind? Do you mean to say that the gentleman from North Carolina had to come to you and ask you if he could change his mind? I say to you that we Republican members of the committee are defending the action of the gentleman from North Carolina and the 13 other Democratic members of this committee. They saw that if any legislation was to be passed it must be legislation without any new-fangled doctrines.

Now then, let us talk about this social-security section of this bill. Some are disappointed because of a table of figures that has been passed around and placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]. It shows that if this bill is passed some States will receive more Government funds than others—that is only natural. The States with larger populations should have more than the small States. But, my friends, do not forget that no State will get this $5 increase from the Government unless and until that State has matched it with a $5 contribution.

The State that will receive little or nothing are those that have declined to pay the aged and blind the limit of $20 that is now paid by the Government. If those States only want to pay $8 or $10 to their recipients then they cannot complain if the Government only pays $8 or $10. The Government stands ready to match up to $20 per month and under this bill, if passed, the Government is willing to raise its matching up to $25. If the State will do the same the recipient will then receive $25 per month from the Government and $25 from the State.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee will go down to his State and have his State legislature raise the State payments up to $25 and will pay $25 then he will get as much for his State per capita as any other State. This chart of figures shows that Ohio will receive a certain sum from this law. Let me say to my good friend from Tennessee that Ohio will not receive $1 from this law unless the legislature of our State meets and raises the State contribution from $20 to $25. In order to receive we must first be ready to pay.

What are you complaining about? Do you want to get something for nothing? Do you expect the people in my State to provide for the people of your State? Why does not your legislature get together and act? As I have heretofore said several times, the great commanding principle of social security is that the State determines who is entitled to receive benefits and how much he is to receive; that the Government will then pay one-half of that amount if the State will pay the other half. Your distinguished floor leader was a member of the Ways and Means Committee when the original social-security bill was written, and he knows what I am saying is true. The very basic principle of it is matching. The Federal Government said to every State, "If you want to get money out of the Federal Government, you go back to your State and you pass a law meeting the requirements prescribed by the Federal law and when you come forward with $5 we will come forward with $5, and if you will come forward with any sum up to $20 we will do the same.

I appreciate that some States are not as wealthy as others, but it is not expected that those States will pay as much as some others, but it is left to the people of each State to determine for themselves. It is strictly a home rule local matter to decide how much they want to pay to those people.

Somebody referred to California. California having so many visitors has a very difficult problem and that State pays an allowance to its aged and blind and certainly is entitled to a larger contribution from the Government. They have more social-security problems than we have in many of these States in the interior.

In conclusion to you who say you will not get anything let me say that you should throw the responsibility on the shoulders of the members of the legislatures of your respective States. You may not know it, but it is to the credit of all of your States that gradually year by year your States are becoming more liberal to your aged and blind and unfortunates. The passage of this bill will encourage them to increase their contribution in order to secure the amount which the Government is ready to pay under this matching system.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee is trying to get us all into an old skin game; you know the old game of put one and take two, and he is grousing because we reported out a bill that will not permit him to get away with it. He has not been entirely fair with the House in presenting the figures that he did. He presented figures for 1943 to 1944. If he had called up the Social Security Board and asked for the figures for 1945, he would have found a considerably different picture presented.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not yield. The gentleman has had his time.

We might just as well face this thing frankly. It is either this bill or nothing. From a political angle, if I wanted to play politics, I would join the gentleman from Tennessee and help kill this legislation, but there is too much involved. You are taking care of the soldiers in this bill; you are taking care of the seamen in this bill; you are taking care of the aged in this bill, the blind, and the dependent children. It is either this bill or nothing. The gentleman is willing to sacrifice everything in order to play the old skin game of put one and take two.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it not true that the Senate has already passed the provision with reference to the soldiers, and we must do this out of justice to ourselves?

Mr. KNUTSON. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I do not yield.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Is it not true that prior to 1935 the Federal Government made no contribution to old-age assistance, and it is only since 1935 that the Federal Government has stepped into the picture? It stepped in then at a time when the States were practically broke; but today the picture is reversed; it is the Federal Government that probably needs some help from the States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course. As usual, the gentleman is right. When I say that I mean it. He is a valuable member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. The point that seems to be overlooked by everybody who has talked on the other side of this question is that the amount of money that should be paid to every oldster is fixed by the State Legislature of the State and not by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is absolutely true.

Mr. GEARHART. The only thing is that they want the Federal Government to come in and reimburse the State for one-half of what the State fixed by its own legislature. Every State would get the same if they fixed the maximum that is now allowed by law.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is right. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that our great chairman would not have consented to bring in a bill that would work an injustice on his own State. If the gentleman will also call up the Social Security Board and ask for the 1945 figures instead of juggling around with a lot of old chestnuts, the gentleman will be better informed.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot, my time is so limited. I think I have been pretty generous.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am going to yield to my good friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is there any truth to the report that the Committee on Rules refused a rule on the original recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means and said they would not give a rule unless this bill embodied such provisions?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not know. I am not a member of the Committee on Rules, neither am I in the confidence of the great Committee on Rules.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As a member of the Committee on Rules, may I advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that report is absolutely false.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thought it was but I could not speak authoritatively. I try to be careful with my facts.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LYNCH. May I say that the Committee on Rules heard us on four or five different occasions, I think, and gave us every consideration.

Mr. KNUTSON. The committee was most generous.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Why did they not grant you a rule on the bill on which you requested a rule? Why did they refuse?

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is asking a leading question and the speaker is not informed.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If the gentleman will yield, I can answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying that the Committee on Rules did grant the rule that was requested by the Committee on Ways and Means, and we are now asking for the adoption of that rule.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think that is the reason we have all this griping.

There is another thing I want to say in the brief time that is left. If we do not pass this legislation the pay-roll tax automatically goes up to 2½ percent on the worker and the employer. Personally, I strongly feel that we now take altogether too much in the way of taxes out of the toiler's pay envelope. They already have a surplus of $7,000,000,000 in the fund. The committee took that into consideration when they reversed themselves and arranged to freeze the present rate of 1 percent on both employer and employee for another year.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I must yield to the gentleman, of course.

Mr. COOLEY. If the Committee on Ways and Means exercises their right to change their mind why does the committee want to prevent the House from exercising the right to change its mind and adopt the first bill that you approved in committee? I assume the committee did that.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman would give the matter some study he would know that we cannot write tax legislation on the floor of the House.

Mr. COOLEY. The committee reported the bill out on July 1 and said it was a good bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Your party came into power in 1931. You then tried to pass a tax bill with an open rule. The result was so disastrous that the bill had to be recommitted to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. COOLEY. You reported the bill out after 5 months' study.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; but I cannot yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the rule will be adopted. I may say that there is less friction and less politics in the Committee on Ways and Means than any other committee in the House with the possible exception of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which seems to think along with its chairman on any and all questions. But in our case, it is a matter of meeting of minds. There is no politics. We went before the Committee on Rules and both majority and minority members joined in asking for the rule. I do not recall a single vote had on this measure in the Committee on Ways and Means that was along party lines. Majority and minority members were found voting on both sides of each question. So when I appear before you today and urge you to adopt this rule I am merely carrying on the spirit of nonpartisanship that is always practiced among ourselves when we are in committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, my colleague [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing today with a condition and not with an opinion. It is a question of either this bill which the Committee on Rules has reported for the consideration of the House or it is no legislation or worse than none. That is my honest opinion about the situation. I yield to no one so far as my physical and mental track goes in my desire to do everything that is reasonably possible for the blind, dependent children, and needy old people. I have lived with this subject of social security since 1935 and I am acquainted with all its ups and downs. I know something about it. I tried to have something provided in this bill that would do more to help my State and other States similarly situated in providing more adequate help to needy old people, the blind, and dependent children. I found that it was impossible to go further at this time than is provided in the bill and that we would fail to do anything and the other desirable provisions of this bill would be lost and the work of the committee for months and months would be lost unless this bill were accepted.

The House was good enough to allow us $50,000 for expenditures for a technical study. We secured as good a staff as we could have obtained for twice this sum but spent less than $20,000. We have more to show for our work than any other committee that I have ever known. We have a report by the staff that will be an invaluable asset to the future work on this subject. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] with great zeal and enthusiasm has been going around here buttonholing Members for 3 days and has made two long speeches in the RECORD. I should like to ask where he was when we were laboring and holding public hearings on this subject? Why did he not appear before our committee and state his position then? We were doing all we could. He was as absent as the dead. We never heard from him.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. No; I do not yield at this time.

After reporting H. R. 6911 on July 1 on a divided vote, we encountered a minority report, signed by six members of the Committee, and when we applied to the Rules Committee for a rule, those who had signed the minority report appeared in opposition to the type of rule we had agreed from the outset would be necessary if any legislation on the subject were to be adopted before the recess or adjournment of Congress.

In fact, owing to the long time required by our special staff studying social security, and the lengthy hearings, beginning February 25 and running until June 7, it was recognized and agreed by all, I think, at least that was the understanding in our committee that it would be impossible to enact a bill which was controversial and for the consideration of which a special rule could not be obtained and adopted. Those of the majority had hoped and expected that we would be able to reach an agreement with the minority on the type of rule which we could operate under, but failing in this after three different appearances before the Rules Committee, and the opposition apparently more and more determined that a rule should not be granted that would make possible the enactment of the bill, we then realized that we were dealing with a stubborn condition and not with an opinion or a hope.

Those of us who were so anxious to have some legislation before Congress adjourned realized that unless a compromise was reached, it was futile to attempt to go ahead with an effort to pass the bill. So, after different conferences, the committee unanimously reported the bill under consideration, H. R. 7037, and the Rules Committee granted the type of rule we requested.

I believe if those who are opposing the bill in its present form and the adoption of the rule had been present in our efforts to agree on a bill which we could hope to have enacted, that they would have been convinced that the bill now under consideration was the best that could possibly be secured at this time. Unfortunately, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] who has submitted a minority report, was not to be found and did not attend the various meetings and conferences from that time until after the bill now under consideration was agreed upon and a rule secured for its consideration. The trouble with the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is that he is dealing with things as he would like to have them and not as they actually are. He is at least one Congress ahead of what it is possible to do. We have not finished our work, and the provisions of the bill to which he so strenuously objects in the minority report are only temporary and for 1 year, 1947, until the committee can have time and opportunity to go into the matter more fully and until the House could have time to debate and consider a bill containing the objectives which not only the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] but many of us earnestly favor and for which we fought as long as there was hope of success. To consider this bill under a rule other than the one under consideration would mean I plan no legislation or worse than no legislation. There are now before our committee some 87 bills dealing with changes in the social-security law, and if the previous question should be voted down and the rule open to amendments, then every one of these 87 bills could be offered as an amendment, and perhaps others might be, requiring days of debate.

Of course I would not take the responsibility of calling up the bill or giving the matter further consideration if the House should take this action. There are many good provisions in the bill concerning which there were no objections and upon which we all agreed, and if the House wants to take the responsibility of having no legislation whatever rather than what is contained in the bill, that is its responsibility.

Those of us who have struggled with the matter day in and day out for months have done the best we could. We do not claim the bill is perfect nor contains all we would like for it to contain. We know it does not. Neither is our task completed, as it will be the duty and responsibility of the Committee on Ways and Means, either in the present or in the new Congress, to take up this legislation where we left off and to consider the subjects which we did not have time to deal with and to legislate permanently on the controversial provisions omitted from the bill.

No one could possibly more strongly favor more than is being done for the old people than myself.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] made an observation in relation to legislation of this kind that those of us who have served on the Ways and Means Committee and lived through the development of the original Social Security Act, as he and I and the Members in 1935 did, know merits the deep consideration of the House, that "we are confronted with a condition and not a theory." I served on the Ways and Means Committee for 10 years before I was elected by my Democratic colleagues as majority leader. I served on that committee when we drafted the original Social Security Act which is the keystone of social reform in America. The members of the committee at that time and later when we made the important changes in 1938 or 1939, both Republicans and Democrats, have made marked contributions to the best interests of the average person in America.

Now, this is a condition and not a theory. There are important matters in this bill whereby people will be benefited. I think it is either this bill or nothing. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] has exercised his rights under the rules. There is no finer Member than he, in my opinion. He is exercising his rights, but I think he took the wrong course. If I were in his position, I would have taken the course of action that while I regretted the closed rule, I would not oppose it, and then I would state in debate what I thought should be done and that I hoped when the bill went to the Senate, an amendment along such lines would be incorporated in the bill and then the House could either agree or the bill could go to conference.

In 1938, when changes were made, I took the position then, not departing from the matching system, which I would not want to do, that this should not be taken away from local control. We do not want to get away from local control in the handling of applications, and in the determination of the amounts that the aged applicant should receive and leaving it to the local people to handle the problems. I suggested that two-thirds of the first $15 should be contributed by the Federal Government, without regard to the States. I considered it favorably as a member of the Ways and Means Committee. At that time I could not see my way clear to support this variable plan. If that bill came up with the variable plan, this House would be engaged in debate for a long while.

Under the circumstances I doubt very much if we would get any legislation through. As I understand it, the committee did not change its course, but they adopted the practical course that any legislators would, wanting to get the best they could through in the closing days of the session, eliminated the controversial features of the bill first reported out and then reported this bill knowing that there is no controversial feature in it.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it not a fact that all through the social-security theory runs the matching basis?

Mr. MCCORMACK. You cannot get away from it. If you get away from it you get into the Federal Government with its vast machinery in absentia, away from the fellow who gets the benefit and whom we want to have the benefit. The local people must administer it. That is the basis of the social-security system.

I hope the rule will be adopted and then if in the Senate an amendment is put in somewhat along the lines consistent with the matching system we can consider it when it comes back from the Senate.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that on such a very important matter as the social-security bill the debate on the rule has been limited to 1 hour, which means that even members of the committee are extremely limited in time, and other Members of the House have little or no opportunity to discuss the question.

This rule is, of course, a closed rule, and it provides that no amendments may be offered to the pending social-security bill, except those offered by the Committee on Ways and Means. Two arguments are advanced in favor of such a procedure: One is that the House is unable to properly write this bill on the floor, and the other is, as I understand it, that it would take too long.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly as anxious as any other Member to close this session of Congress at the earliest possible time, but I am not willing to sacrifice social-security legislation for that purpose. The truth is that the bill unamended—as has been admitted by members of the committee—is a very little approach to a very big problem.

The bill only attempts to make a few minor changes. Title I freezes the rate of contribution at 1 percent instead of permitting it to go up to 2½ percent. Title II provides some benefits for deceased veterans, but gives no consideration to veterans who are fortunately alive as contemplated by my bill, H. R. 5487, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means on February 14, 1946. Title III includes maritime workers, but continues to leave out millions of other workers in the United States. Title IV makes a number of technical and miscellaneous provisions. Title V makes a few minor increases in grants for old-age assistance, dependent children, and aid to the blind.

Mr. Speaker, it can be truly said of this legislation that the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse. Granting the difficulty and complexity of the subject, the present bill, as I have said, is an inconsequential approach to a very great social problem. That such a bill has to be either passed or rejected without the opportunity of any one of our 435 Members to offer the important amendments it needs is a position which I cannot subscribe to, and I, therefore, must oppose this gag rule.

I can only say, in conclusion, that this is one more piece of unfinished business which I hope the Eightieth Congress will dispose of in its earlier days instead of putting it off for haphazard and brief consideration at the end of the session.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this legislation providing for amendments to the Social Security Act came to the floor this afternoon under what is known as a closed rule—a better name is gag rule. I realize it is rather unpopular to criticize the action of the great Ways and Means Committee of the House with respect to legislation it has proposed as well as the manner in which it is submitted. I have the highest regard for every member of that committee. It is composed of leading Members from both sides of the aisle. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate, I think it is wrong that the committee has seen fit to bring this important bill comprising more than 60 pages to the floor of the House under a rule whereby no amendments, no changes, no substitute measures are permitted to be offered. We are told by the leadership of this committee that we must either vote for or against this bill exactly as written or there will be no legislation dealing with social security this year.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to the people of this country, and especially to the millions affected by this legislation, that this bill should come to the House during the last few days of the session with only 2 hours during which to consider and debate it. The bill affects the welfare of millions of needy people. It ought to have been presented several months ago instead of being brought to the floor at the eleventh hour with a demand that we either pass it or have no legislation. The rule should be voted down and opportunity given to offer amendments. Why should the Members of this House surrender their right to amend legislation if they see fit to do so? This is no ordinary measure. It is entitled to full and complete discussion.

Only a few weeks ago this House spent many hours discussing legislation whose importance did not begin to compare with this proposal. If the Membership of the House is not in favor of amendments that may be offered, then it could vote them down but it ought not to foreclose itself by failing to permit a right to which it is entitled. Now I want to call your attention somewhat briefly to some of the inequities in this legislation. There are four titles. I call especial attention to the grants for old-age assistance. At the present time expeditures for old-age assistance amount to $327,000,000. These funds are, of course, matched by the States. This bill provides for an increase of Federal old-age assistance in the sum of $27,000,000. Now let us see how it is divided. Under the present bill, Kansas will receive an increase of $302,000. Colorado, with no more population than our State, will get four times as much or $1,496,000. Massachusetts has a population of three times that of Kansas but she will get 15 times as much money or $4,960,000. The State of Washington, which compares in size with my State, will get $2,200,000 which is seven times as much as my State will receive. Now take a look at California. Of course, it is a big State. It is larger than Kansas but not so much larger that it should receive over $13,000,000 which is almost one-half of all the increase under this bill. You are giving 90 percent of all of the increased funds to 10 States. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is wrong. The bill is a gross inequity and absolutely unfair. It is not right that the people of Kansas and other States should receive small allocations but are required to pay Federal taxes in order to take care of the allowances in the favored States. The formula in this bill is wrong. It ought to be corrected.

I was given to understand that the membership of the Ways and Means Committee at the beginning of this year were going to give careful study to the whole problem of old-age assistance and aid to dependent people. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated to furnish advice and information to this committee so it could be carefully studied, but at this late hour we are handed a piece of legislation that is wholly inadequate, inequitable, and disappointing.

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, here again we have another tragic case where the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse. H. R. 7037, presented to us under a closed rule today, is totally inadequate from any point of view.

I happen to come from one of the 10 richest States in the country whose aged would get 90 percent of the increase in old-age-assistance money we are asked to vote on today. Of course, I will vote for the bill. Naturally I want our needy old people in California to get $50 a month instead of $40 a month. But I cannot help thinking of the old people in Georgia whose average monthly grant is $11.81 and will remain there under this bill. Or the old people in Kentucky who can look forward to no improvement in their present average of $11.67, or in North Carolina with $13.78, or Alabama with $15.86.

The Ways and Means Committee reported to this House a bill, H. R. 6911, which, while far from adequate, at least was equitable in that it gave some benefit to all States through a larger Federal contribution to the pocrer States and was reasonably realistic in recognizing the increase in cost of living by raising ceilings in old-age assistance and aid to the blind to $60 a month.

But where is H. R. 6911? Why do we have to vote today on this miserable substitute?

Even H. R. 6911 was a pitiful answer to the crying need of our people for security. Last year we appropriated $50,000 to the Ways and Means Committee for a comprehensive social-security study so that never again would we have to be confronted with a last-minute expedient on the ground that our time was too short, our knowledge too inadequate. The committee produced an excellent technical survey, 742 pages of analyses, statistics and graphs, all going to show—so that even a child could scarcely be confused—the inadequacy of our whole social-security system; the need for broader coverage and more adequate benefits in the insurance programs, the need for new kinds of benefits and the need for a comprehensive assistance program which would really put a floor under poverty in this country. The committee held hearings that lasted for months. Group representatives of every interest in this country—business, labor, churches, welfare administrators, women's clubs, veterans, assistance recipients and dozens of others plead with the committee for a more liberal social-security program.

And what did they get? A modest little bill, H. R. 6911, which was so inadequate that many of those interested in a real social-security program ignored it. It's one real contribution to an improvement in our total situation was the recognition of the need for more equitable distribution of Federal assistance funds. But now it appears that we in the House are not to be permitted to vote even on this modest improvement in our social-security program.

I have never been an advocate of any pension system other than the social-security program. I have felt that we must protect the interest of those who have contributed to our old-age and survivors' program and make that program adequate both as to coverage and benefits. I want to see everybody under that system, even—if it is humanly possible—those elder citizens who have already retired from the labor market. I want them to get benefits which are adequate to live on in decency, dignity and health and to get them as a matter of legal right. I want the assistance program to take its rightful role as the comprehensive, residual program to take care of the unusual situation, to put a safety net under the insurance program and a floor under poverty as contemplated in H. R. 5686, the Forand bill.

But what are we who want a reasonable progressive liberalization of our social-security program to do? Where are we to turn for action if even the majority of the Ways and Means Committee cannot bring us a bill in which to express the wishes of our people?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GORE) there were—ayes 163, noes 82.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7037, to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7037, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the action of the House in making possible the consideration of this bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee, and that is said with no criticism whatever of those who took a different view. The matter of changing the social-security law and amending it is a controversial subject. As I stated previously, I have lived with this subject ever since 1935. I had the honor and privilege of being chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when that committee reported to the House the first bill ever reported by any committee on social security and I have always felt very proud of that. At that time we set up the social-security system and, while the law has been amended from time to time since, while not yet perfect, it still retains its original framework as that has been tested and found sound. The present bill is the best we can get under the conditions that obtain today, the conditions under which we were compelled to work.

Mr. Chairman, we held lengthy hearings on this matter from the 25th of February to about the 5th of June. It is said that we had months and months. Of course, there were months and months occupied in the consideration of this matter, but most of that time was used by our staff, a very competent and efficient staff, which we selected as the result of the generosity of the House in implementing our committee with funds to make the study. I think we had the most competent staff I have ever known.

After the staff had completed their work and made their report, which has been mentioned here today, we began then an extensive consideration of the subject. The reason we got at it rather late was not because we were slow in getting out a report. While our committee is not perfect, it does work. Our committee would have been able to report a bill earlier had it not been for the fact that we had to consider the Reciprocal Trade Act and that took quite a lot of time. It was a very controversial subject. Then we had the Philippine Independence Act, on which we worked for months. We found when we went to work on it that it was not as simple as we at first thought. Then we found that the departments were not in agreement, so we took a little time to work that out, in order to report a bill that we could truly be responsible for.

We began work on the social-security bill as early as we could and worked as continuously as it was reasonably possible. We realized that due to the early adjournment of Congress, the limited time, and the importance of the subject that it would be impossible to get anything enacted during the remainder of this session of the Congress that was of a controversial nature or upon which disagreement could not be reconciled by members of our committee. We proceeded all the way with that understanding; that is, that we would have to leave controversial matters for future study and future determination. We proceeded that way until we had completed our work, completed our hearings, completed our executive sessions, and got ready to report out our bill, and when we did that we found that there was a difference of opinion as to what we could get through, as to what should go in the bill. When we reported the bill out after extended executive sessions we had a minority which was unyielding and inflexible, but just as sincere as the majority. They believed that certain provisions the majority wanted should not go into the bill. But we reported the bill with these provisions. We thought perhaps we could reconcile those differences. The minority submitted a very strong minority report, so we could not reach an agreement on the bill as reported. Finally, to make possible enactment of legislation, we made changes in two titles of the bill. If we had not done this it would have been impossible to get through any legislation and we could not assume responsibility for it.

I should like to explain briefly the provisions of H. R. 7037. At the outset, I want to make it plain that this bill does not represent the final consideration of social-security legislation by the Committee on Ways and Means. Instead, it should be regarded largely as a temporary measure designed to freeze the old-age and survivors' insurance tax rate and to somewhat liberalize old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind for the next year while permanent changes in both the insurance and assistance programs are being perfected. The legislation also takes care, for the time being, of old-age and survivors' insurance protection of families of veterans who die within 3 years after discharge.

I share with many of you the feeling that both the insurance and the assistance provisions in the bill fall far short of what is desirable for permanent legislation. Public assistance recipients, particularly those in low-income States, receive inadequate assistance under existing law and there should be some basic changes to remedy this situation.

The bill does, however, contain several permanent provisions which are worthy of note.

For many years coverage of maritime service for unemployment compensation has been a troublesome issue before the Congress. Numerous bills have been introduced on the subject, and there has been a great division of opinion as to what would be appropriate legislation in this field. Your committee believes that the problem is effectively solved by the provisions of H. R. 7037, which have been cooperatively worked out among the several interested groups. Enactment of these provisions has been recommended by representatives of the State unemployment compensation agencies, ship owners, maritime employees, the social-security administration, and the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries who has long and faithfully endeavored to perfect legislation in this field.

The bill also has amendments which would extend child welfare services to the Virgin Islands, thus placing them on a par under the Social Security Act with Puerto Rico.

In addition, the legislation contains a substantial number of perfecting amendments which correct anomalies and inequities in the old-age and survivors' insurance system.

Thus H. R. 7037 attains valuable permanent changes as well as temporary provisions, and is a bill which should be speedily enacted.

I might summarize the pending bill very briefly by titles. Title I amends the Federal Insurance Contributions Act so as to fix employer and employee contribution rates at 1 percent each for the calendar year 1947. It also repeals a section added to the Social Security Act in 1943 authorizing the Congress to make any necessary appropriations to the old-age and survivors' insurance trust fund.

Title II amends the old-age and survivors' insurance provisions by adding provisions with respect to veterans who die within 3 years after their discharge. In general, it guarantees survivors of veterans within its purview the same old-age and survivors' insurance benefit rights they would have enjoyed had the veteran died fully insured under old-age and survivors' insurance with $160 per month average wage and as many years of covered employment as the calendar years in which he had military service after September 16, 1940.

Title III amends the Unemployment Compensation Tax Act so as to include maritime employment and authorizes the States to subject maritime employment to their State unemployment compensation laws. It also provides during a temporary period ending June 30, 1949, credit for maritime service with the Federal Government on vessels operated by the Maritime Commission, and provides for using this credit for benefits under State unemployment compensation laws.

Title IV extends title V of the Social Security Act, Child Welfare Services to the Virgin Islands, and contains technical changes facilitating payments and adjusting certain minor anomalies and inequities under old-age and survivors' insurance.

Title V, for the last quarter of this year and for next year, raises the ceiling on old-age assistance and aid to the blind from the present $40 maximum to a $50 maximum. It also raises the ceiling for aid to dependent children from the present $18 for the first child in a family to $27 and the $12 ceiling for other children in the family to $18.

The estimated costs for providing social-security benefits for families of deceased servicemen through the year 1959 would amount to some $175,000,000, according to estimates of the Social Security Board. The cost of extending title V of the Social Security Act to the Virgin Islands would be some $65,000 per year. The cost of the temporary protection extended to maritime employees should not exceed $3,000,000 if the general rate of maritime and nonmaritime unemployment gets no higher than at present. This amount would, of course, be substantially increased in case unemployment gets higher than at present during the reconversion period.

The cost of raising the ceilings on public assistance may be estimated roughly as from $47,000,000 to $50,000,000. The actual cost, of course, will depend upon the State expenditures under the public-assistance programs. The cost to the Federal Government would be substantially greater if the States increase the amount of State and local expenditures much beyond the expenditures for the fiscal year 1943–44, upon which the estimates are based.

I should like at this point to report briefly on the investigation of the Social Security Act which has been made by the Committee on Ways and Means pursuant to House Resolution 204, adopted on March 26, 1945.

The committee was very careful in its selection of a technical staff which was employed to review and report on operations under the act and problems of coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto. This staff filed a comprehensive report in January of this year, covering all these matters, and extensive hearings have been held subsequently. There hearings were started toward the end of February of this year and completed on June 7. As I stated on the concluding day, the committee worked with reasonable regularity during the entire period and heard each and every witness who asked to appear. The hearing was in three parts—the first part on old-age and survivors' insurance, the second on public assistance, and the third on unemployment compensation. The printed report of these hearings is 1,510 pages in length and covers the testimony of 157 witnesses, some of whom appeared more than once. In addition to the witnesses who appeared a large number submitted statements to the committee.

As a result of the investigation and hearings, the Congress now has available a body of information essential to making needed changes in the various social-security programs. The Committee on Ways and Means is impressed with the importance of very careful and painstaking consideration of many types of permanent changes such as fixing an appropriate tax schedule, extension of coverage, the benefit formulas, the improvement and extension of benefits, and other matters which will improve the system, all of which are found to be most closely interrelated.

The committee has, of course, from time to time been faced with pressing matters other than social security, such as the Philippine Trade Act, which required extended consideration and necessarily interrupted the work on social-security legislation. The committee was also faced with the fact that an early adjournment of the Congress is in prospect. Accordingly, the time for consideration of social-security legislation has been quite limited and the committee has been in full agreement that it would be unwise to effect any basic changes on a piecemeal basis. Consequently, as I have above outlined, H. R. 7037 is limited in scope and deals only with comparatively simple and noncontroversial legislative changes which could be speedily considered and enacted by the Congress.

All of us know that basic changes must and will be made in the programs and many of us wish that the pending legislation could contain those permanent changes. However, we are faced with an actuality of limited time and the necessity for noncontroversial legislation if its passage is to be secured within that time. Each member of the Committee on Ways and Means gave up insistence on some provisions which he felt important so as to insure that the legislation would be unanimously reported by the committee. I feel certain that each Member of the House will likewise be relinquishing consideration of provisions which he feels to be important. But members of the Committee on Ways and Means—and, I am sure, Members of the House as well—feel that it is highly important that the provisions of H. R. 7037 should be speedily enacted into law and will vote accordingly.

While there is hardly a State in this Union, in my opinion, that is not able to do more for the needy old people than it is doing, they are very inadequately provided for in many States. Many of us wanted to change the law to make it so that low-income States, under a variable grant formula, would not have to put up 50 percent but the matching would be done on a more liberal basis than the 50 percent. This would have given the needy old people additional benefits. I shall continue to fight for this more liberal approach in Federal grants.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a rather peculiar thing that the Members who want to rewrite the bill on the floor of the House failed to come before us and give us the benefit of their wisdom while we were considering this legislation?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Of course, that would have been equally as appropriate and possibly more helpful, but they did not do it. Those that are making the greatest noise about it now and have been exercising themselves so strenuously for the last few days, we did not hear a word from them. But now it is close to the election. I do not impugn anybody's motives; I do not do that. But if they had been as anxious and as much interested and as zealous then, and if their zealousness had been accompanied by knowledge, and they had appeared before our committee, possibly they could have converted the members of the committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, the instant bill does not satisfy any member of the Committee on Ways and Means. Every one of us, upon whatever side of the aisle we sit, would like to have brought in a more comprehensive measure. The party conventions of both political parties in 1940 declared in favor of an expanded and a more generous old-age security program. But the time consumed in the preparatory investigations—the preliminary studies which would make it possible for us to formulate that kind of legislation—was so great that there simply was not enough time left when we commenced our labors—our efforts to write the kind of a bill which every one of us hoped we would be able to write at the beginning of the year. However, we have done pretty well. We have brought in some constructive amendments which, when added to the social-security law, will greatly improve the system, I am quite sure. A great deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed today because a few States—among them my own—will be allotted much more money by increasing the Federal contribution from $20 to $25 than others. Every State in the Union can get just as much as the States which now get more money if they are willing to contribute more themselves. In other words, the amount to be paid to each individual oldster under our social-security scheme is determined not by the Congress but by the legislature of the particular State. California has decreed that pensions can be paid up to $50 per month to each oldster. That sets in motion the Federal law. Depending, therefore, on what the State does, the Federal Government will contribute to the extent of 50 percent up to a maximum of $25. The point I make is simply that the amount to be paid every State is not to be determined by the Congress of the United States but is determined by the legislature of each particular State, and that is the way it ought to be.

I yield to my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. My colleague has studied this problem for a number of years. May I inquire from his knowledge of the subject, whether he believes the principle of matching contributions on a 50–50 basis should be retained permanently or whether it should be abandoned at this time, as some advocate?

Mr. GEARHART. I think that it can be said after all these years that we have had a Federal Social Security System, this, insofar as old-age assistance is concerned, that the matching principle is sound, since it has worked so well all these years it ought to be adhered to, at least until a better system is devised, and, certainly, the variable grant, with all of its inequities, cannot be so regarded.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Also, is it not a good principle to keep that contributory system close to the people who get the benefits? They know what the local conditions are. California has one condition. Tennessee has another. By adhering to this matching principle, we leave the problem to each State to solve in its own way, this as they understand their own problems.

Mr. GEARHART. Each individual State under this system reserves the right to determine for itself just how much is to be paid to its own oldsters in the form of old-age assistance. And this, it would seem to me, is the way it should be, at least until we embark upon a Federal system which is supported by a Federal tax based upon the principle of pay as you go.

I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I believe, in view of the fact that previous figures were printed in our report and we now have the figures based on 1945, it should be brought out and stressed that with respect to dependent children all the States in the Union except five will receive benefits. With respect to old-age assistance, 39 of the States will receive benefits under the pending bill.

Mr. GEARHART. I thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] for that contribution.

Under the aid-to-the-blind system, that, too, is based upon equal contributions by the Federal Government and the States, a just system which leaves to each of the States the privilege of determining for itself what it thinks should be paid to its blind citizens. It is a form of decentralization of which we have too little these days. It is State's rights at its best, establishing a balance in State and Federal relationships which is highly desirable.

So let us go a little slow when it comes to taking from the individual States the right to determine what shall be done within the boundaries of the States, especially in respect to a subject matter so intimately related to the general welfare and the ability of the State to operate within the limitations of its own economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is most unfair to consider this legislation under a closed rule. We must remember this legislation affects, directly or indirectly, the present and future welfare of every citizen of our Nation. This legislation should be considered under an open rule where every Member has an opportunity to offer amendments. There are many who believe we should have a Federal old-age insurance program that is federally supported. Under the rule their proposal cannot be voted on by the House.

We have had 10 years' experience with a social-security program—a program that so vitally affects every citizen that in future years it might become more powerful and influential in our national economy than the Government itself.

A social-security program must be geared to the national economy. It cannot remain static. Benefit payments made either under the contributory title or under the Federal-State matching provisions of the law must meet changing economic conditions. Social security based on conditions of 10 years ago may not only be impractical but may be insolvent. The retired worker, the needy aged, the dependent children and the blind of our Nation must buy the necessities of life with present-day purchasing power of the dollar, not the dollar of 10 years ago. Every other group in the Nation has received pay increases and the beneficiaries of this program must have the same consideration. There are many features of this bill that I do not approve but as Congress is going to recess within the next few days, it is this legislation or nothing. Personally, I am disappointed.

The Members of the House of Representatives, realizing the great importance of this legislation, adopted, on March 26, 1945, House Resolution No. 204, which authorized the Ways and Means Committee to hire a technical staff and make a complete study of the present social-security program. The committee was fortunate in securing the services of Leonard J. Calhoun, who, together with other members of his staff, have made a complete study and report to the committee. With this background the Ways and Means Committee began open hearings on proposed changes in the legislation. These hearings were concluded on June 7 of this year. Our committee heard 157 witnesses and their testimony covers over 1,500 printed pages.

It had been my hope that Congress would, as a result of this study and committee hearings, enact legislation which would correct inequities and injustices to millions of our people who qualify or who fail to qualify under the provisions of this act.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

While our present social-security program is recognized as national in scope, it is, in reality, national in theory only. For instance, the payments to over 2,000,000 needy aged persons under title I averaged in 1945 $31.20. These average payments ranged from $11.64 in Kentucky to $52.86 in the State of Washington. Not only do the payments vary among the States of the Nation, but they vary among counties within States. In one State, for example, the average old-age-assistance payment varied from a low of $13 in one county to a high of $36 in another county.

While it is true that economic conditions and costs of living vary in different sections of the Nation and in different States, surely no one would contend that the difference is as wide as is demonstrated by the above figures. The ability of the richer States to provide more adequately for their aged and needy brings about another glaring discrimination among the aged of the different States. While a number of States are able to take advantage of the full 50 percent matching of the $20 per person under existing law, low-income States are unable to do so. The average Federal contribution for old-age assistance in the States ranges from $5.80 to $19.45. One State alone drew nearly three times as much from the Federal funds for old-age assistance as five poorer States which had about the same aged population.

The pending bill increases from $40 to $50 the maximum State expenditure for old-age assistance to any individual on the basis of equal matching by the Federal Government. The increase in Federal contribution for the entire Nation is some over $27,000,000. As many States are unable to take advantage of this increased Federal contribution the inequalities in distribution is further exemplified. For instance, of this total amount California will receive $13,000,000, or approximately one-half of the entire amount carried in the bill. The pending bill increases the Federal contribution for dependent children by 50 percent and increases the payments to the blind on the same basis as the aged. Under the bill as drawn Kansas will receive a total for the three programs of approximately $1,000,000.

Under unanimous consent, I include the following tables:

OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE

Title II of the Social Security Act is the contributory section on which employers and employees contribute equal amounts toward a fund for payments to aged workers. It has been supported for the past few years by a contribution of 1 percent by the employee and 1 percent by the employer. Under this program over 30,000,000 of our workers are in covered employment and over 20,000,000 in uncovered employment. In other words, it extends coverage to about three jobs out of five.

This program is most unfair to millions of our citizens and is especially unfair to the agricultural sections of the Nation. The employer's contribution to this fund is no doubt passed on to the purchasers of the commodities manufactured. This means that those in the agricultural States who purchased tractors, automobiles, farm machinery, and other items manufactured by those under covered employment must pay into an insurance fund for which they can receive no benefit. This situation should be corrected.

The average benefit payment under this program is now $24 to $25 per month. As these payments are less than payments made under the old-age assistance program, 10 percent of the beneficiaries of this insurance are receiving additional support from the old-age assistance section. Many are asking: Why should we contribute a percentage of our income to this fund when at the age of 65 we will receive less in the form of a monthly annuity than those who receive benefits under the old-age assistance? In my opinion, this differential in payments between these two programs may have far-reaching effects on the entire social-security program in years to come.

The pending bill does not increase the benefit payments under title II but it does freeze the present 1 percent rate on employer and employee for one more year.

There has been much discussion on the future effects of this low rate in view of the accruing liabilities for future years. We must remember that when Congress enacted this title of the Social Security Act it in reality wrote $50,000,000,000 worth of annuity insurance. Every actuary will admit it is not a 1 percent program. Rates will have to be increased.

During the hearings I discussed this with Dr. Altmeyer and am including his testimony:

Mr. CARLSON. Doctor, I would like to ask a question. Let us assume now that we do not change this coverage, nor do we change the present 2-percent tax, and using as a basis an annual average wage of $1,500 for men and $900 for women, which is one of the low estimates submitted to this committee, in what year will the benefits catch up with the receipts on the basis of that income?

Mr. ALTMEYER. Would you repeat that question, please? I don't know whether I got it all.

Mr. CARLSON. I probably didn't express it correctly. My thought is this: Using the low estimate submitted on average income of $1,500 for men, and $900 for women, and following through with the present tax, 1 percent on employer, and 1 percent on employee, in what year will the benefit payments catch up with the receipts?

Mr. ALTMEYER. You mean if no changes were made in benefits at all?

Mr. CARLSON. No changes at all.

Mr. ALTMEYER. Well, I would assume probably in 10 years.

Mr. CARLSON. That would be 1955.

Mr. ALTMEYER. Yes.

Mr. CARLSON. Could you give me an estimate as to how much the reserve fund would be at that time?

Mr. ALTMEYER. I made an estimate running 5 years, and it would be about $11,000,000,000 at the end of 5 years, as I recall, at the present rate.

Mr. CARLSON. Then we can legislate on the basis that if we do not increase the coverage, do not change the rates, that we will have in reserve in 1955, or approximately then, $11,000,000,000?

Mr. ALTMEYER. I said 5 years from now. That would be 1952.

Mr. CARLSON. In 1952?

Mr. ALTMEYER. Yes.

Mr. CARLSON. Is it your thought then that the line would cross the benefits?

Mr. ALTMEYER. The lines would not cross, as I say, until possibly 10 years from now at the very earliest, so that the reserve would be higher than $11,000,000,000 before the lines crossed.

Mr. CARLSON. What will it be, then, in 1955, if that is when the lines cross?

Mr. ALTMEYER. I haven't made any calculations beyond 5 years, but it probably might increase another two to three billion, between 1952 and 1955.

Mr. CARLSON. Let us assume $12,000,000,000——

Mr. ALTMEYER. I would say it would be close to $13,000,000,000 to $14,000,000,000 in about 10 years.

Mr. CARLSON. All right. Then if the lines cross in 1955, the benefits equal the receipts, when will we dissipate this $14,000,000,000 reserve we anticipate will accrue

Mr. ALTMEYER. I will have to make some calculations on that basis.

Mr. CARLSON. In other words, anyone who follows it closely can plainly see——

Mr. ALTMEYER. Excuse me, you mean on a 1-percent basis?

Mr. CARLSON. The present rates.

Mr. ALTMEYER. It might run at least 20 years, if you exhausted the reserve in the meantime.

Mr. CARLSON. That is the problem we are facing then, if we are going to keep the program solvent. There must be, in my opinion, either increased taxes or Federal contribution.

Mr. ALTMEYER. If we keep the present taxes, yes; there is no question about it.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

Title II of the pending bill provides benefits in case of deceased World War II veterans. This provision is very limited in scope and is of no benefit to dependents of veterans until after the death of the veteran. This is a step in the right direction but in my opinion the act should be extended so as to give full coverage to men and women for the time they spent in the military service. These credits should be added to credits they had previously earned or credits they are building up after their return from the service.

CONCLUSION

I have endeavored to point out the injustices and inequities in the present social-security program. Changes must be made in it from time to time and we will not have a program that is fully accepted by our people until we make changes that provide equal consideration for all. Need and payments for aged people are not a matter of geography but security should be provided on a national basis. It can only be done with many important amendments to the law. It is unfortunate we did not have an opportunity to write them into this bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, those who are present, of course, know I am not going to make any prepared statement right now. During the several minutes that have elapsed since I made any remarks, my mind has been in a rather confused state.

I will say it is my considered judgment that I believe every Member of this House should have at least respect for the other Members of the House. I believe it has been the rule of this House for many years that what transpires in executive sessions of the committee is confidential. That rule is not always adhered to, but in the 10 years that I have been a Member of this House, and I have been in attendance at a great portion of the sessions of this House, I have never heard the chairman of any committee of this House vilify another Member by calling attention to the fact that he was not present at a meeting or two that was held, or try to emphasize that a particular certain named Member did not perform his duties as he should have performed them. Naturally, when that circumstance happened to me I resented it. Nothing that I have said in my colloquy today will I change in the RECORD. The RECORD will stand just as I made the remarks.

This is a body in which I think we earn the respect of each other. We want to have the respect of the country. We all try to do our duty as we see it. I need not enter any defense of my conduct and my attendance at committee hearings. The record will show that. My constituents know whether I work faithfully in their interests; whether I follow their wishes, or whether I try to chart a course which is in the best interest of the Nation at large.

I may say that on June 27 I voted for various provisions that appeared in the bill which was reported out by this committee. I am only saying that to correct any impression that the membership may have gotten from the remarks heretofore made that I was not present. I do not think I was absent from a single executive session of the committee from January 1946 until June 27, 1946, except perhaps—I will change that word "single," I will say not more than two or three times. I am just saying this to emphasize my belief that the attack that was made upon me was not justified by the facts, was contrary to the rules of the House, and was not in consonance with the customs of this House; and I leave it to the membership to draw whatever conclusions they may under the circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amendments extend the present rates for employer and employee contributions under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act for a period of 1 year beginning January 1, 1947. It would appear desirable that the present rate should be continued a year pending decision as to various proposed basic changes in the old-age and survivors' insurance program.

BENEFITS IN CASE OF DECEASED WORLD WAR II VETERANS

The amendments bridge temporarily the gap in survivorship protection which a serviceman experiences when he shifts from wartime military service to established civilian employment. It provides survivors' insurance protection for a period of 3 years following discharge from the armed forces to veterans of World War II.

In general, an individual must fulfill one of two requirements in order to be insured for survivors' benefits under the old-age and survivors' insurance program. Either he must have worked in employment under the program for approximately half of the time elapsing after 1936, or after age 21, and prior to the time of his death or he must have worked in covered employment for one-half of the 3 years immediately preceding his death. Since service in the armed forces is not credited for old-age and survivors' insurance purposes, many veterans, upon discharge from service, will have lost whatever protection they may have acquired under the program or by reason of their military service will have failed to gain the protection they might otherwise have acquired. Moreover, in computing a veteran's average monthly wage upon which old-age and survivors' insurance benefits are based, it is usually necessary under present law to include in the computation the months in which the veteran was in service, even though wages are not credited for 3 months. Consequently, even where the veteran does not lose his protection entirely by reason of his military service, his average wage and the benefits based on it will be reduced.

The veteran who engages in covered employment after discharge will have old-age and survivors' insurance protection after gaining the necessary amount of coverage. It is thought that 3 years is a reasonable time within which the veteran may be expected to acquire or reacquire old-age and survivors' insurance protection. In consequence, this section provides survivorship protection to the veteran's family for 3 years after discharge from service.

The veteran who meets the requirements and who dies, or who has died within 3 years after separation from active military or naval service, is deemed insured. His survivors will be eligible for any of the various types of benefits provided under old-age and survivors' insurance. The benefits will be the amount based on the $160 average monthly wage. The basic amount will be increased for each year of military service by 1 percent. Enactment of H. R. 7037 thus assures the survivors of veterans covered by the measure of a guaranteed minimum level of benefits. In the event of death within 3 years, if no compensation or pension is payable by the Veterans' Administration, his widow, if she has a child of the veteran in her care or upon attainment of age 65, will be eligible to receive a monthly benefit amounting to around $24 a month. His children under age 18 will each be eligible for around $16 a month; and his dependent parents, in the absence of a wife or child surviving the veteran, will each be eligible to receive the same amount. The maximum amount of benefits payable in any month on the basis of any one veteran's death would be around $64 a month.

In concluding this brief description of benefits for the deceased World War II veterans, I should like to add that further study will be given to the problem of crediting military service for old-age and survivors' insurance purposes. Unquestionably there will be cases where death occurs more than 3 years after discharge where benefits will depend whether or not military service is credited for old-age and survivors' insurance. The amount of benefits will also depend upon whether military service has been credited. The 1946 amendments do not cover situations like this, nor do these amendments cover cases of retirement in the years to come. Thus, the present amendments, while affording satisfactory temporary solution, do not afford a permanent solution to the problem arising because of military service.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION FOR MARITIME WORKERS

The amendments are designed, first, to effect permanent coverage of maritime employment under State unemployment-compensation systems; and, second, to provide temporary protection for persons whose maritime employment has been with general agents of the War Shipping Administration and thus has been technically Federal employment.

To accomplish the first of these purposes the Federal Unemployment Tax Act is amended to extend coverage to private maritime employment—with the same definition of maritime employment as was used in extending old-age and survivors' insurance to maritime employment in 1939.

In addition the bill authorizes the State in which operations of a vessel are regularly supervised, managed, directed, and controlled, to extend its unemployment-compensation law to, and require contribution with respect to employment of, seamen on such vessel.

To accomplish the second purpose of the title, immediate protection is provided seamen whose employment could not have been covered by State laws because they were employed on behalf of the United States by general agents of the War Shipping Administrator. This protection in no event would extend beyond June 30, 1949.

The bill provides in general that these seamen shall receive the same benefits as would have been payable had their Federal maritime employment been under the State unemployment compensation law. Payments normally would be made pursuant to agreements between the State and the Federal Security Administrator, the States being reimbursed for additional costs incurred in making payments under the agreement. Only in case of failure of such an agreement would a direct payment be made the seaman by the Administrator, and in such case the terms, conditions, and amount of the payment would follow the State law.

CHILD HEALTH AND WELFARE

The amendments extend the provisions of title V of the Social Security Act—child health and welfare services—to the Virgin Islands. The amendments also authorize increased appropriations for maternal and child welfare. The authorization for maternal and child health service grants is increased from the present amount of $5,820,000; services to crippled children from the present amount of $3,870,000; child welfare grants are increased from $1,510,000 or a total of $11,200,000 to a total of $23,000,000.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

The amendments increase the existing ceilings on the Federal share of old-age assistance payments from $20 to $25, make the same change in the case of aid to the blind, and in the case of aid to dependent children increase the Federal share from $9 for the first child in the home and $6 for additional children to $13.50 and $9, respectively. The amendments also provide a formula under which the Federal share will be two-thirds of the first $15 of monthly payments of old-age assistance or aid to the blind and one-half the remainder of the payment up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $25. Similarly, in the case of aid to dependent children, the Federal share would be two-thirds of the first $9 of the payment and one-half of the balance up to the over-all Federal maximum share of $13.50 or $9.

I will not at this point go further than to say that the temporary provisions for public assistance I have above referred to will be found very helpful during the period ending December 31, 1947, during which it is in effect. I shall outline later the practical effect of this provision on grants which States such as my own State, North Carolina, will receive. I shall also point out the principal of the variable grant provision, and the advantages of that approach as a permanent solution of the problem.

HISTORY OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

To many of us who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Social Security Act represents much labor, including three major hearings, one in 1935, one in 1939, and one which we have just concluded.

On January 17, 1935 I introduced H. R. 4120, which was the administration bill on social security, and beginning January 21, 1935, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I presided over the first hearings ever held by Congress on social security. The committee held extended hearings from January 21 to February 12, at which more than 1,100 pages of testimony was taken. At the conclusion of the hearings the measure had received the constant attention of the committee and numerous changes in the content and form were agreed upon. These changes required a complete revision of the original bill and introduction by me of H. R. 7260 on April 4, 1935. H. R. 7260 was enacted as the Social Security Act.

The committee had worked, literally night and day, for 3 months when this bill was reported out by it. The measure was practical, workable, and met a situation which in those times of unemployment and destitution was particularly pressing. What is more important the measure set up a permanent program for dealing with the problems of old-age security, security for the needy blind, and for dependent children. This program is so sound that during the decade it has been in operation there has been no departure from its basic principles.

At this point I should like to quote from our 1935 report to the Congress which accompanied our bill H. R. 7260, the Social Security Act.

We said this about old-age assistance:

To encourage States to adopt old-age-pension laws and to help them carry the burden of providing support for their aged dependents, this bill proposed that the Federal Government shall match the expenditures of the State and local governments for old-age pensions, except that the Federal share is not to exceed $15 per month per individual. A few standards are prescribed which the States must meet to entitle them to Federal aid, but these impose only reasonable conditions and leave the States free of arbitrary interference from Washington.

We also said:

Experience, both in this country and in other lands, has demonstrated that the best way to provide for old people who are dependent upon the public for support is through old-age-assistance grants, more commonly called old-age pensions. Twenty-nine States and the Territories, Alaska and Hawaii, have old-age pension laws. Approximately 200,000 old people are now in receipt of old-age assistance under these laws, and while the grants are often inadequate, the lot of the pensioners is distinctly less hard than that of old people on relief. But due in part to restrictive provisions in the State laws, and still more to the financial embarrassment of many State and local governments, the old-age pension laws are limited in their application and do not provide adequately for all old people who are dependent upon the public for support.

Since enactment of the Social Security Act in 1935, old-age-assistance laws have been enacted by every State, and despite the fact that times are much better now, destitution in old age is such that there are now more than 10 times as many old-age recipients on the rolls as there were prior to the Social Security Act. The report showed that the average pension of the 200,000 on the rolls was $16.48, while figures for April 1946, show that the average pension for the 2,088,025 now on the rolls is $31.54, or almost twice that figure.

North Carolina had no old-age assistance in 1935, but with the encouragement of Federal grants under the Social Security Act, soon enacted one. Today, under the North Carolina plan about 32,700 needy old people are receiving assistance. Unfortunately, their benefits average only $13.81, according to the figures for April of this year. This is less than the $16.48 average paid in States with systems in 1935 and less than half of the present national average of $31.54, and less than a fourth of the $47.51 paid by California.

It might be mentioned at this point that payments to recipients of assistance for the blind for North Carolina are also substantially below the average paid in the entire United States. The national average is $32.50, while payments in North Carolina average $21. North Carolina is also far below the national average per family in the case of dependent children. The national average is $53.32, while in North Carolina the April 1946 payments were $27.84 per family.

Under all of these programs the State and not the Federal Government determines the amount which will be paid. Even prior to the amendments the Federal Government was prepared to match Federal expenditures up to $40 per month per recipient in the case of both the aged and the blind. The figures I have given for North Carolina are typical for a very great number of the States whose per capita income is less than the per capita income of the United States as a whole. Studies conducted by the technical staff of the Committee on Ways and Means indicated clearly that a large percentage of total public expenditures of the State which goes for public assistance in these States is as large if not larger than the percentage of public revenue in States which paid much larger benefits. The study also indicated rather clearly that from the viewpoint of tax effort the States with low per capita income were making at least as much effort in raising more as were the more wealthy States.

There were many of us on the Committee on Ways and Means who felt and still feel that the only equitable solution is for the Federal Government to match a larger part of the public assistance expenditures of the low per capita income States than is matched for the high per capita income States. In furtherance of this belief, the committee reported out by a large majority of the committee H. R. 6911, which provided for grants varying from half of the expenditures to two-thirds of the expenditures, depending upon the per capita income of the State as measured by the National per capita income. If it were possible to have this bill enacted North Carolina would receive two-thirds of its public assistance costs from Federal grants. I fought for this principle and will continue to do so.

The legislative situation was such that no rule could be obtained on the bill I have just mentioned, and in an effort to get the necessary social-security legislation covering protection of persons who had been discharged from military service, maritime employment and other important aspects of social security, as well as to prevent the tax rate from rising to 2½ percent on employer and on employee, it was found necessary by our committee to scrap the variable grant provision in the original bill and to report out a new bill which could be unanimously agreed upon by the members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

This new bill, H. R. 7037, was enacted by the House and, as I had hoped, was amended by the Senate by providing for variable grants taken from the original House bill. The amended bill, however, was returned to the House only 3 days prior to adjournment and it was impossible to get a rule without compromising the variable grant provisions, as the legislative situation permitted the entire legislation to be blocked unless a rule could be won permitting a conference with the Senate and a vote on the conference report.

In order to obtain a conference report, a temporary provision effective for 1 year was agreed upon as a temporary compromise on the question of variable grants. Under the temporary provision, the State of North Carolina will get for the coming year almost as much as would have been obtained under the variable-grant proposal. If the State of North Carolina continues to spend from its own funds for public-assistance expenditures the same monthly amounts that were spent from State funds the last half of 1945, the State of North Carolina will receive an increase in Federal funds of some $2,682,000. About $1,969,000 of this would be an increased amount for the aged, about $570,000 an increase in assistance for children, and about $143,000 an increase in assistance for the blind. In the case of the aged and blind, this increase will amount to almost the 66⅔ percent which would have been obtained under the variable-grant formula for the same period.

I do not believe the principle of the temporary proposal which was adopted is as satisfactory as the variable-grant principle. For example, so long as assistance payments for the aged do not exceed $15 under the temporary proposal, the State of North Carolina would receive two-thirds of its old-age-assistance payments from the Federal Government, but to the extent that the average assistance payments exceed $15 the State of North Carolina would receive only a 50–50 matching on the excess. I do not believe that it is a good principle for the Federal Government by this matching approach to put a premium, so to speak, on the assistance payments down to a $15 level. It would seem equitable and fair that the Federal Government should pay two-thirds of the cost in the lower-income States so long as the total Federal share for those States does not exceed the $25 maximum put on the Federal contribution per recipient and applicable to the several States. I do feel particularly happy, however, that with the recent change in the law it will be possible to increase very substantially the benefits payable to our old people. The average increase can be $5 per case without requiring additional expenditures of State funds over the amount which is being currently spent. I am also happy for the similar increases in the case of children and the needy blind people.

The comments I have made with respect to the recent changes in the provisions relating to old-age assistance are in general applicable to the temporary liberalization in the case of needy blind people. The ceiling is similarly raised to $25 and the first $15 of assistance payments is matched two to one by Federal grants.

Similarly in the case of aid to dependent children the ceilings are raised by 50 percent over those existing prior to the amendments, and the first $9 of assistance payments is subject to matching on a two for one basis.

I have consistently fought for and will continue to fight for a permanent change in the law which will give more liberal and equitable treatment for the blind, for dependent children, and for the needy old people of my State and of the United States as a whole. I believe that the approach of variable grants is a suitable and equitable approach to this end, and it is my hope that the Congress will adopt this approach permanently correcting the inequities which have existed since the inauguration of these Federal-State programs.

OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE

Inasmuch as the 1939 amendments to the Social Security Act made no substantial changes as to old-age assistance, aid to the needy blind, and aid to dependent children except changes raising the ceiling for Federal participation, I have not so far referred to the 1939 amendments to the Social Security Act. However, in 1939 very substantial changes were made in the old-age and survivors' insurance, and I should like at this point to refer briefly to those changes.

In January 1939, the President transmitted to the Congress a report of the Social Security Board recommending changes in the old-age and survivors' insurance program. The basic changes recommended were along the lines unanimously recommended by the Advisory Council on Social Security consisting of some 25 outstanding representatives of employees, employers, and the general public. These recommendations included proposals for increasing early benefit payments and the establishment of survivors' benefits. Hearings commenced the first of February 1939, and witnesses were heard on some 50 separate days.

The report of the hearings covered over 2,500 pages and contained the statements of nearly 200 witnesses.

Following the hearings the Committee on Ways and Means basically modified old-age and survivors' insurance, changing the basis of benefits from a formula based on the total amount of wages in covered employment to a formula basing benefits on average wages, with a 1 percent increase for each year of coverage.

Further, the system was changed from one which provides benefits only for retired wage earners to one which provided in addition benefits payable to wives and children of retired wage earners and to widows, orphans, and parents of deceased wage earners.

Under the system so changed, at present more that a million of the aged are eligible for benefits under old-age and survivors' insurance. A large part of these are presently working and accordingly are not receiving benefits, but will receive benefits at any time they cease gainful employment. This number will be enormously increased within the next few years as a larger and larger portion of our working population is becoming eligible for old-age and survivors' insurance on reaching retirement age.

One of the most important effects of the 1939 amendments is the protection offered children. At the present, over a third of a million children are receiving benefits under the system and an increase in this number will likewise occur in later years. Rough estimates are that even if coverage of gainful employment is not extended some million four thousand children will be receiving benefits in the year 1960.

A most important question presented to the committee at the hearings held this year is the question of extending the scope of employment covered under old-age and survivors' insurance. Under the existing limited coverage of the system, it is possible for people to make substantinal contributions without becoming eligible for monthly benefits in case of their retirement or without their widow, parents, or orphans becoming eligible in case of death. The present restrictive eligibility requirements were established because otherwise benefits in large amounts might be payable in the case of persons who had been under and contributed to the system only a small part of the period since the system was established. It is apparent that broadly extending coverage would permit modification in the present eligibility requirements. It would also permit other equitable changes to be made in the system. Extending coverage to some employment not now covered of course likewise raises many very important and controversial questions. Due to the short period elapsing after the hearings and before the adjournment of the Congress, it was accordingly felt that it would be unwise to make substantial changes in the old-age and survivors insurance system.

It is my hope that early in the next Congress legislation can be perfected by the Committee on Ways and Means which will greatly improve old-age and survivors' insurance, as well as permanently improve old-age and assistance aid to the blind and aid to dependent children.

The social-security program is of great importance to all the people of the United States. It is a program which requires intense and long-continued study prior to making basic changes. The Committee on Ways and Means has learned through the years that the system is far from perfect and doubtless will be much improved as time goes on. It is important that it be improved. It is also of great importance that changes be made only after long and careful consideration. Often changes which, when first viewed, seem highly desirable may be found undesirable after careful study. That is why the committee insists upon such careful consideration before taking action. I believe that this cautious procedure is the only safe procedure to follow.

The people of this country may rest assured that while the system upon which they rely for their protection will be from time to time improved, any changes which may be made will be given careful consideration so as to avoid jeopardizing the integrity and soundness of the system.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise the remarks I made earlier this afternoon and to revise and extend the remarks I am about to make at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I hope I shall not take 5 minutes but I should like to take just a little time to impress on you what this bill really does. In the heat of debate over the rule I am afraid we may have forgotten some things that we ought to know about. I am glad that the rule passed, because it is very evident from the debate on the rule what would happen if we had failed to pass a rule and tried to legislate on the floor of the House.

There are five sections in this bill. I am not going to talk about all five of them but just want to touch on them.

Two of these sections we were just almost morally and parliamentarily bound to do something about, and one of these is a subject that has been discussed but very little. The Senate of the United States passed a bill with reference to benefits to veterans. Here is what it does—and when I say soldiers, I mean servicemen. Here is what it does. It gives a serviceman who was away in the service the right to come under social security. He gets a chance to come under social security. The veterans are very much interested in this, and all the different veterans' organizations, we understand, have agreed on it. All agree on it. Therefore we must do something about it.

Let us take title I, that refers to freezing the pay-roll tax for another year. The law now provides that the employer pays 1 percent and the employee pays 1 percent. If we had increased this to 1½ percent for each that would mean that the employers and the employees would each pay an additional $250,000,000. If we do not do anything with reference to this matter then next year at the beginning of January the employer would pay 2½ percent, and so would the employee. This would be more than is necessary at this time. It would not be wise to increase the contributions of the employers or the employees unless we are going to include more persons under the coverage of the law. When we decide to increase coverage then we will be compelled to increase the amount of money collected. As I said in my remarks when I spoke on the rule there are some Members here very much interested in the Townsend program and I am sorry they were deluded into a belief they might have a chance this afternoon; they did not have a chance at all, and I hope that they may have a chance when we take up the social security laws for general amendments. Mr. Chairman, this social security that we talk so much about and that we take pride in does not provide as much in benefits as we generally think. It is actually rather pitiful. For example, a man who starts in working when he is 20 years old would have to earn $3,000 a year until he is 65 in order that he might be entitled to draw $85 a month retirement. Suppose a man without children pays in 20 years, what does his wife get? Very little. Just enough to bury him, and then she must wait until she is 65 before she can secure her benefits. I am not trying to give exact figures here but I am just trying to state the principle. We have a long way to go before we have this matter worked out completely. If we were to increase the amount of contribution to 2½ percent by each party we would have to provide more adequate benefits. We could not do that here on this floor today.

I may say to you that we have taken only one new group under the coverage of the law in this bill. That is the group known as maritime workers. I shall not discuss this further. I am sure my good friend from New York [Mr. LYNCH] will discuss that proposition. Here is what I would have done this afternoon if this bill had been thrown open for consideration under a wide open rule. I would have been bound to ask that the nurses of the country be covered under social security; also this large group of girls and men who work in the canning factories as agricultural employees; I would have been bound to ask that the State and city employees who want to come in be taken in. Many of them want to come in. There are literally thousands if not more than a million additional persons who want to come in. If we had thrown this bill open for amendments whom would you leave out and whom would you take in? This is a very important matter and cannot be handled on the floor. There are many groups that I have not mentioned that would deserve consideration.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I was sorry that I could not yield to the gentleman earlier today, and I gladly yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman to tell the committee why it was that the Ways and Means Committee abandoned the bill that was reported on July 1 and now seems to be unanimously supporting the one reported on July 15?

Mr. JENKINS. I think I told the gentleman. At least I tried to answer this question when I spoke earlier today.

Mr. COOLEY. No one has answered it.

Mr. JENKINS. I will give you my opinion. Of course, I cannot speak for the other 24 members of the committee. Here was the problem: We went along in the beginning to include within the bill only those matters that were noncontroversial. This variable-grants matter was a controversial matter and we decided not to include it. Then there was the 1½-percent matter. When we were giving consideration to increasing this contribution to 1½ percent we were considering bringing additional groups under coverage. When we decided not to bring in these additional groups we decided not to raise the contribution to 1½ percent. These are some reasons why the committee changed its mind.

Further I might say to the gentleman that the first bill that the committee discussed did not contain any pension for the aged and the blind or the dependent children. But this bill does do something for these groups. This bill provides $5 more for the old people in every State that will match it. It provides for the blind and it provides for the dependent children. That was not in the original bill. Our distinguished chairman has worked hard on this matter. Everybody knows how he feels toward these groups, as do all of us. If an open rule had been adopted here this afternoon with the result that this bill would not pass, somebody would have had to answer to the people of this country why we declined to do anything for the aged, and the blind, and the dependent.

As the gentleman well knows that the relief heretofore accorded these deserving groups has always been on a matching basis; any attempt to change this basis that would have resulted in no bill being passed would have called for an explanation to these groups.

When the variable grants principle was first suggested some of us made it clear that we would oppose it vigorously on the floor, we also stated that we would oppose a closed rule. Thus the issue was well defined and we prepared for the fight. We threshed that out for days in the committee. The final decision was to abandon this variable grants system from consideration in this legislation.

What is the basis of this variable grants proposition? It is a new theory. It is based on income. The States in which the people have a large total income will be compelled to assist the aged and blind in the States which have a small average income. They will take the national income as the basis and then will average the income of the various States and then determine how much each State should pay. Some States would pay in $2 and get out $1, and some States would pay in $1 and take out $2. This would inevitably result finally in the Government paying the whole amount and then the Government would have the full control of all relief to the aged, the blind, and the dependents. This is in line with the socialistic trend of the country under the New Deal.

Let me speak about the South for a minute, without saying that there is anything wrong about it at all. Why is it that in the South they do not pay as much as they do in other States? I do not unduly criticize them for that. They do not need to pay as much. It is not as cold down there, it does not cost so much to live down there; conditions are not the same down there. Take an aged couple living in Milwaukee for instance on the fifth floor of a big apartment house. They must have to pay for electric lights, and to pay for water. And in the winter their coal bill is heavy. They must wear heavy clothes. But a couple that live in the South do not have to pay so much. There is a difference. We must recognize that difference. It will always be there. You cannot solve it on the basis of earnings. You have to solve it on some other basis. If the States in the warm sections of the country do not desire to pay their aged and blind as much as the people in other States want to pay to their aged and blind then why should the Federal Government seek to coerce them? And if these States fix a sum that they think is adequate why do they try to force the passage of a law that will compel the Government to pay them more than what they think is adequate?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. COOLEY. I want to get it clear. I understand that the proposal has merit and I can understand that it might have some evils, as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. JENKINS. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. But the proposition before the House is why did the Ways and Means Committee change its mind? Nobody has answered that.

Mr. JENKINS. I am surprised at the gentleman's persistence when I think I have answered his question several times. How can I speak for the other 24? I can assure the gentleman that I did not change my mind.

Mr. COOLEY. I know, but the gentleman convinced the others. Some changed their minds.

Mr. JENKINS. As far as this is concerned, I did not change my mind. I stand where I always stood. It is true that this variable grant theory is provocative of much discussion and I am glad that those who sought to inject it into the discussion this afternoon failed miserably.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my chairman the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I will fight for variable grants as long as there is a reasonable possibility of getting them.

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly, and the gentleman from North Carolina put out a magnificent fight to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman from Ohio said that if the opportunity presented itself he would include the cannery workers and agricultural workers under the coverage. Would not the gentleman want to go further and include those who produce the commodities that are canned, the farmers of this Nation, so that they might have some hope for the future?

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is asking another question, that is very controversial. His question is a very appropriate one that shows how broad this problem of coverage really is. In his question he takes in all the farm help. Maybe that is the right thing to do. I am not attempting to decide that. Agriculture labor includes a large number of people. This large group and the domestics, the girls that work in the homes at house work are also to be considered as needing social-security coverage.

Mr. PACE. Does not the gentleman think that the man that works in the sun, and by the sweat of his brow produces food, is entitled to the same protection as the girl that works in a place that cans food?

Mr. JENKINS. That makes me think of the days when I used to walk up and down the long corn rows behind a cultivator, and it makes me think of how hard it was on a hot day to drive three or four horses hitched to a wheat binder. I am sure that then I would have thought that I was a very useful individual.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that there were a lot of things that we would have considered if we had time? It is left as unfinished business, and we will continue it in the future.

Mr. JENKINS. Surely. Nobody says that this is the last day. We will have social security with us for a long time.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CLASON. Do I understand from the gentleman's remarks, which are also backed up by the words of the Chairman, that in another year the Congress will pursue this matter further and report further legislation to extend coverage under this particular bill and further to increase payment to those persons who are covered, and that ultimately all persons will be covered?

Mr. JENKINS. I cannot make any promises, but I said in the committee if this was an open rule I was going to go on this floor and ask that many more groups be included under coverage.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The question was raised by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], I believe, in regard to the difference between this bill and the other bill. There was a principle involved. We had always with us the matter of 50–50 matching. Then there was advanced the variable grants, and that created a very serious controversy among the Members, so the bill was finally compromised on the present formula which is 50–50. That is the answer to that question.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill is speedily passed.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with many of the provisions in this bill. I do not think it has gone far enough, but I do want to compliment the committee for the fine job it did in connection with the amendment to title III, namely, unemployment compensation for maritime workers. I want to compliment the chairman, and particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] who introduced the original bill providing for unemployment insurance for seamen.

The bill reported out by the committee in my opinion is inadequate in many respects.

It continues freezing the social-security contributions when everyone knows that the present 1-percent contributions will not be sufficient in the long run to pay even the existing low level of benefits.

The bill does nothing to improve the old-age and survivors insurance system either by broadening coverage, increasing the amount of benefits, reducing the retirement age, or extending insurance protection to cover permanent total disability.

The public assistance provisions in title V of the bill are grossly inadequate. Nothing is done to help raise assistance payments in the States which now make payments of $10, $12, or $15 a month. How can anyone live on such inadequate amounts?

Many months ago I introduced a social-security bill, H. R. 4551, which was referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The bill improved and extended the insurance program. The following is a statement I presented some time ago to the Ways and Means Committee on H. R. 4551:

STATEMENT BY HON. HENRY M. JACKSON, REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE SECOND DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON, BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS IN SUPPORT OF H. R. 4551, A BILL TO AMEND THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

I appreciate this opportunity to present to the Committee on Ways and Means the reasons why I am urging the broadening and liberalization of the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act as provided in the bill which I have introduced, H. R. 4551.

The Social Security Act was signed by President Roosevelt on August 14, 1935. The passage of the act was a historic milestone in social legislation in this country. It marked the beginning of a new era in our concern for the welfare of human beings; it established the fundamental principle that the Federal Government has a basic responsibility for providing for the general welfare through social insurance.

We now have had 10 years of experience in the administration of the present law. Much experience has been gained and ways have been worked out to overcome difficulties which seemed insurmountable in 1935. The time has come, therefore, to revise, amend, and extend the law so as to better meet the needs of the American people.

The bill which I have introduced provides for extending the coverage of the existing Federal old-age and survivors' insurance program, liberalizing the benefits, and providing insurance benefits in case of permanent disability. I am attaching a summary of the major provisions of the bill to the end of this statement.

I believe that it is essential that we take the present insurance program as a starting point and improve it as much as possible. The American people are the most insurance-minded people in the world. I believe that they want a system of social insurance which will give substantial protection to the aged, to widows and dependent children, and to the disabled. I believe they want insurance protection as a matter of right—not charity, nor a dole.

SURVIVORS' INSURANCE BENEFITS

Few people appreciate that the existing Federal old-age and survivors' program provides very valuable life-insurance benefits in the form of monthly survivors' benefits to the widow and children of a deceased insured worker. These survivors' benefits under the existing law already have a face value totaling in excess of $50,000,000,000. This is more than any private life insurance in the world. The bill which I have introduced would increase the life-insurance protection to survivors so that the total face value of protection to all policyholders would probably be in excess of $75,000,000,000.

Even under the present law if a worker earning $200 a month should die leaving a widow and two children after being in the insurance system for 10 years the monthly benefit payable to the family would be $67.38 per month. This amount would be equivalent to $808.56 per year. If the children were 8 years old the benefits would continue for 10 years, making a total of over $8,000. If the children were still younger and the payments continued for 15 years, the total payable to the family would be $12,000. These calculations of the life-insurance protection available to the family do not include any amount for the old-age benefit payable to the widow when she becomes 65.

The bill which I have introduced increases these benefits so that in the case cited above the family would receive $82.25 per month or $987 per year, making a total payment of nearly $10,000 in the case of payments lasting for 10 years, and $15,000 in the case of payments lasting 15 years.

The bill provides for maximum family benefits of $120 per month in which case the maximum total family payments could be more than $25,000.

OLD-AGE INSURANCE

The present level of old-age and survivors' insurance benefits as provided in the existing law was enacted in 1939. Since that time the cost of living has increased by at least one-third. The cost of food and clothing, the basic elements in the cost of living for most low-income groups, has increased at least 50 percent. Various studies made by the Social Security Board have shown present benefits were inadequate even before the increase in cost of living took place. It is essential, therefore, that the present system be amended to provide more adequate benefits.

The bill which I have introduced provides for a general modification of the method by which the insurance benefits will be determined so that all insured persons would receive higher benefits than those provided under the existing law. In addition, my bill provides that the minimum benefit for a retired worker is increased from $10 to $40 a month and for a man and his wife from $15 to $60 a month. Similarly, minimum benefits for the child and parent are increased to $20 per month and for the widow to $30 a month. The maximum amount which may be paid on one worker's record is increased from $85 a month to $120. There is attached to this statement two tables which show illustrative benefits which would be paid under the bill which I have introduced.

The bill also provides that retirement benefits would be payable at age 60 instead of age 65 as is provided in existing law. This would enable many workers who cannot now keep up with the pace of modern industry to retire on a modest, guaranteed insurance benefit. The bill does not require an individual to retire at age 60 but merely gives the individual the opportunity to do so if he wishes. Thus, persons who wish to continue to work will be able to do so while those persons unable to continue working will be eligible for benefits.

The bill also extends coverage to several million persons now excluded from the insurance system. The new groups included in the bill would be self-employed persons, lay employees of religious organizations, persons employed by nonprofit and educational institutions, and States and local governments. The latter would be permitted to cover their employees by voluntary compacts with the Social Security Board.

Several States have already enacted legislation which would enable them to take advantage of the opportunity to cover State and local employees. The State of Washington enacted legislation in 1941 (ch. 205, laws 1941) to permit the State and local subdivisions to participate in the program in the event the Social Security Act is amended to permit such participation. In addition Bellingham, and King County enacted resolutions in 1941 favoring the extension of the insurance program to public employees.

State employees who have talked to me are anxious to obtain the protection afforded by the Federal insurance program since it gives them substantial protection at a minimum cost. In the first place the cost of administering the Federal insurance program is very low because of its broad and compulsory coverage. At the present time administrative costs for the entire program are less than 2 percent of premiums collected. State and local employees as well as other employees brought into the insurance system will gain the advantage of the low administrative costs as compared with the administrative costs of other forms of insurance, public and private, which are now available to them.

Nothing in the bill would prevent State or local employees or any other group from having supplementary pension plans of their own to provide more adequate benefits than those of the Federal program. At the present time it is estimated there are over 8,000 companies which have private pension plans which supplement the benefits provided under the Federal system. There is no reason why the same arrangement cannot apply to State and local employees as well as to other groups covered by the insurance program.

In addition credit for military service is given in my bill, the cost to be borne entirely by the Federal Government. Thousands of families of deceased servicemen would receive insurance benefits under this provision. Many servicemen lost their insurance protection by going into military service. It is only fair and proper that the Federal Government should safeguard the social-security rights of those who served our country.

DISABILITY INSURANCE

At the present time the United States is the only industrial country in the world which has an old-age insurance plan which does not include disability benefits. Disability is among the most important causes of insecurity. According to the Social Security Board 3,500,000 persons are suffering from disability for 6 months or more, and 1,500,000 are in the ages of 15 to 65 and but for their disability would have been engaged in productive work. In general all groups are in favor of the addition of disability-benefit provisions to the existing program. The AFL and the CIO, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the American Medical Association, as well as a number of other groups, have recommended that permanent disability insurance be included under the existing law.

At the present time if a person becomes disabled prior to age 65 he not only does not receive any benefits during his period of disability but his old-age benefits may be reduced or even completely lost. The bill which I have introduced corrects all of these defects not only by providing insurance benefits to the individual and additional benefits to his family, but also safeguards the old-age and survivors rights during the entire period of disability. The only alternative for a disabled person without other resources at the present time is to apply for general relief when he has exhausted any savings he might have. The amendment to the present law to provide permanent disability benefits would, therefore, provide benefits to an individual as a matter of right without having to take a means test. At the same time it would reduce the cost of relief which now must be borne entirely by States and localities which in many parts of the country fall on the small home owner and the farmer.

COSTS

Much has been said about the costs of a broad and comprehensive system of social insurance such as is contained in my bill. During the course of the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, it has been pointed out that actuaries have estimated that the annual cost of the present insurance program will reach about 10 percent of pay roll in about 50 years. I believe that these actuarial estimates are unrealistic and much too high for the simple reason that they assume a static wage for all employees for the next 50 years. This is an assumption contrary to all historic fact. If we are going to maintain an economy of continually increasing productivity per worker, then wages must—and will—increase. Mr. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Social Security Board, has already stated to this committee that "as the average wages of insured persons increase, the relative costs of the present benefits will decrease as a percentage of pay roll."

I believe, therefore, that the long-run annual cost of the present law will not be 10 percent of pay rolls but will be closer to 6 percent of pay rolls.

Mr. Altmeyer has also pointed out:

"In addition, comprehensive coverage would cover all the wages of many individuals who are already under the insurance system part of the time, thus increasing their taxable wages and reducing the relative cost of the insurance plan."

In my opinion, the long-run eventual annual cost of the present law if amended to provide comprehensive coverage—would be closer to 5 percent than to 10 percent.

Under the bill that I have introduced the contributions would be 2 percent each on employer and employee, self-employed persons would pay the total 4 percent on their net income. Provision is made in the bill, as under the existing law, for the Government to make contributions to the system if the pay roll contributions from employer and employee are not sufficient to finance the benefits under the system. With the broad coverage provided it is entirely possible and logical for the Government to contribute to the cost of the insurance system since a comprehensive insurance plan reduces the cost of assistance and relief which would otherwise have to be borne by Federal, State, and local governments. Most foreign systems provide for Government, employer, and employee contributions to the system.

Thus, when the cost of the benefits provided in my bill reach 6 percent of pay rolls, employers, employees, and the Federal Government would each be contributing 2 percent. The bill provides, as does existing law, for the Board of Trustees of the Insurance Fund to make annual reports to the Congress on the status of the fund. In this way the Congress can have all the information to make any necessary changes in the financing of the program as experience indicates may be desirable.

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE JACKSON BILL

The bill which I have introduced modifies title II of the Social Security Act and related provisions. The following major changes in the Federal old-age and survivors insurance program would result from the enactment of the bill.

1. Disability benefits would be payable to insured permanently disabled workers and their dependents.

2. Retirement benefits would be payable to all insured workers at age 60, and old-age dependents' benefits to wives, widows, and parents would be payable at age 60.

3. The amount of money a beneficiary can earn without deduction from benefits would be increased to $25 a month.

4. Benefits would be computed on the basis of a liberalized formula with the following minima:

(a) Benefit for the insured worker, $40.

(b) Wife, child, parent, $20.

(c) Widow, $30.

5. Maximum family benefits would be $120 a month, or 80 percent of average monthly wage, but the 80 percent maximum would never operate to reduce benefits below $60 monthly.

6. Coverage would be extended to self-employed persons, to lay employees of religious organizations, and to persons employed by nonprofit or educational institutions. State and local governments would be permitted to cover their employees by voluntary compacts with the Social Security Board. Changes in eligibility and average monthly wage provisions would remove the handicap of late entrance for persons covered under the program after 1926.

7. Credit under the program would be given for military service.

8. Technical and minor changes would be made to liberalize and simplify the program and to remove, insofar as possible, any existing anomalies and inequities.

DETAILED SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

Disability

The bill provides protection against disability which lasts 6 months or more, in addition to the protection for death and retirement now provided under the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance program. Benefits for disabled workers would be figured in the same way as benefits for retired workers, and dependents would receive the same proportionate amounts whether the worker was disabled or retired.

Benefits increased

Changes proposed by the bill in the benefits formula and method of determining the average monthly wage would result in benefits that are in general higher than those now provided under the existing insurance program. The minimum benefit for the disabled or retired worker is increased from $10 to $40, and for his wife from $5 to $20, and benefits under the retirement program will be payable at age 60, rather than at age 65, as at present. The maximum amount which may be paid on one worker's wage record is increased from $85 a month to $120, or 80 percent of his average monthly wage, if that is less. However, the maximum of 80 percent would not apply if it would make the benefits for a family less than $60. The minimum and maximum provisions apply to old-age, survivors', and disability benefits.

In death cases, a lump-sum payment equal to six times the amount computed as the worker's primary insurance benefit would be paid to the widow or widower of the worker. If there is no widow or widower, the payment would be made to the person or persons paying the burial expenses. Under the present law, lump-sum payments are made only if no one survives who is eligible in the month of death for monthly benefits. Under the bill, the payment would be made whether or not monthly benefits are paid.

Eligibility liberalized

The bill would change the provisions for determining eligibility of an individual, so that all persons engaged in Government arsenals, or any other type of work not covered by the insurance program would not have the period before the effective date of the bill count against them in determining their eligibility for retirement, survivors, and extended disability insurance benefits.

Under the present act, beneficiaries may not receive their benefits for any month in which they earn more than $14.99. Under the bill, this amount is raised to $25.

Credit for military service

Men and women in the armed service would receive credit for wages of $160 a month for the entire period of their military service, but there would be no deductions from their pay during military service. The cost of this insurance protection would be borne by the Federal Government out of general revenue.

Coverage of insurance system

In addition to the workers now covered by the insurance program the bill would bring into the insurance system all persons in industry and commerce (except railroad workers), seamen, and employees of nonprofit institutions (except ministers and members of religious orders), and self-employed individuals (persons owning small businesses, farmers, and professional persons). Employees of State or local governments may come into the program by a voluntary compact made between the appropriate State or local governmental unit and the Social Security Board. Federal employees, except hourly employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, are not covered by the bill.

Social insurance contributions

The bill provides for contributions of 2 percent of wages on employees and 2 percent of wages paid on employers. Self-employed individuals would pay the total 4 percent on their net income.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, we now have under consideration a measure which is domestic, one which is clearly related to our national welfare and the welfare of our own citizens, whose intent is the elimination of want, of insecurity and fear. H. R. 7037, the bill which proposes strengthening amendments to the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, is concerned with the extension of further assurances of security to our own people.

We Americans have accepted the responsibility of mitigating the world's suffering after having shared the responsibility of eliminating the world's oppressors. We have recognized the necessity of participating with the other nations of the world in an international organization, the United Nations, in a common effort to secure peace, to assure international harmony and to promote international welfare. We have added our resources, talents, and efforts to those of other nations politically, economically, scientifically, and culturally. We have responded to our duty to bring relief to the war-ravaged, suffering peoples of the world through UNRRA and through countless private relief organizations. We have proposed to share the weapon of the atomic bomb with the other nations in an effort to forever outlaw its use as a weapon of destruction. And we have loaned great sums of money to other nations to enable them to rescue their economies from the shattering impact of war. The people of the United States have renounced isolationalism and have resolved henceforth to share with the other nations of the world the mutual responsibility of seeking peace and international welfare. For without the participation of the world's wealthiest nations, peace would surely be but a fool's dream, world relief merely a bitter token and the "four freedoms" would surely be overthrown by the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

But what a harsh anomaly it would be if we crusaded for the "four freedoms" around the globe and let them perish, any one of them, at home. How incongruous it would be if the hope of many millions throughout the war-scarred globe should be the despair of her people at home. What a mockery it would be if the richest Nation in the world were again to be stricken by a depression in which she could not assure her own people the minimum requirements of subsistence. The most destructive weapon the world has known we possess and have used for destruction. But in our productive capacity, our inventive skill, our natural resources, and our democratic respect for the dignity of the common people we possess the elements required for the greatest instrument for hope and peace to be gained, in the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt, "by so ordering society as to assure the masses of men and women reasonable security and hope for themselves and their children."

Yet we have no assurance sufficient to dispel grave doubts and fears that the possession of these elements guarantees security for all our people. The memory of the depression of the last decade sticks relentlessly with us and casts its shadow before us. For our productive capacity was great then, as were our resources, our inventive genius, yes, and our democratic respect for the dignity of the common people. Yet we suffered in those days and many people went without the primary needs of life and more than a few even gave up the very life itself.

We have made no conclusive changes in our economy or way of life to assure that such a depression shall not occur again, and certainly the great majority of our people are not a little apprehensive that such a stagnation of our vitality with its accompanying privations may strike again. We are resolved, it is true, that however crippled our economy may be, that none of our people will be bereft of all security nor denied the essentials of life again. We know that our economy cannot be permanently crippled nor our national vitality permanently impaired.

Our reconversion from the total-war economy to the peacetime economy has been, despite dire predictions and great difficulties, remarkably rapid and reassuring. An accurate measure of the speed and vigor of that reconversion is evident in the national employment figures. Early in 1947 we will have achieved the goal of 60,000,000 employed, which was regarded as a courageous but daring and optimistic challenge when first set by President Roosevelt. By the first part of 1947 there will be 13,000,000 more employed in civilian jobs than in 1939. Here is the measure of what we can achieve. However, we now must face simultaneously a sharp rise in prices—so sharp that unless we can control them they threaten to wipe out within a relatively short period the savings of 60 percent of our people—and ultimately we will again face the uncomfortable dilemma of full production and inadequate purchasing power to consume what we produce. The consequences, as we know, are a sharp curtailment in production, the exodus of goods and capital to foreign markets and investment, unemployment, and depression. This is the over-all picture. It is not an inevitable result and we have, in fact, taken some steps to prevent the recurrence or to lessen its impact.

Not the least of these are the Social Security Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, which give some measure of security to our people. But we know, or we should recognize, that present social-security provisions are not sufficient. They need strengthening and integrating Our great need is a comprehensive, basic national system of social security, covering all major risks to economic independence and all workers and their dependents to whom such risks apply, and as Franklin D. Roosevelt said in his message to Congress on social security in June 1934:

> This seeking for a greater measure of welfare and happiness does not indicate a change of values. It is rather a return to values lost in the course of our economic development and expansion.

H. R. 7037 does not provide for the comprehensive, basic national system of social insurance of which I spoke. It fails, primarily, to initiate comprehensive insurance protection against the leading cause of poverty and dependency in our country, the costs and losses occasioned by sickness and disability. It fails to extend coverage for unemployment insurance and old-age and survivors insurance to great numbers of our people who are still without such fundamental protection. It does not recommend increases in benefits which are now inadequate, particularly as measured by current prices.

But the amendments which are proposed to the Social Security Act by H. R. 7037 are designed to strengthen the provisions of the original act, to remedy existing inequities and provide another progressive step toward the full security of our people which must be the goal of all believers in democracy. While I continue to look forward to the day when all our people will be protected against the vicissitudes of our money economy in a coordinated program of national social security, I endorse the present measure as a step forward and urge its passage.

The provisions of H. R. 7037 are specific, if inadequate. None will deny, I think, the necessity of the provision which would guarantee survivors of veterans within the purview of the Social Security Act the same old-age and survivors' insurance benefit rights they would have enjoyed had the veteran died fully insured under old-age and survivors' insurance, this with respect to veterans who die within 3 years after discharge. Since service in the armed forces is not credited for such purposes, many veterans upon discharge will have lost whatever protection they may have acquired under the program or by means of their military service will have failed to gain the protection they would otherwise have acquired. In 3 years the veteran may reasonably be expected to acquire protection since he need only work during one-half of the 3 years immediately prior to death in order to have survivorship protection. An average monthly wage of $160 is provided to insure a certain minimum level of benefits. Certainly this provision is not as liberal as it might be, yet it corrects an inequity immediately consequent on military service. Yet, as a reminder of the over-all inadequacy of present rates it should be noted that the maximum amount of benefits payable in any month on the basis of any one veteran's death would be, if he had no other covered employment, for a widow and child, $64.48 a month. Perhaps by approaching the problem of security for all our people through the sympathetic attention we are more likely to give to the veteran, we may realize more forcibly the pressing need for the extension and increase of benefits.

The bill further provides for the permanent coverage of maritime employment under State employment-compensation systems and temporary protection for persons whose maritime employment has been with general agents of the War Shipping Administration and thus has been technically Federal employment. The substantial increase in wartime employment heightened the necessity of including merchant mariners in the scope of social security. I have frequently in the past introduced and endorsed legislation to accord equivalent benefits to these men, for the nature of their employment and service has often caused them to be overlooked. The possibility of a permanent decline in employment in the maritime labor force enforces our present decision to extend insurance coverage to them. And the technicality of Federal service of the men who were nominally under the War Shipping Administrator is prevented from being a deterrent to proper protection by this provision. The extension of social-security coverage to merchant seamen should be a precedent which would lead us eventually to completely correct the present inequity under which less than 2 out of every 5 of our workers are included and under which one-half of the 72,000,000 who have been covered are not now insured against old age. It should be pointed out, however, that this provision can only grant permission to State legislatures to include maritime workers. It remains for the several States to carry out the intent of Congress in this matter.

Other provisions of H. R. 7037 include the Virgin Islands within the purview of the Social Security Act and provide an increase in the Federal share of assistance payments in States with per capita income below the average of the Nation and an increase in the Federal matching maximums. The Ways and Means Committee has deemed it necessary to extend the provisions of the Social Security Act to the Virgin Islands for reasons similar to those which earlier dictated the inclusion of Puerto Rico. And in order to guarantee help in aiding needy aged and blind persons and dependent children in States with low economic resources where the need is greater, it is provided that there shall be an increase in the Federal share of assistance payments in such States.

Once again dispute has arisen over the necessity of increasing the contribution rates under the Federal Insurance Contribution Act. The bill originally provided that the rate during the calendar years 1947 to 1951 should be 1½ percent and that after December 31, 1951, the rate should be 3 percent for both employees and employers. Although there has been a substantial increase in the balance in the trust fund, it is even more pertinent to note that there has been a substantial increase in prospective benefits which must be paid from the fund. It seems manifest that orderly and sound financing of the insurance system makes appropriate an immediate increase in the present contribution rates. Contributions levied under social security represents a method of distributing the burden of already existing costs. And it is significant to note that the average age of our people is increasing. By 1950 more than 30 percent of our population will be over 45 years of age and almost 15 percent over 60. We must be ready with an adequate insurance plan for our older people before mounting social and economic tensions create a new and disruptive minority.

Of more immediate concern with reference to our older people is the present and pressing necessity of reducing the age requirements for old-age assistance from 65 to 60 years. Such a reduction is a matter of practical necessity, first because it guarantees protection for the older worker when his productive capacity is impaired and when it is near impossible for him to obtain employment when he is out of work. For a great number of men and women who were employed in defense plants during the war have been replaced by veterans. Not only because of their valuable service during our period of peril, but because of their inability to gain employment now we should lower the age for their protection.

Such a reduction would work the further advantage of relieving many thousands more of older men who continue working only because they are not now eligible for public assistance. If the security provisions were extended to them now by reducing the age to 60 the further advantage would accrue of opening employment opportunities to a corresponding number of veterans. Such a plan, which would benefit the aged worker and the veteran seeking employment would have the further merit of increasing our productive capacity and efficiency. It would be in harmony with our common desire to provide security for the old and opportunity for the young.

These are the provisions of the present proposal to amend the Social Security Act. Each amendment has merit, furthers our policy of extending security and should be voted. But as I have stated before, and here repeat, we are still far from the goal of a comprehensive, basic national system of social insurance. Toward that goal we shall continue to strive, warned by the grim experience of the past and not content with the achievements thus far obtained. For an antidote to social disease, by which I mean privation, malnutrition, insecurity, and fear, which applies only to a limited number of our people is not sufficient. Medical science would never be content with an antidote, a remedy to disease which could but counteract the effects of a death-dealing disease in a few organs of the body, leaving the other vital organs susceptible to its deadly effect.

Unprotected by social security today are 1,000,000 domestic servants, 4,000,000 farm workers, excluding farm owners; 9,000,000 self-employed persons; 1,000,000 employees of nonprofit organizations; 3,000,000 State and local government employees; and 2,000,000 Federal employees.

More than 20,000,000 workers including many whose employment conditions are most uncertain, whose pay is lowest, who are least able to safeguard themselves, are presently deprived of a fundamental right to security.

Moreover, we have not yet provided against the major cause of poverty in American families, except for mass unemployment, namely, sickness and disability. On an average day there are 7,000,000 disabled by sickness or injury and unable to work. The loss of earnings each year from temporary disability amounts to between 3 and 4 billion dollars. One half of the 7,000,000 disabled are so disabled for more than 6 months. It is not necessary for me to remind my colleagues that such disability not only cuts off the income of the victim but is paralleled by the extraordinary medical and hospital expenses.

It is against such gross impacts on our people that we must build defenses. Even in prosperous times insecurity haunts our country in the persistence of sickness and death, old age, and sporadic employment. We cannot afford to be without complete and adequate social security. We must more than match our record of wealth with one of deep respect for the dignity and worth of each of our citizens. If we are to be called the world's hope, let us be at least the citizen's safeguard. If we are to stump for democracy, let us apply it unequivocally at home.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, many of my constituents have appealed to me in recent days and weeks, asking that I exert my influence in this body toward incorporating in any social-security legislation proposed either the principles of H. R. 2229 and H. R. 2230 for the benefit of our elderly citizens; or legislation so broadened in its scope as to include some large group of labor now excluded under existing law; or more aid to dependent children; or some special legislation favoring the blind; or at the least some improvement of the Social Security Act benefits for old age assistance. I am pleased to note that H. R. 7037, which is before us today, on pages 32 and 33 contains these latter provisions. I know it will be regarded by many as not enough, but after listening carefully to the debates today, I do know that it is all we may expect to get at this session of Congress.

I do not know when I have heard, during the 10 years of my membership in the House, more bitter argument than we have heard this afternoon. I have refrained from engaging in it. I simply hope that I may be able to explain to the elder citizens who have appealed to me why it is impossible to expect more than title V of this bill provides for them. Not being a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I can only surmise the heated arguments and struggle which must have gone on in the committee's executive sessions by what I have heard on the floor this afternoon.

I am personally not well pleased with this bill, but I know it is the best we can get. I want my constituents to know that it is brought to the House under a closed rule, which permits of no amendment. We must either vote for it or against it, and I propose to vote for it. Of course, a half loaf is better than no loaf at all, and I might expand that simile by saying that a quarter loaf, or even a slice, is better than no bread at all.

Naturally, many of our citizens, especially the old folks, will demand to know why we cannot amend this bill to make it more liberal. That of course is a long explanation, too long to be gone into here. The parliamentary situation is such that with the ending of the session so near we cannot hope for a broader and more generous social-security measure at this time.

The first provision under title V of this measure amends section III (a) of the Social Security Act, by striking out $40 and inserting in lieu thereof $50. In a State like Arizona, that will mean a substantial increase in old age assistance. My State has been more generous than the average among the 48, in matching the Federal allowance, and while Arizona now, by law, provides for only $20 to match the Federal $20 as a maximum for the individual, I feel sure that soon after the enactment of this Federal law, Arizona will modify her law so as to match $25 for the Federal $25 contribution.

While the increase of aid for dependent children and aid to the blind may be heartily approved in this measure, we cannot overlook the fact that there are some serious omissions in this bill. We have been assured by more than one speaker that it will take time to work out some of the other provisions we have hoped for and which are needed, and we may confidently hope that early action in the next Congress may be had in remedying the defects and omissions of this bill. With that understanding I shall vote for this measure.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, of course, I shall support this bill. If it does nothing else, the fact that it freezes the social-security tax at present rates for another year is ample justification for its enactment.

Additional benefits are provided in case of deceased World War II veterans. Marine workers receive unemployment compensation. There are additional grants for old-age assistance and aid to dependent children and the blind. Numerous miscellaneous provisions in the bill clarify present law and are most salutary in their effect.

In short, the bill is most commendable so far as it goes, but candor compels me to say that there is disappointment because the Ways and Means Committee has not found it possible to develop the field of social security as had been contemplated by the committee and earnestly anticipated by the people.

Mr. Chairman, present provisions of law providing assistance to our elderly people are entirely inadequate. I supported social security when it was initiated, and I have continued to support its expansion down through the years. As an experiment, it has worked well. It is necessary, if social security is to serve the purposes for which it was intended, that it be kept financially and actuarially sound. The Ways and Means Committee is to be congratulated on its insistence upon this fundamental principle.

The past several months have been given by that committee to an intensive study of the possibilities of expanding the coverage under the law so that additional groups of our people may enjoy its benefits. This must and will be done; therefore, if eventually, why not now? I do not mean that literally because I know this committee has worked hard and long, and I am not unmindful of the obstacles in its way. While there is disappointment, yet I entertain fervent hope that in the next Congress a more comprehensive law can and will be written, and that these groups now outside of the social-security fold will be covered or that other provisions be made for their old-age security. This is simple justice. Yes; it is more than that. It is necessary if all of our people are to be treated alike.

Many of our elderly people are being neglected. Times have changed. The cost of living has skyrocketed. Old-age benefits and old-age assistance, which were adequate a few years ago, will not furnish the necessities of life at the moment. It seems strange to me that in the view of some we have plenty of money to spend for other things, but the cupboard is bare when we look for anything for the aged. These people are not asking charity. They should not be made to feel that they are receiving alms, and the sooner our legislatures and our people in general appreciate that more reasonable allowances must be made for this worthy group the sooner we will be doing our duty and paying off an obligation which we rightfully owe.

The fact that there have been lobbyists and exploiters of some of these groups should not militate against them. Too many false hopes and extravagant promises have been made by promoters and selfish interests. Our job is to do something about this condition in a fair, reasonable and adequate fashion. I believe and hope that when Congress reconvenes one of the first things embarked upon should be proper consideration for those aged people who have been so long neglected.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, it may appear to some that this bill is not as extensive as it might be, yet it should be borne in mind that after all it is what might really be called a temporary expedient. The committee intends to go further next year with respect to coverage of various classes of people, particularly those referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, the agricultural workers, and domestic workers and the self-employed. There appeared to be some controversy during our executive sessions with respect to whether or not it is feasible or possible to cover agricultural workers and whether or not it is desirable to cover agricultural workers. For my own part I feel that as many people as possible should be covered, but not being very familiar with the agricultural situation I was willing to defer voting upon that question until next year.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. All the millions who process the farm commodities are covered by the law, but the people who work in the fields, who produce the commodities that provide the jobs and the security for the other fellow, are left out. Certainly I believe the distinguished gentleman from New York can find some way to overcome the administrative difficulties in order that they, too, may have some hope for security in their old age.

Mr. LYNCH. I think it is to the advantage not only of the agricultural workers but of the entire social-security system that agricultural workers and all other workers, including the self-employed, be covered under this law. I can assure the gentleman that every effort will be made to cover them next year if I have anything at all to say with respect to them.

Mr. PACE. I am delighted with the response of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Can the gentleman tell the House why it was the committee changed its mind and abandoned the bill of July 1? I still have not had an answer.

Mr. LYNCH. Yes. The answer is that we got our tail in a crack and we had to get out of it. The only way we could get out of it was by coming in here with a bill that would not be controversial. I think that answers the question as fairly as it can be answered.

Mr. COOLEY. It does.

Mr. LYNCH. Let me say further that there are things in this bill with which I do not agree. I do not agree with title I, but rather than have everything go overboard, especially the maritime workers, in whom I am particularly interested, I was willing to go along for 1 year to carry this tax at 1 percent. As to the variable grants, that involves a new procedure or departure, as the gentleman from Ohio so aptly described it. Instead of a 50–50 matching it involved a 66⅔ percent contribution, which likewise was controversial.

Mr. COOLEY. I know that, but if the gentleman thinks the Committee on Ways and Means had a perfect right to change its mind on this fundamental proposition, why is it that the committee is unwilling for me to change my mind or the other members to change their minds and elect between the two bills?

Mr. LYNCH. I do not think the committee has any objection to your changing your mind.

Mr. COOLEY. I cannot change it. I cannot do anything about it. That is all.

Mr. LYNCH. As a matter of fact, we would like you to change your mind and vote for this bill.

Mr. COOLEY. I probably will, but that still does not give me a chance to elect as between the two propositions.

Mr. LYNCH. I appreciate that very much.

Now, with respect to the maritime workers, there are two problems involved with respect to these seafaring men. The first has to do with permanent unemployment compensation. For some 9 years the maritime workers have been without unemployment compensation. Thanks to the splendid cooperation of the members of the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, we were finally able to get title III in this bill which was, strangely enough, unanimously agreed upon. I might further state that these provisions with respect to maritime workers met with the approval of the labor unions, the ship operators, and the State agencies.

There is in this bill also a temporary feature with respect to those maritime workers who for the past 3 years have been in reality employed by the War Shipping Administration. The Federal Government agrees to reimburse the State agencies for payments made by them to the maritime workers who earned credits as employees of the War Shipping Administration.

I regret that time does not permit me to go into more detailed elaboration of the maritime provisions of this bill. However, I cannot let this opportunity pass without a word of thanks to my colleagues on the committee, to the technical staff, and to Mr. Jackson, of Washington, for their splendid cooperation and assistance.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not very happy about this legislation. There is merit in the variable-grant proposal. Neither am I very happy about everything that has taken place preliminary to bringing legislation on the floor of the House. I shall vote for it, however. It covers some things that must have attention. It will bring to the State of Nebraska, according to the figures of the Social Security Board, based upon the last half of 1945, an additional amount of approximately $334,000. The greater share of this $270,000 will go to our fund for aid for dependent children. It raises the ceiling to $27 for the first child and $18 for each additional child on a Federal 50–50 matching basis. It also will give some help to old people and to the blind. It raises the ceiling to $50 for both programs. However, my State happens to be one of those States that has a fixed ceiling on old-age assistance of $40 and probably nothing can be done until the legislature meets. In reference to this bill, there are a few things that I would like to point out. We are doing something for the soldiers here but not all that should be done. Under the provisions of the old age and survivors insurance section, there are two parts—one pays a benefit when the wage earner reaches 65 years of age, and another one takes care of the situation when he dies while covered. We extend to the veterans 3 years' coverage of the survivors' insurance only. If there is anything Congress needs to revamp, revise, and restudy, it is our treatment of the aged. In most of our communities you can find about four categories of old people. First, there is the individual over 65 who is covered and who is paid benefits regardless of need. Then you find another group who have paid in and have had the deductions made from their pay checks but they have not been in covered employment long enough to get any benefit and they do not even get the taxes back. They may have the pay-roll deductions for 8 or 9 years and still they do not even get the taxes back. They are paid nothing. Then you have the other group who because of a needs test can be paid under old-age assistance. Then you have the fourth group that are not covered and are never paid anything. It is full of discrimination throughout. I certainly want to see a better and more equitable deal for our older citizens. Today we are dealing only with the old-age assistance. The ceiling is raised from $40 to $50, one-half of which is paid by the Federal Government if the State can match it.

Our social-security program is not sound. It is class legislation and it will be costly. It has been stated that if the tax goes up some of the Members will insist on increased benefits. If you do not increase the benefits but leave them as at present levels, 50 years from now your pay-roll tax will equal 10 percent—5 percent on employer and 5 percent on employees. This whole matter of the care for our aged must be treated at one time and a program worked out that is fair to the individual who is covered and who is not covered, and that is fair to the public. At the present time that is not the situation. Under our social-security program the president of the greatest corporation in the United States is covered. The cobbler, or the individual merchant in your home town, or the farmer is not covered. Perhaps the farmers do not want it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to strongly defend the pending bill (H. R. 7037) amending the Social Security Act, because I am obliged to make apologies for it. The bill is not altogether bad and it does contain some good provisions. In fact, according to the study made by the experts, it never should have provided for the freezing of the social-security tax at 1 percent. The grants-in-aid for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind should have been more liberal.

The benefits under title II for World War II veterans are, in my estimation, insufficient. They should have been provided at least on a permanent, not a temporary, basis. It seems to me that the veteran, in order to obtain the benefit for his dependents, must die to conform with the objectives contained in the bill.

The freeze of the tax, if kept at 1 percent, weakens the fund and makes it, as the actuaries would say, actuarially unsound.

We tried to put into the bill what is known as a variable grant, which should be of particular assistance to the aged and needy pensioners, and which would do most good in the States where the wealth of the citizens is below the average. This was stricken out because it was said to be a new departure and unfair to the more fortunate States which are able to carry their own full load. But according to actual figures, the provisions of this bill, supposedly, without a variable grant to the States does in fact give the bulk of the aid of Federal moneys to a very few privileged and wealthy States. The amount of assistance to be granted to Michigan, on the other hand, is ridiculously low, as pointed out in the supplemental views submitted to the House by our distinguished colleague, Mr. EBERHARTER, of Pennsylvania, to which I subscribe in principle and which I desire to make a part of my remarks:

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS

[To accompany H. R. 7037]

The undersigned member of the Committee on Ways and Means is deeply disappointed at the inadequacies of the provisions of the social-security bill reported out by the committee, H. R. 7037.

It is recognized that the bill contains some provisions which are desirable, such as title II: Benefits in Case of Deceased World War II Veterans, and title III: Unemployment Compensation for Maritime Workers.

However, I feel it my duty to point out particular provisions which are not only inadequate, but unfair; and the failure of the committee to include in the bill amendments of pressing and vital national importance.

By House Resolution 204 passed on March 26, 1945, the House authorized the expenditure of $50,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means to make a study of "the need for the amendment and expansion of the Social Security Act, with particular reference to old-age and survivors insurance and the problems of coverage, benefits, and taxes related thereto." Pursuant thereto, the committee selected a competent staff of experts which presented a complete and well documented report early in 1946 on all aspects of the present social-security program, and a future comprehensive expanded program. The committee held executive sessions early in February, and held numerous public hearings beginning on February 25 and continuing over a period of several months.

Numerous witnesses came from all parts of the country to testify, on the expectation that the committee was making a complete revision of our social-security laws. After all this expenditure of time, money, and effort, the committee has reported out a bill which fails to deal with the most important aspects of social security, as covered either in the staff's report of the hearings before the committee.

INADEQUACY AND INCONSISTENCY OF TITLE I: SOCIAL-SECURITY TAXES

Title I of the bill freezes for the eighth consecutive year the social-security contributions for the year 1947 at the present rate of 1 percent each on employers and employees. Just 2 weeks before this bill was reported out, the committee voted for an increase in the contributions to 1½ percent. In the committe report on the earlier bill (H. R. 6911) filed July 1, 1946, the committee stated:

"It would appear to be for the best interests of all concerned if the rate could be fixed at this time for a reasonable period rather than that the matter should come up each year (p. 3)."

No reasonable explanation for the change in the views of the committee on this important issue has been advanced. The change is contrary to both the previous action of the committee and recommendation No. 10 at the bottom of page 122 of the committee's social-security technical staff in its report, "Issues in Social Security."

The reasons given by the committee's technical staff for an increase in the social-security contribution rates are as follows:

"It is a foregone conclusion that social-security taxes must increase in the future if they are to pay a substantial part of the benefit totals which we know are going to increase in a major way; that we want no irregularities or sudden breaks in our social-security tax schedule and that anything that may be undesirable about a modest further growth in the trust fund during favorable economic conditions is far less important than the painful processes of meeting unusually high benefit loads in years of economic depression after we have been somewhat lulled into complacency by an unusually low benefit load and unusually high contribution totals, due to unheard-of employment conditions (top of p. 122)."

In addition to freezing the contribution rate, section 103 of the bill provides for repeal of the provision added to the law in 1943, which was inserted for the purpose of guaranteeing the payment of old-age and survivors insurance benefits, in case the contributions to the fund should be inadequate because of the continued freezing of the contribution rates. The repeal of this proviso by the committee bill is absolutely inconsistent with the action taken in freezing the contribution rate.

INADEQUACY OF TITLE V: STATE GRANTS FOR OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE, AID TO DEPENDENT CHILDREN, AND AID TO THE BLIND

Title V of the bill increases Federal contributions to States for aid to the needy aged, blind, and dependent children. The maximum Federal contribution to the aged and the blind would be increased from $20 to $25 a month, and for aid to dependent children from $9 to $13.50 for the first child, and from $6 to $9 for each additional child.

Originally the committee voted to increase the Federal contribution from $20 to $30 for the aged and the blind and to provide additional Federal funds to States with low per capita incomes, which would permit a graduated increase in the Federal contribution up to 66⅔ percent of the amount paid to the recipient. These provisions reported out by the committee in H. R. 6911 are omitted from H. R. 7037. We feel this omission is a grave mistake.

The variable matching formula originally adopted by the committee in H. R. 6911 would have given additional Federal funds to 31 States. The 31 States which will lose Federal funds because of the omission from H. R. 7037 of the variable matching formula, and the Federal proportion of the amounts paid to recipients which they would have received under H. R. 6911 are as follows:

Federal proportion under H. R. 6911
Alabama	66⅔
Arizona	59
Arkansas	66⅔
Colorado	53
Florida	60
Georgia	66⅔
Idaho	55
Iowa	53
Kansas	54
Kentucky	66⅔
Louisiana	66⅔
Maine	53
Minnesota	56
Mississippi	66⅔
Missouri	56
Nebraska	57
New Hampshire	58
New Mexico	66⅔
North Carolina	66⅔
North Dakota	57
Oklahoma	66⅔
South Carolina	66⅔
South Dakota	60
Tennessee	66⅔
Texas	62
Utah	52
Vermont	57
Virginia	59
West Virginia	66
Wisconsin	52
Wyoming	52

The provisions of title V of H. R. 7037 will cost the Federal Government an additional $47,538,000. Many States will not get one single additional cent of this money from the Government. This is so because at the present time one-half of the States do not make payments to needy aged persons in amounts greater than the maximum of $40 per month for which Federal matching funds are available. Among these States are Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

While some States may amend their laws at their next regular session or at a special session of their State legislatures, many States undoubtedly will be discouraged from making such an important permanent change since section 504 of the bill provides that the additional Federal contribution is only for a temporary period—up through December 31, 1947.

The provisions of title V of the bill do nothing to help raise the admittedly inadequate assistance payments in the low-income States such as Kentucky where the average payment was $11.71 in April; in Georgia, $12.67; in North Carolina $13.81; in Virginia, $15.22; in Mississippi, $16.39, etc.

One State, California, will get 48 percent of the additional Federal funds for the aged. Three States, New York, Massachusetts, and California, will get 76 percent of the additional Federal funds for the aged.

Under the bill 86 percent of the additional Federal funds for old-age assistance will go to the 10 richest States with 29 percent of the aged population, while the 10 poorest States with 14 percent of the aged population will get only 1 percent of the additional Federal funds.

This rank discrimination against the neediest States is shocking. It is unwarranted and unsound.

It results in the Federal Government using revenue raised from persons in the low-income States to help finance assistance in the richest States.

It is a soak-the-poor plan.

It increases the disparity in the amounts of assistance payments between States.

It is a policy of neglecting to improve conditions where the need is the greatest.

It is contrary to every sound principle of public finance, social policy, and justice.

It is contrary to the policy of this country since its establishment—that we are a Nation indivisible; that Congress should enact laws for the benefit of all the people.

The very minimum which should be acceptable at this time is the restoration of the provisions of title V as contained in H. R. 6911, as originaly reported out by the committee.

IMPORTANT PROVISIONS COMPLETELY OMITTED FROM THE BILL

The bill does not contain any provisions whatsoever on such vital matters covered by the committee's technical staff report or included in the hearings before the committee as:

1. Broadening the coverage of the old-age and survivors insurance program to include at least those groups which it is universally recognized are entitled to inclusion.

2. Increasing the amount of insurance benefits. The amount of insurance benefits was fixed in 1939, and are now inadequate. There has been about a 50-percent increase in the cost of living since 1939, while at the same time the total premiums paid into the fund have increased due to increased employment.

3. Increasing the amount of earnings which a beneficiary is permitted to earn while drawing an insurance benefit.

4. Providing a more flexible retirement age by establishing insurance protection in case of permanent total disability.

Some provisions on each of these matters could and should have been included in the bill. Each year of delay in enacting these provisions into law means hardship and privation for thousands of Americans in every State in the Union.

SUMMARY

Further delay is unjustified. The proper approach to this entire program is to strengthen and broaden the insurance features, and from that base proceed to improve the assistance and related features, and only in that manner can a comprehensive, intelligent, and workable program be evolved.

The hearings before the committee conclusively prove that the American people want the Social Security Act broadened and expanded now. The bill reported out by the committee does very little to carry out this objective.

The bill in its present form is a sad disappointment.

HERMAN P. EBERHARTER.

The figures, however, are somewhat deficient and are subject to slight corrections.

Later and more authentic figures were made available by the Social Security Board and I desire to make these figures a part of my remarks.

Public assistance: Annual cost to Federal Government under Federal-matching maximums [1] proposed in H. R. 7037 with 50-50 matching and increase over current expenditure rate

[Based on operation in July-December 1945]

State	Amount from Federal funds under 50-50 matching
	All programs		Old-age assistance		Aid to dependent children		Aid to the blind

[1] $50 for old-age assistance and aid to the blind; for aid to dependent children, $27 for first child in family and $18 for each additional child.
[2] Based on operation in July–December 1945 of current provisions of titles I, IV, and X.
[3] Less than $500.

At any rate, I shall have to vote for the bill because it provides unemployment compensation for the maritime workers and limited benefits for World War II veterans, and the additional financial assistance under title V to the aged, to the dependent children, and to the blind. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have been advocating and fighting for the inclusion of maritime workers from the time the Social Security Act was proposed.

The disappointment of the bill comes to me through the fact we have not included other deserving elements of our people in the Social Security Act, such as casual employees, domestics, those employed in charitable and institutions of the church, and various other classifications, not to forget the farmer, who may well have been included under the beneficent provisions of the act. So I shall vote for the bill because it does provide some additional coverage and some additional benefits for certain limited classes of our people. I hope that in the new year we shall be able to increase the number of our people who insist upon their rights as citizens and who should not be discriminated against by exclusion because they are unorganized, or because in their particular classification there may be some little difficulty in levying and collecting the premium or tax, for certainly there never will be any trouble granting them the benefits to which they are entitled.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to join my colleagues who have spoken in opposition to some of the provisions of the bill under consideration.

Speaking for my State, I wish to quote from a telegram which I have received in regard to the amendment proposed in regard to the social-security law, as follows:

> The Louisiana State Board of Public Welfare has considered the most recent proposal of the House Ways and Means Committee to amend the social-security law by merely increasing maximum grants for Federal participation without including variable grant feature. The board considers this proposal as being detrimental to the interests of Louisiana since it would obviously increase the amount of Federal money to the wealthier States without making any material change in amount of Federal funds available to Louisiana. The board has instructed me to request you to oppose such an amendment unless variable grant formula can be included.

Mr. Chairman, the rule granted for the consideration of this H. R. 7037 is a closed rule—closed tight, airtight—closed so tight that it is not possible under the rule to offer any amendment or amendments, and therefore, the membership of the House is precluded from any opportunity to give consideration to amendments which would give proper consideration to the needs of thousands of unfortunate people who are desperately in need of consideration.

Mr. Chairman, since my time is limited it is impossible for me to discuss the subject any further; however, I think that the reason for my opposition, and the opposition of others from the South is fully covered in the discussion on yesterday by my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the House granted this closed rule and as a result makes it impossible for me and others to offer amendments, and I am sorry that more consideration was not given by the committee to this important and serious matter; however, we hope that when the bill reaches the Senate that this bill will be given further consideration and the inequities and discrimination of which we complain will be adjusted.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill although I regret very much that under the rules we are not free to consider amendments to provide a more equitable allocation of funds to the respective States. It is obviously unfair that States with a higher per capita income should receive a greater amount from the Federal Treasury than the States that are less able to take care of their aged citizens. There is a discrimination against the agricultural States growing out of the higher incomes enjoyed by industrial States. The difficulties are not altogether limited to the South although if Texas and Florida are left out of consideration the Southern State making the highest payment for old-age assistance is still unable to pay as much as the State outside the South making the lowest payment. This should not be regarded as a sectional issue since three States in the Northeast, Vermont, New Hampshie, and Maine—all agricultural States—are confronted with the same difficulties and there are Western States equally discriminated against. As stated in the debate, sooner or later the Congress must decide this issue and I insist that if full justice is accorded the States with low per capita incomes there must be a new formula for social-security payments.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have for some time hoped that the Congress would seize the opportunity to broaden the scope of the Social Security Act in order to provide ample funds for the aged, as well as lower the age limit from 65 to, supposedly, 55. While this bill, H. R. 7037, has made some needed improvements, in general it falls far short of providing for the needs of the aged.

The Congress could do nothing more beneficial for the vast group of our citizens than to think seriously of the dependency of the aged people, and in many, many cases their destitution. Since the bill as enacted will carry for a year, my efforts shall be directed toward having the committee grant serious recognition to the interests of the aged. The time will come when the Congress must enact legislation to keep these people in decency and comfort when they have passed the age of physical usefulness.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, relative to the social security legislation, I am just going to discuss one point, because I am vitally interested in it. I think when the country thoroughly understands it, the people of this country will demand a great reform in the social security legislation. We are simply following the example that was set by Louis XVI of France. When they were very hard pressed for finances and facing bankruptcy, his Minister of Finance devised a plan, with his collaborators, to put in an annuity system to raise money. The people of France went wild over the idea of buying annuities for their babies and for other members of the families. The result was that the government took this money and spent it. So that after a time when the government faced bankruptcy and the King let his Finance Minister go, the people realized that their fund was bankrupt. That, in many respects led to the French Revolution and the ultimate removal of the head of Louis XVI.

Under our social security program that is precisely what we have been doing. We have a fake reserve. It has taken a long time for the people to realize it, and there are still millions of people who do not realize that the money that has been collected, some $7,000,000,000 or more, has been spent. All there is of the reserve are some certificates or bonds. But when the benefits have to be paid the people will be taxed again to pay them. Of course that will be another group of persons than have paid the pay-roll taxes. But if our country should face another war, if it should face bad crops and insolvency, then the trouble would begin. It might ultimately weaken this Republic or even destroy it.

It did that to France where they finally in desperation confiscated the church property and then went the complete limit of fiat money and ultimately bloody revolution. The point here is we must put the finances of social security in order. If you read the report now of the tax foundation in New York you will find that its experts point out very clearly that this money has been spent and that the people will have to be taxed over again. So there is great work ahead for the Ways and Means Committee to do to put this social security on a sound fiscal basis. It is actuarially sound now, but it must be made actuarially sound so as not to cause trouble in the future.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. THOM. The Bell Telephone Co. has a private pension system and its funds collected from workmen and employees are invested in United States bonds; so it has the same base as the social security funds; it is a first charge against the country's income.

Mr. REED of New York. That does not make any difference because these moneys which went into the Treasury of the United States have been spent on boondoggling, war, and a lot of other things, whatever they wanted to appropriate it for. It is the laborers and the manufacturers who have to pay this tax. I just want to make that point perfectly clear as to why you should not increase this social security payroll tax, because there is enough there to pay the benefits. There is no reason to collect one dollar more to pour into the ratholes and the wild program of spending that has been carried on here over a long period of time.

I present the findings of the Tax Foundation of New York:

The so-called reserve in both the Federal old-age and the Federal unemployment-compensation accounts is obviously nothing except the Government's debt to these funds. What actually is happening is: (a) taxes in excess of current benefit payments are being collected; (b) these excess receipts are borrowed from the fund and spent for general governmental purposes; and (c) if and when the reserve must be drawn upon through liquidation, funds to meet the draft must be obtained by selling to the public some of the fund assets. This would result in transferring the Government's debt from the fund to the public. If the traditional policy with respect to that debt should be followed, namely, to retire it at maturity, it would, therefore, become necessary to levy taxes for amortization as well as for interest. Hence, the taxation whereby the reserve had been created originally would have been in vain, for a second tax levy would eventually become necessary in order to provide the money for the future social-security payments. This second levy would be, directly, for interest and amortization of the bonds taken from the reserve. But the existence of these bonds is evidence that someone had already contributed the money to buy them and is supposed to be proof that no further taxation would be required to pay the benefits represented by the bonds.

The plain truth is that the program which is now operative in the United States involves, for a considerable period, a tax levy used in part for general purposes and in part for bona fide security payments. The taxes now being collected are principally devoted to general purposes and only in minor degree to genuine social-security purposes. (Social Security, the Tax Foundation.)

[3] Less than $500.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASIELEWSKI].

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Chairman, when the Social Security Act was adopted in 1935 about one-third of the States had old-age assistance provisions in their laws. In 1935, as we all recall, we were in the middle of a depression and many of the States had considerable financial difficulties. Today the situation is in reverse. In order to help the States along, the Federal Government stepped into the picture by offering to match the State payments of benefits, dollar for dollar, up to $20, thus making it possible in very needy cases to pay up to $40. Individual States might pay more if they so desired, but the matching runs only up to a total of $40. The bill before the committee increases this sum to $50.

Old-age assistance is on a sound basis. For example, in the State of Wisconsin any citizen 65 years of age may make application by applying to the county court of the county in which he resides. The county court holds hearings, investigates the needs of the individual, and checks to see whether his family can contribute to his support. If the individual members of the family cannot contribute, the State determines the needs of the individual applicant and sets the benefits. If the family members are able and willing to contribute to the support of the applicant, the court authorizes a supplementation of the amounts that are contributed by members of the family as the situation warrants.

Early last session the Committee on Ways and Means was authorized to make a complete study of the social-security structure in order to determine whether it was actuarially sound and also to determine what liberalizing steps were warranted. In January of 1946 a report was prepared under the guidance of Mr. Calhoun. It consists of over 700 pages and is about as complete a study of this subject matter as can be found anywhere.

Subsequently, your committee conducted hearings over a period of 4 or 5 months. These hearings, however, were interrupted intermittently by consideration of other legislation such as the Philippine Trade Act, reciprocal trade agreements, and a number of other important measures. In the hearings over 157 witnesses testified and the hearings numbered some 1,160 printed pages.

These hearings were completed early in June. Your committee appreciated that a comprehensive bill on this subject could not be worked out in the time remaining in the session. It was therefore agreed that at this time we would only deal with those phases of the subject as were urgent and noncontroversial, thus leaving to future consideration those matters involving a change in policy and practical mechanics that required further study. It is important because of the interrelation of the various phases of the subject that it be dealt with in the whole rather than piece-meal fashion.

The bill before the committee is not a perfect one, it falls short in several respects as I see it, but a majority of the committee members have agreed on its separate provisions and I am willing to go along in view of the fact that this is mere stopgap legislation and not intended to be the last word of your committee on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired.

Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

House Resolution 348 was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YALTA CONFERENCE

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, at this time when millions of words recorded during the congressional investigation of the greatest military disaster our beloved United States has yet suffered—and I speak of the calamity of Pearl Harbor—at this time, when millions of recorded words of testimony presented to our committee investigating the circumstances of the Pearl Harbor disaster are being digested and the report has reached the Senate and the House and the world—at this time I wish to draw the attention of the Members of this House to another disaster we suffered during the war.

It is a disaster which, although it involved no immediate military losses, will bear upon the whole future of this country and of the entire world. I might call it "the diplomatic Pearl Harbor" were it not more than a diplomatic defeat for, in reality, it is a defeat of our policy and of our American principles and ideals fraught with danger for our entire future.

Mr. Speaker, I have in mind the event known as the Crimea Conference or the Conference at Yalta held in February 1944, on Soviet Russian territory in the summer resort of Yalta, on the Crimean Peninsula projecting into the Black Sea.

It is my intention today to prove that this conference, which brought together our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Winston Churchill and the dictator of the Soviet Union, Marshal Joseph V. Stalin, placed upon the United States responsibilities which by far exceed all that this Nation can take if it wants to preserve a clear conscience, to maintain its prestige abroad and to safeguard its most vital interest of national security.

On March 1, 1945, we had the honor of listening in this very hall to President Franklin D. Roosevelt making a report on the Yalta Conference. At that time he disclosed to us, in adidtion to a press release which was published at the conclusion of the meeting, several details of different agreements and arrangements arrived at by the participants of the Big Three caucus. I call this conference a caucus because it was kept from the eyes and ears of the press, of the politicians, and no one in the whole world has ever been informed of what really went on in the sumptuous rooms of the Tsarist palace at Yalta.

On this March 1, 1945, we learned only a fraction, and a very small fraction only, of what was agreed upon and decided at the Crimea Conference. We did not like this fraction and the late President himself admitted that he did not like it. The tone of his speech was apologetic. He termed many of the Yalta decisions a "compromise" and particularly he referred to the decisions concerning our most faithful ally—Poland—as a "compromise." He said, "I did not agree with all of it by any means."

As time went on we learned more about the Crimea decisions. The more we learned about them the less we liked them. Our apprehension grew and we became more and more uneasy with each new disclosure.

We learned that in order to buy Russia's adhesion to the United Nations organization we had to give her three votes instead of one. By implication we thus recognized two Soviet Republics completely subservient to the Moscow Government—Soviet Ukraine and Soviet White Ruthenia—as independent states entitled to their own representation in the international organization. It was clear to everybody at that time, and it is still more clear today, that the two puppet republics as independent states meant only an increase of Soviet Russia's power within the United Nations. In fact, it means more, because by agreeing to treat these two Soviet republics as if they were independent states, we were in fact admitting a dangerous precedent of recognizing as independent and sovereign states countries bordering on Russia, governed by Soviet sponsored puppet governments and political police, which in reality are totally deprived of any vestige of independence and sovereignty.

Every American almost instinctively rejected this deal, but there appeared to be nothing we could do about it.

We were shocked again when it was disclosed that at Yalta it was agreed virtually to condone Soviet Russian looting and robbery of every country upon which Stalin's Red legions set their foot. We could do nothing about this calamity which will make European nations suffer for generations to come and there was nothing else for us to do but accept at Potsdam this other Yalta deal.

We were most profoundly shocked when we learned that at Yalta also the Soviet Russian Government was granted the right to annex the chain of the Kurile Islands and the southern half of the Sakhalin Peninsula. I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that this permission has been granted to Russia in flat violation of our obligations toward another of our faithful allies, the Republic of China.

But more than that—the disposition of insular and peninsular territory in the Pacific, as provided by the Yalta agreement, constitutes a direct threat to our American security by the fact that it brings Russian military, naval, and air bases dangerously close to Alaska and to our northwestern Pacific Coast cities and establishments.

I purposely avoid further consideration of the military aspect of this issue, but I would like to hear about it from our military, naval, and air experts at a closed session of one of our House committees, and I am sure that their testimony will be startling to many of my colleagues who were not in a position to give this problem all the study it not only deserves, but requires.

Let us turn our eyes now toward Europe and let us face squarely the results of the Yalta Conference projected upon our own security and the security of the British Empire. Let us, however, look first and foremost at the terrible havoc which the Yalta decisions brought upon Europe—its nation, its culture, and its centuries-old ties with western Christian civilization.

Speaking at Fulton, Mo., a short time ago, Mr. Winston Churchill said that an iron curtain has fallen upon the eastern half of Europe and he specifically outlined where this iron curtain was placed. From Stettin in the north to Trieste in the south, a line has been drawn behind which Soviet Russia firmly established its totalitarian reign of terror. What Mr. Churchill did not say is that he is one of the coauthors of the Yalta agreements which have in fact drawn that line and which have in fact helped build this iron curtain behind which over a dozen Christian countries are locked in a mass prison called the Soviet sphere of security by people who deal in understatements.

It has been long agreed that the fate of Poland is the test case of our dealing with postwar problems.

I do not need to stress before this body Poland's record as a fighting member of the United Nations during the war. The magnificent resistance put up by the Poles to German aggression in 1939, the heroism of the Polish Army, Navy, and Air Force displayed in every campaign the United Nations had to fight in the war, and the truly fabulous deeds of Poland's underground home army, found recognition many times in this House. I cannot refrain, however, from mentioning that Poland was the only country of Europe which had no quisling, which has never collaborated with the Germans, and which paid the highest price for having stood on our side during the entire war. The graves of Polish soldiers in Norway, in France, at Tobruk in Africa, at Monte Cassino in Italy, in Normandy, in Belgium, in Holland, and in Germany, alongside of the uncounted graves of victims of the German barbarism in Poland itself, and particularly the graves of the Polish fliers who saved Great Britain in 1940—these graves and not my words testify to the magnificent role played by the Polish Nation in this war.

It was Poland that President Roosevelt called the inspiration to liberty-loving people, and it was Poland that our friend, Frank C. Walker, then a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet, publicly described as "the mother of the United Nations."

While the war lasted Poland's war effort was appreciated by all the United Nations and declarations of admiration and encouragement were heaped upon the Polish Nation. This noble nation took all the words it heard at their face value. The Poles believed in the sincerity of the words spoken and the pledges given to them on behalf of the United States.

And then came Yalta. Scrapping the Atlantic Charter and all provisions of international law, the agreement on Poland reached at Yalta made the United States a party to the deal which, first, incorporated into the Soviet Union 46 percent of Poland's territory; second, forcibly deprived the constitutional government of Poland of the possibility of performing its duties on the liberated territory of Poland; third, handed over the administration of Poland to a handful of puppets subservient to a foreign power; and fourth, unleashed the dreaded and vindictive Soviet secret police known as the NKVD.

Last fall members of a subcommittee appointed by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs went to Poland and submitted to us a most appalling report of conditions prevailing there. I wish at this point, Mr. Speaker, to quote briefly from a report made by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. THOMAS S. GORDON:

The Russian Occupation Army is behaving very badly. We saw their arrogance in taking advantage of the poor people (of Warsaw). We saw the nearby highways jammed with hundreds of heads of cattle, horses, and farming implements being taken out of Poland by the Russians. Pillaging of the shops on the streets was going on most freely, and the snatching of purses from Polish women is a daily occurrence. There is also wholesale raping of Polish women. When resistance is offered, the Russian soldiers kill. The Poles do not speak openly about their troubles. They whisper in one another's ears. Public meetings are run and controlled by the Communists and there is no free discussion in the press, despite the fact that newspapers are numerous. There is a very strict censorship. There is no self-rule anywhere—even in the villages. All officials are appointed by the government. Any reported anti-Soviet talk subjects one to immediate arrest and a word uttered against Stalin is fatal. There is the general belief that 90 percent of the population are against the present dictatorship.

I wish to quote also briefly at this time from a report submitted officially to our military authorities by a lieutenant colonel of the United States Army, attached to General Eisenhower's headquarters in Frankfurt-on-the-Main in Germany. This officer traveled extensively all over Poland in his official capacity and I wish to read a few passages of his report:

The liberation of Poland by Russian armies brought with it pillage, loot, rape, mass arrests, executions and deportations. The first phase of this—the inexpert handling—died down, only to be replaced by the dreaded systematic NKVD (Russian gestapo) methods. Now only leaders of every category are arrested and executed. Those deported are deprived of their Polish identification and given German papers on their trip eastward. The Russians are moving all machinery and rolling stock eastward. Farm tractors and farm horses are confiscated and moved to Russia. Large estates are divided up into tracts of approximately 12 acres and given to former farm laborers, but no implements with which to improve that land are given the new owners, compelling them to conclude that those 12 acres are not their private property but part of collectivism.

While there is a considerable movement of Russian armies eastward, Poland contains a very large Russian army. But the worst factor of this army of "liberation" is that large elements of it are being demobilized in Poland and the individuals given Polish citizenship, creating for the future either a troublemaking minority or flooding the country with NKVD members.

* * * There is no self-rule anywhere, even in villages and small towns. All officials are appointed by the government, who regardless of political party affiliation must take oath of loyalty to the government and to Russia. The actual ruler of Poland is the Soviet Ambassador sitting in Warsaw.

The name of the officer who is the author of this report is known to me, but I am not at liberty to use it at this time.

I may, however, use the name of another eye-witness of conditions prevailing in Poland, and he is Mr. Ivan H. (Cy) Peterman, a very able and responsible newspaperman who recently published in the Philadelphia Inquirer a series of articles on Poland. With your permission I want to quote again from one of his articles the following brief passages:

Among all the countries Hitler conquered, Poland may have suffered most. Of its 35,000,000 people, at least 7,000,000 were exterminated, killed in battle, in the resistance, worked to death as slaves impressed into Nazi divisions, tortured in concentration camps.

The capital Warsaw, is 90 percent destroyed. The Warsaw ghetto massacre constitutes the sadistic low in the Nazi book of crimes. Poland's clergy, its Jewry, its landed class and its peasants have in turn suffered, lost their property, died.

The persecution of Poland began with the September march of the panzers, increased with their 1945 rout by the Russians, continues under the Red-garrisoned occupation beside a puppet Polish provisional government of Charley McCarthys for Stalin.

But the territorial losses, the degradation of its populace and the mass suffering of World War II are not the end of Poland's tragedy. Today of all the liberated nations in Europe, least happy, least settled, least liberated, in fact, is Poland.

Why should this be? Why has one of Europe's oldest, bravest, most patient peoples been kicked around both by enemy and ally?

Why, with friends like Great Britain, France, and America, must Poland live amid a terror little different in some areas from that which its wartime underground resisted? Why, during December-January just passed, were approximately a million Poles, including many of the surviving Jews, thrust from their homes, cast adrift, and pushed toward the Anglo-American zones of occupation? Why did the Poles have to make room for a million homeless Russians?

The answer is again twofold: Realistic Russianism, and Anglo-American appeasement. Nobody has been able or willing to say "No!" to the Soviets. They've done as they wished with helpless Poland.

Following the imperialistic tradition of the Czarist regime, the power-conscious Soviets let position and possession dictate policy toward neighboring lands.

All this is a direct result of the agreements reached at the Yalta Conference. It was there that we disclaimed all ties and obligations with and toward the constitutional Polish government-in-exile under whose leadership the Polish Nation fought in the war on our side, the constitutional legality of which our Government had fully recognized and which had been represented here in Washington throughout the war by its duly appointed Ambassador accredited to our President. It was that Government which continued Poland's gallant fight after the initial Polish defeat in 1939. It was that Government which, despite German and Soviet hindrance and with Anglo-American blessing smuggled out of Poland thousands of young Poles, trained them as parachutists, tankers, infantrymen, and the hottest fighters of the Royal Air Force. It was that Polish Government which kept in constant touch with the Polish underground, which provided us with most valuable information about the situation behind the German fronts, which directed all the sabotage, thus helping the Soviet Russian armies in their drive westward. It was under the guidance of that Polish constitutional government that the heroes of the Polish underground fought for 63 days in the Battle of Warsaw, tying up considerable German forces and thus helping once again the Russian offensive.

It is true that President Roosevelt wanted this Government to participate in the formation of a new government in liberated Poland. Some of the members of that Polish Government who spent the entire war in Poland miraculously performing their duties as an underground cabinet, agreed to reveal themselves to the Russian authorities in the hope of coming to terms. They revealed themselves with full knowledge of our own and British authorities but they were caught in a trap and were shipped to Moscow where one of the typical Bolshevik show trials was arranged at which they were sentenced and put in prison. Our Secretary of State, Mr. Stettinius, and the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Eden, raised their voices at the San Francisco Conference on behalf of these true leaders of the Polish Nation, but soon we abandoned their case. The late Harry Hopkins, accompanied by a minor official of our State Department, Mr. Charles E. Bohlen, went to Moscow and promptly agreed to the creation of a government which all available evidence describes as a group of Moscow-trained Communist agents, Soviet citizens, adventurers, and social engineers who, with Mr. Hopkins' and Mr. Bohlen's blessing embarked on the adventure of sovietizing Poland.

The Yalta agreement kept our hands tied. There was nothing we could do at that time and we had to recognize this hand-picked group of foreign agents as a government of Poland. No shame was spared us, and the President of the United States had a most unpleasant duty to perform: At the White House he had to accept credentials from a man posing as the Ambassador of Poland, a man who only 2 years earlier disclaimed all allegiance to foreign princes and potentates and took the oath of allegiance to the United States, accepting the high honor of becoming a citizen in our country. It is the same man who, while a citizen of the United States, traveled to Moscow, went into a huddle with Joseph V. Stalin and emerged as a champion of the cause of enslavement of his former country by a foreign country. I do not want to mention his name speaking before this distinguished body. But I want to say this, the acceptance of the appointment of a naturalized American citizen as ambassador of a foreign country is unique in our history, and, in my opinion, Soviet Russia purposely selected him in order to humiliate us and to prove to the world that Americans would take anything.

Having thus delivered Poland into the hands of its oppressors, and having our hands tied by the secret deals made at Yalta, we are now witnessing the onward march of Soviet Russian forces and making only a few futile gestures of dissatisfaction, and we have to accept the virtual incorporation into Russia of states like Yugoslavia, Rumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Austria, Finland, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia.

It seems indeed superfluous to repeat what every honest American newspaperman who had the opportunity of visiting Europe recently is saying to his readers: Our prestige among European nations has sunk below any mentionable level. But our material losses are equally appalling. Over 160,000,000 slave workers have been added to the Soviet state-controlled economy. I want at this point to draw the attention of the House to a magnificent report, No. 1527, submitted to the House on February 7, 1946, by our Special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAM M. COLMER. This report analyzes—on page 37 and subsequent—the economic meaning of the acquisition by Russia of tremendous new resources of manpower, raw materials, industrial equipment, and so forth. It is clear that both free world trade and our American ability to trade freely our raw materials and our manufactured goods have been endangered by the situation created in Europe, and every American worker, wage earner, and businessman, as well as our industry, will feel the most dangerous impact of Soviet economy enriched by blood and sweat of the enslaved nations—very soon.

The American people rightly shudder when they look today at the results of our "Second Pearl Harbor," as the Yalta disaster has rightly been termed, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is within our responsibility to the American people to:

First. Try to find remedies in order to save American prestige, American interests, and American security, all three greatly endangered as a result of the Crimea Conference.

Recently several authoritative voices were raised expressing grave apprehensions which the American people have about Yalta. The leading newspaper, the Washington Post, had an editorial, and I wish to quote its most pertinent passages:

It is clear from the revelation of the secret Yalta agreement to give the whole of the Kuriles to the Russians that Mr. Roosevelt proceeded to the Crimea in January 1945, not only a sick man but also with an imperfect grasp of the situation in the Pacific. Perhaps the sickness and the lack of grasp went together. At any rate, Mr. Roosevelt seems to have labored under two misapprehensions. One was that the struggle with Japan would be protracted, and the other was that, either because of the prospect of a long conflict with Japan or because of uncertainty about Russia, it was necessary to buy Russia's entry. The misapprehensions combined to make the conference at Yalta a monumental blunder.

* * * It looks as if the President was neither as well served in the Pacific nor so well equipped to evaluate or to understand the forces in operation. * * *

* * * The blunder at Yalta shows that the President counted on the long and sanguinary struggle for which the American people were prepared.

* * * Evidently, however, the conferees at Yalta sought to persuade the Russians to come in, the price being all the Kuriles and two extra seats for the Ukraine and White Russia respectively in the United Nations. In return the United States got a mess of pottage in the form of promises of a democratic eastern Europe and a frontier line in Poland which never materialized. The clumsiness and mistake of the Yalta proceedings yielded nothing but unnecessary headache over eastern Europe, a legacy of trouble at San Francisco, and the jeopardization of a sensible and cooperative trusteeship system in the Pacific. It was a tragedy for the United States that Mr. Roosevelt was sick at Yalta and his advisers asleep.

A man best qualified to tell us about the secrets of the war, Maj. Gen. William H. Donovan, former head of the Office of Strategic Services, said publicly in New York City on February 28, that—and I quote him:

At the time of the Yalta Conference it had been estimated that in Manchuria, Japan had its Kwantung Army, highly trained and well led. * * * It may not be known that the American forces in China had been forbidden to send intelligence agents into that area either openly or clandestinely. The bargain struck at Yalta with the Soviet Union in return for her entry against Japan was based upon the estimate of the Kwantung Army in the absence of intelligence reports.

In truth, the Kwantung Army had been largely depleted by the transfer of most of its strength to the Philippines and Okinawa. So that in Manchuria there was a far weaker force than had been previously reported which offered little or no resistance to the Russian troops.

Did we pay Russia too much for the risk and sacrifice she made?

* * * There was an impression among many Americans, rightly or wrongly, that at a critical moment in the war we were so fearful—unjustifiably as it now appears—that Russia would lessen in its resistance to Germany that we went on our knees, and Russia has kept us there ever since.

That is not a very self-respecting posture for any nation. * * * And the sooner the people of this country are made certain we are squarely on our feet the better it will be for ourselves, for the Soviet Union, and for the world.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to find out who is responsible for the fact that the United States has been dealing on its knees with Soviet Russia. Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of introducing to the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to appoint a special committee of investigation of the circumstances, proceedings, and results of the Crimea Conference.

(1) It shall be the duty of the special committee to conduct a comprehensive study of all phases of the preparation, conduct, and execution of the agreements reached at the Crimea Conference, and particularly of agreements dealing with rights of foreign countries, territorial changes, and changes in existing obligations of the United States toward foreign countries.

(2) For the purpose of carrying out this resolution a special committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within or outside the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the special committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

(3) The findings and recommendations of the special committee shall be embodied in a report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session).

(4) The first interim report of the special committee should be made within 60 days after the date of passage of this resolution and the final report should be made on or before December 31, 1946.

This desperate situation in Poland continues. Now the much discussed referendum has been held. If it were not so tragic I would call it a farce. Why do I speak? What concern is it of a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress? Ah, Mr. Speaker, who should be more concerned than a Member of this House? Every fiber in my being cries out against this shameful treatment of Poland and at every opportunity I shall keep this matter before the Congress and the American people.

So now we have the latest scene played in this fantastic pageant of current history.

Vice Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk has charged in an address that the Warsaw regime was trying to destroy his Polish Peasant Party through force, armed bands and secret police.

Mikolajczyk, who formerly was premier of the Polish Government in exile, spoke before the general council of his party, but the text has not been published here because of censorship.

He declared that the government railroaded the June 30 referendum, charging that Peasant Party members were rejected as polling clerks in all but 3 of Poland's 17 provinces.

The vice premier charged that the government was using secret police to plant evidence purporting to show the Polish Peasant Party was linked with terrorist bands.

"This is nothing but a political fight which tries to make our work impossible and perhaps wipe us off the face of the earth," Mikolajczyk said.

He declared that instructions had been issued that Polish citizens of German descent and even Germans be supplied with counterfeit Peasant Party memberships "so that it will be possible to say after the referendum that our party is not only antidemocratic but pro-German."

"The breaking up of our party is to be accomplished through the citizens militia reserve organization, special courts, and through gangs," he said, adding that gangs were often recruited from the Communist-backed Workers' Party and outcast Poles of German descent.

The peasant leader charged that the recent action of the security police in padlocking and suspending activities of six peasant district headquarters violated the 1921 constitution. He questioned the legality of the government's formation of the reserve militia, which had placed guns in the hands of 30,000 in the last 60 days.

"There are those who ask what we the unarmed can do, although there are millions of us, when brutal force attacks us?" he said. "I told Gomulko, the Workers' Party leader: 'You will not be able to break the freedom of every person in Poland.'"

He predicted the 50-year-old party would continue, despite threats.

Mikolajczyk said Stanislaw Radzkiewicz, minister of public security, admitted in parliament that his own secret-police organization contained armed bandits from the forest.

Diplomatic informants tell me that political conditions in Poland are approaching a critical, perhaps explosive point. Terrorism is widespread and the possibility of a bloody upheaval is not discounted.

The State Department, as the latest in a series of moves reflecting concern over the situation, has asked Ambassador Arthur Bliss Lane at Warsaw for a full report on action of the Polish Government in closing six district offices of the Polish Peasant Party in the last 6 weeks.

The Peasant Party is the political support of Vice Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, who is a member of the Communist-dominated coalition government because the United States and Britain insisted that he should be there. Russia, on the other hand, backs in general the other members of the government.

Poland had the trick referendum June 30 on a Communist-supported proposal to create a unicameral legislature. Mikolajczyk fought this change.

Next fall Mikolajczyk's power will be directly at issue in general elections.

Whatever happens in Poland is certain to be of direct concern to the United States, Britain, and Russia. London and Washington are particularly interested in seeing that Mikolajczyk's power is not smashed by repressive police measures deliberately designed to wreck his leadership.

There are in the country an estimated 350,000 Russian troops, officially to protect supply lines to the Soviet zone in Germany. There is a small but powerful underground army known as the "NSZ" which has a disciplined force of an estimated 50,000 or more. There are uncounted hundreds if not thousands of ordinary bandits of no political significance.

Officials here contend that popular political thinking in Poland is against the government, that the Peasant Party could carry a free election without difficulty and that all the anti-government elements try to attach themselves to the Peasant movement.

Thus, they say, Mikolajczyk may find himself backed by persons whose support is not solicited and with whom he has no direct connection.

Yet if the government is seriously trying to break him it could use any evidence of such backing for that purpose. Ambassador Lane's job evidently is to find out just what is the Warsaw government's purpose.

The communiqué of the Potsdam Conference, signed by Premier Stalin, President Truman, and Prime Minister Attlee, declared:

> The three powers note that the Polish Provisional Government, in accordance with the decisions of the Crimea Conference, has agreed to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot, in which all democratic and anti-Nazi parties shall have the right to take part and put forward candidates.

Eleven months have passed since Potsdam, and no Polish elections have been held. Instead the Communist-dominated Provisional Government has just staged a national referendum which was conceived in fraud, carried through under terror, and is therefore productive of fraudulent results. Created by alien Polish people, and afraid to submit itself to their judgment, the Provisional Government has sought to gain strength by appealing to both national and individual greed sharpened by the national and individual losses of the war.

In this referendum the government asked approval of the extension of Poland's western frontier to include all the German territory placed at Potsdam under Polish administration, though international frontiers obviously cannot be fixed by national plebiscites. It asked approval of the nationalization of industry and the partition of larger farms into subsistence lots which, as in the early stages of the Russian revolution, promises land to landless peasants but is merely the sure preliminary to ultimate collectivization. Finally, it asked approval of something which would permit the Communists to maneuver themselves into permanent control of the country—a proposal which the French people voted down for that reason.

Fortunately, the Provisional Government could not evade one part of its Potsdam pledge: it had to admit representatives of the allied press who have told the truth about this referendum. And the truth, concurred in by correspondents most favorably disposed toward leftist regimes, is that while the vote itself took place without excessive violence, nevertheless the referendum itself was a farce and a sham. The electorate had been terrorized by the security police, against whose brutality the American and British Governments protested. The Peasant Party, representing the majority of the Polish people, had been virtually suppressed, many of its leaders arrested, and its campaign inhibited by strong-arm methods. Finally, the government's own henchmen took charge of most polling places.

The Government could not lose. Yet in the larger sense the Government has already lost, irrespective of the vote, for it has lost in the confidence of the Polish people and of the outside world.

This is all part of the general picture of a country in a state of simmering revolt. Opposition to the hand-picked, Communist-controlled regime is so fierce that despite the suppression of its newspapers and the arrests and disqualification of many of its candidates, the Peasant Party polled 40 percent of the vote in the recent election. The strongest indictment of the repressive and unpopular character of the Government is that so much of the opposition has been forced to go underground. Today the Poles are caught in the dilemma of all countries on the Soviet border. If they elect the kind of government which reliable reports indicate they want, the present four-party front, backed by Moscow, will resist its assumption of power. And if there is resistance from the other side, Russia will certainly intervene and the people will lose the nominal independence they now possess.

The choice is to be or not to be—to settle for a modicum of self-rule or to risk subjugation—and encouraging words from the western powers cannot change the situation. It becomes more and more apparent, indeed, that the only hope of solution for every problem of this kind lies in perseverance against every set-back in building up the international structure which will render "cordons sanitaires" absurd and guarantee security and freedom to nations in every neighborhood of the world.

Despite the referendum returns counted by and announced by the governmental majority composed of four Leftist parties, Stanislaw Mikolajczyk's Peasant Party leaders are still confident that they would get an overwhelming majority in the parliamentary elections this fall if the vote should be free and unfettered and the counting honest.

In any event Poland's course in the next few months is not an easy one and is one that requires the continuing and closest study of all available evidence.

Some persons say there is very little actual Soviet interference in its conduct of Bierut government. That is because the Russians do not have to intervene—they are well satisfied with President Boleslaw Bierut, Premier Edward B. Osubka-Morawski, Vice Premier Wladyslaw Gomutka, Marshal Michal Rola-Zymerski and Industry Minister Hilary Minc, who are loyal followers of the Moscow line.

On Mr. Mikolajczyk's part, he asserts he is not unfriendly to the Soviet Union and is willing to cooperate with it as well as Britain and the United States for the future peace and prosperity of Poland, Europe, and the whole world.

In government quarters there is increasing criticism of the United States and British policy favoring Mr. Mikolajczyk.

Sources close to Stanislaw Mikolajczyk, Agriculture Minister and leader of the opposition, asserted today that he might ask Russia, the United States, and Britain to supervise the Polish parliamentary elections scheduled for November, unless the present electoral laws were basically amended to prevent a repetition of the experience in the referendum which, he said, was a fraud.

As outlined, Mr. Mikolajczyk's first strategy will be a vigorous campaign to amend the present law so as to insure that his party will have representation at each voting and counting place—which it did not have in the referendum—so that candidates and election commissioners will receive immunity from the security police, and that internal censorship of the Polish press and the ban on political meetings be relaxed so as to insure that the Polish Peasant Party program shall be put before the populace on an equal opportunity with the left-wing bloc that controls the present government.

If better election laws are denied and international supervision is refused, it is not unlikely that Mikolajczyk and his party will refuse to put up candidates for parliament and will boycott the election itself.

As Mr. Mikolajczyk sees it, this is a step to be taken only as a last alternative because the Polish people must not lose faith in orderly democratic balloting as a way to settle a political quarrel. If they do, he fears civil war.

These few weeks must decide whether Poland is to be a genuine democracy, with the people receiving the free right to choose their own leaders, or whether it will continue to be ruled by one party.

The proposal for Anglo-Soviet-American election supervision is justified on the grounds that they were the three parties to the Yalta and Potsdam agreements, in which free and unfettered elections were promised, and they all have equal responsibility with the present interim, nonelected Polish Government to insure to the Polish people that such an undertaking will be carried out.

Mr. Speaker, all during this session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which will go down into history known as the Victory Congress, I have been the spokesman for the brave people of the true Poland and of their millions of friends in the United States, in whose veins flows the proud blood of Polish ancestry. I felt that coming from one who is not of Polish blood, these pleas and these arguments of mine would receive closer and more widespread attention since they could not be branded as prejudice. I speak only from the bottom of my heart, because of my deep concern in behalf of downtrodden peoples and minority groups everywhere. But, Mr. Speaker, I was born and raised in the hard-coal fields of Pennsylvania, in the County of Luzerne, with men and women of Polish ancestry as my friends, schoolmates, and neighbors since childhood. I know how deep in their hearts is the deep and abiding love and affection for the land of their ancestors, which is exceeded only by their great patriotism as 100-percent American citizens.

A great injustice has been done to Poland. A great injustice has been done to these Americans of Polish ancestry. I know how they think and I know how they feel. They are sad and disillusioned and becoming bitter. I do not dwell upon the horrors that occurred in Poland—words cannot describe the full extent of those tragic events. But as an American citizen and as a Member of this honorable body, I feel that this is the proper forum to use, for this is the sounding board of the last great democratic and free assemblage on earth. Where, if not here, can I plead the cause of Poland and the cause of the "four freedoms" and the rights of man.

Mr. Speaker, may I paraphrase the words eloquently spoken in behalf of another much abused people and let me say—if I were a sculptor I would chisel from the marble my ideal of a hero. I would make it a Pole sacrificing his life and his liberty upon the altar of his homeland. If I were a poet I would melt the world to tears with the pathos of my song; I would wring the heart of humanity with my sad and mournful tale. But if I were a painter, ah, Mr. Speaker, I would make the canvas eloquent with the deeds of as brave a race as ever lived, whose proud spirit no power can ever conquer; and whose loyalty and devotion to the hopes and dreams of a free and independent government no tyrant can ever crush; and I would call that picture "Poland."

R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, and I request that an explanatory statement of the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance, and the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The explanatory statement is as follows:

EXPLANATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO H. R. 7037

TITLE VI. INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF INSURANCE BENEFITS

The amendment adding a new title VI to the bill increases the primary Federal old-age and survivors' insurance benefits under title II of the Social Security Act by an average of about $7 or $8 per month.

At the present time these insurance benefits average about $24 a month for an aged retired worker, $38 for a retired worker and wife, $20 for a widow, and $13 for a child.

The basis for computing these amounts was established in the law in 1939. Although the cost of living has incresed at least 40 to 50 percent since then, the insurance benefits have not been increased.

The amendment increases the average primary benefit of $24 a month by about $8, or one-third. The other benefits are increased proportionately.

Under the present law, the primary benefit is calculated by taking 40 percent of a person's average monthly wage up to $50 per month and 10 percent of the next $200 of average monthly wage. The amendment increases the benefit by allowing the full 40 percent on the first $75 instead of only $50. All other provisions in the law remain as they are now.

This amendment has been recommended by the Social Security Administration. Since the wages upon which contributions are paid under the insurance system have increased since 1939, there would be no relative increase in cost by this amendment based upon the 1939 actuarial estimates.

Under title V of the bill, provision is made for increasing the maximum payment for assistance to the aged, upon which Federal funds are available, from $40 to $50 a month. In this connection it should be noted that assistance payments to the aged have increased over 60 percent since 1939 while the insurance payments have not been increased.

It would seem only just to take account of these facts and increase the insurance benefits by the modest amount provided in the amendment.

TITLE VII. TOTAL DISABILITY INSURANCE BENEFITS

Title VII provides insurance benefits for total permanent disability under title II of the Social Security Act. The payment of such benefits would remove an anomaly in the existing old-age and survivors' insurance program. Benefits are now paid when the family's income is discontinued owing to the breadwinner's death or retirement after age 65, but not when the loss of wages is due to permanent total disability. Disability insurance would also remove a handicap under which the disabled worker is now placed under the present system. Prolonged disability impairs or destroys the rights he has accumulated under old-age and survivors' insurance, so that when he attains age 65 or dies his insurance benefits will be reduced or may not even be payable. With disability insurance this could not occur. His old-age and survivors' benefits could not lapse or diminish during his disability.

PRESENT LACK OF DISABILITY PROTECTION

Insurance against the loss of wages when the individual is incapacitated for work is the most common form of social insurance. At this time the United States is the only nation which insures workers against old age but not against permanent disability.

Disability insurance has long been available in this country through fraternal organizations and labor unions, commercial insurance carriers and pension plans instituted by employers for their employees. A very small proportion of workers, however, are covered by these schemes. Public permanent disability programs are at present limited to Federal and certain State and municipal employees and to work-connected accidents and injuries. For most wage earners in the United States, disability insurance exists only for work-connected disabilities under State and Federal workmen's compensation laws. Permanent disabilities of work-connected origin constitute not more than 5 percent of all permanent disabilities.

THE EXTENT OF PERMANENT TOTAL DISABILITY

On any day approximately 1,500,000 persons between the ages of 16 and 64 who would normally be in the labor force have been disabled 6 months or longer. Were it not for their long-continued disability, they would presumably be employed or seeking work. There is ample evidence that permanent total disability occurs more frequently and is more severe among families of very low incomes than among those with higher incomes. The burden of invalidity falls most heavily on those least able to bear it.

THE ECONOMIC BURDEN OF EXTENDED DISABILITY

To the worker the cost of extended disability is likely to be fourfold—the cessation of income, the cost of medical care and related items, the reduction or complete loss of his old-age and survivors' insurance protection, and, in many instances the constant services of an attendant, usually the wife or some other member of the family. Therefore, the threat to income security resulting from permanent disability is more catastrophic than that from old age or even premature death of the breadwinner. Disability, unlike old age, is unpredictable. It comes often prior to the termination of the productive years of life, even long before the individual has had a chance to make any substantial savings. Its victims are, by and large, individuals in the prime of life, often with family responsibilities, including young children. Its economic consequences, especially at present when there is no benefit protection, are much more burdensome than even death. At present, when the insured worker dies, the family with young children can look forward to some aid from social insurance, but in case of disability there is no such aid, yet the family has the added burden of caring for the disabled breadwinner, meeting his medical costs, and frequently providing constant attendance to the disabled.

DESIRABILITY OF THE INSURANCE METHOD FOR DISABILITY

The insurance method is a desirable one for dealing with the risk of permanent disability. The cost of such disability falls with overwhelming effect on most families who are so unfortunate as to have the wage earner incapacitated for work. The unpredictability of the incidence of permanent disability and sometimes the suddenness of its onset make it an emergency for which individual foresight and saving are inadequate except through insurance. Only by this means can extended disability become a budgetable expense for the vast majority of wage earners. The risks of old age and death have been made a budgetable expense for these workers through the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance program, whereby they, with the help of their employers, can provide an income for themselves and their dependents after they have retired from gainful work, and for their survivors in the event of their death. The social insurance method is as applicable to the risk of disability as to that of old age or of death. Cash benefits paid in the event of total, permanent disability would enable the disabled wage earner and his family to live on income from his insurance and avoid resort to relief and public assistance. Thus, by enacting disability insurance the Congress would substitute dignified insurance benefits for relief based on a means test.

PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR PERMANENT DISABILITY INSURANCE

The need for partial wage replacement when the breadwinner is incapacitated and the reasonableness of social insurance as a method of dealing with the risk of permanent disability has been generally recognized. The Social Security Administration has long recommended such a program. The Advisory Council on Social Security, appointed by Congress in 1938, agreed unanimously on the social desirability of insurance protection against permanent disability.

The major labor groups—American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations—have continuously urged the establishment of a program giving social insurance protection to permanently disabled wage earners.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, through a membership referendum of 1944, went on record in favor of a public system of cash insurance benefits for permanently disabled workers. Approval of a social-insurance program for workers forced to retire from work prematurely owing to total and permanent disability was expressed in 1945 by the Social Security Committee of the American Life Convention, the Life Insurance Association of America, and the National Association of Life Underwriters.

The American Medical Association, through its House of Delegates, in 1938 expressed unreserved endorsement of the principle of cash compensation for loss of earnings owing to disability. This was reaffirmed in recent years.

Representatives of agriculture, business, and labor, under the auspices of the National Planning Association, stated in 1944 that income losses attributable to disability should be provided against by social insurance. Many other religious, civic, fraternal, professional, and other organizations, such as the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches; National Conference of Catholic Churches; National Council of Jewish Women in Washington, D. C.; National Farm Labor Union; National Farmers' Union; National Veterans' Committee; American Public Welfare Association; Fraternal Order of Eagles; National Federation of Settlements; and New York Academy of Medicine have endorsed a Federal insurance program against permanent disability. Experience under old-age and survivors' insurance has revealed to workers a serious gap in their protection left by lack of disability benefits, and an illogical distinction between provision for two similar economic risks of their employees—retirement owing to age and retirement owing to disablement.

DISABILITY PROVISIONS OF TITLE VII

Insurance protection against permanent total disability is provided in title VII by adding a new section at the end of title II of the Social Security Act. Disability insurance is thereby linked with old-age and survivors' insurance and fitted into the framework of that system. A primary insurance benefit would be payable to the insured wage earner who is determined to be incapable of work by reason of disability, and who has been disabled for at least 6 months. The amount of the primary benefit payable for disability will be calculated by the identical formula which applies in calculating the primary benefit payable for retirement, i. e., in relation to the average monthly wage of the insured person and his length of time under the insurance system. The individual's wife and child, and, in the event of his death, his survivors, would also receive benefits based on the primary insurance benefit. To be eligible the claimant must have both fully insured status, which assures his having had substantial attachment to covered employment, and currently insured status, which assures recent attachment. The disability benefit will terminate when the beneficiary recovers or when he dies. Thus, insurance protection will be available and benefits will be payable partially to replace the wage income which is discontinued owing to disability as well as owing to death or old age.

The bill, furthermore, provides for the continuation of old-age and survivors' insurance protection for the disabled person. The period of his disability is excluded in determining his average monthly wage and his insured status. Thus the absence of wage credits during the period of disability will not impair the rights of his survivors, should he die, nor his own rights to old-age benefits, should he recover and later reach retirement age.

The disability benefits provided in title VII are estimated to cost an average of about one-half of 1 percent of pay rolls to 1 percent of pay rolls over the long run of the insurance system. The actual disbursements in the early years would be less while they would be somewhat more 20 to 30 years from now.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7037) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution providing for an investigation to be made by the Federal Trade Commission of the textile industry, and I request that following the resolution a statement I have prepared be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement presented by the Senator from Connecticut will be printed in the RECORD following the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 311) was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is hereby directed to inquire into and report to the Senate, by filing with the Secretary thereof, within each 30 days after the passage of this resolution and finally on the completion of the investigation (such inquiry before the Commission to be open to the public and due notice of the time and place of all hearings to be given by the Commission, and the stenographic report of the evidence taken by the Commission to accompany the partial and final reports) upon (1) the extent to which manufacturers of textiles and persons controlling or under common control with such manufacturers have, by the purchase of securities, physical assets or any other means, acquired control, direct or indirect, of facilities for the manufacture of clothing and other textile end products for sale in interstate commerce; (2) the extent to which manufacturers of clothing and other textile end products for sale in interstate commerce and persons controlling or under common control with such manufacturers have, by the purchase of securities, physical assets or any other means, acquired control, direct or indirect, of facilities for the manufacture of textiles; (3) whether the integration under common control, direct or indirect, of facilities for the manufacture of textiles and facilities for the manufacture of clothing and other textile end products adversely affects the ability of nonintegrated manufacturers of clothing and other textile end products for sale in interstate commerce to secure adequate supplies of textiles for such manufacture for their own account; (4) the effect, if any, of such integration on the volume of production of clothing and other textile end products for sale in interstate commerce and the number of persons and man-hours employed in such manufacture; (5) any regional industrial dislocations caused, directly or indirectly, by such integration; and (6) the value or detriment to the public of such integration under common control, direct or indirect, of facilities for the manufacture of textiles and facilities or the manufacture of clothing and other textile end products for sale in interstate commerce, with the extent of such integration, and particularly what legislation, if any, should be enacted by the Congress to correct any evils that may result from such integration.

The Commission is hereby further directed to report particularly whether the integration heretofore referred to in this resolution tends to create a monopoly or to restrain trade or constitutes a violation of the Federal antitrust laws.

The statement presented by Mr. MCMAHON is as follows:

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, the textile and apparel industries are of the greatest importance to the economy of the United States and the welfare of its people. Employing millions of people in mills and factories in many parts of the Nation, these industries contribute substantially to the support, directly and indirectly, of huge segments of our population, both in rural and urban areas and in all parts of the country. The welfare, prosperity, and effectiveness of the textile and apparel industries are the direct concern of cotton growers, sheep raisers, and lumber growers, to millers of cotton, woolen goods, and rayon, the chemical and dye industries, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers of under and outer clothing, and the countless millions who earn their livelihoods in such pursuits.

The well-being of our economy, both agricultural and industrial, is thus intimately bound in with the prosperity of these industries. For this reason, we must be prepared to gage the consequences of any major changes in their organization and in the relationships of their component parts.

Traditionally, cotton mills wove or knit their fabric from yarn made by spinners, placed it with converters, who had it processed by bleachers and dyers and sold it to independent manufacturers of end-products and dealers in yard goods. Rayon, although usually spun in the same mill which later wove or knit it, was normally made available to independent manufacturers and dealers in yard goods through similar means. Today, however, there is a strong tendency toward the formation of what are called vertical organizations. These enterprises buy out existing facilities for production and distribution for the purpose of combining in one organization the spinning of the yarn, the weaving and knitting of the fabric, and, finally, the manufacture and distribution of the end-products themselves. This development is having the effect of limiting the sources of supply and the supply of goods available to independent manufacturers.

Thus, an apparel manufacturer who for 20 or 30 years has been purchasing the fabric of a particular mill, suddenly finds that his source of supply has vanished, unless he is prepared to manufacture his product under contract for the mill. This means that unless he can secure another source of supply—almost an impossibility particularly in these days—he must either go out of business and abandon his employees, or become a mere contractor, supplying only distributors selected by the mill, and abandoning the customers whose good will and trade he has secured by years of effort. If this tendency continues, the independent manufacturers, as such, will be faced with extinction. Thus, the apparel industry, which traditionally has been comprised of small businesses, may soon be added to the growing list of industries dominated by three or four large concerns, which can swallow up at will any threatening competitor.

One of these integrated organizations has already bought control of 12 southern mills and 13 mills in New England; it is integrated from raw yarn to the finished product; it covers the field of house furnishings and clothing, employs its own designers, and chooses its own retail outlets. At one end, it has eliminated 24 competing purchasers of agricultural raw material; at the other end it has eliminated an equal number of sources of supply for independent manufacturers.

It may be that integration in the textile field has its virtues. At the moment, however, they are not apparent. It is the object of the resolution I offer, to instruct the Federal Trade Commission to conduct a thoroughgoing investigation of this trend, its consequences and legality, and to recommend legislation, if any be deemed necessary, to correct any evils that may result from such integration.

PROPOSED MERGER OF THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. LANGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the suggestion for a few moments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LANGER. Very well, I withhold it.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I came to the Senate with the intention of taking no active part in any business connected with my former profession. At the beginning it was proposed that I might be assigned to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The distinguished chairman of that committee expressed a cordial invitation, but I advised against that assignment. Now, near the close of my incumbency, I am impelled to discuss the affairs of the Navy by speaking against the merger of the two services.

I use the word "merger" not as meaning anything invidious, but because there is too much uncertainty about the other words, "unity" and "unification." While cooperation and collaboration by the Army and Navy are of course essential, and the word "unity" is descriptive, the controversy of the past few months has been so disruptive of unity of spirit that its derivatives are not descriptive.

I shall not take much of the Senate's time on the points and arguments about which so much has been said and written concerning the Army and Navy merger. My endeavor is to set forth other and, I hope, new considerations, particularly on various intangibles which are more abstract than concrete; features on which not enough thought has been given, and which, to my mind, are fully as important as anything to be gained by studying organization blueprints and discussing advantages and disadvantages which are more theoretical than real.

I first heard of the merger project during the spring of 1942 from an Army officer with whom I had long been associated in work and otherwise. His was one of the best minds I have ever known, and had he not been very seriously handicapped in health, I think he would have been a prominent figure in World War II. That officer told me in April or May 1942, that a merger project was brewing, and gave me the reasons, roughly, as follows:

He said that, during the war, the Army Air Corps would separate more and more from the rest of the Army and work toward its cherished idea of a fully separate air force, against which movement the Army ground forces would make little or no effort. He thought that such separation would not occur within the Navy, which would stay closely integrated in all its elements. Moreover, that the Marine Corps, being the specialists in amphibious war, would be very successful and would come into greater prominence before the Nation than ever before. Consequently, the trend would be such that, after we won the war, the Navy would have a powerful force, complete in all elements—sea and air—and with a very efficient and very mobile body of troops. As thus constituted, the Navy alone would be entirely ready for quick action anywhere outside our continental limits, for policing or any other activity which did not require ground forces on a large scale.

Facing that probable development, the Army ground forces would foresee that after the war there was great danger that their activities would be confined to this continent, and that the prospect for them was not much better than as a rather glorified training service. Consequently my Army friend thought that in order to retain their traditional part in the national picture, the ground army would join up with the Air Corps in some sort of a merger project, under which it would have a better chance of retaining its power and prominence. Whether his reasoning was correct or not, my friend back in the spring of 1942, was a true prophet as regards events.

I suspect, Mr. President, that a certain amount of conversations along that line was going on at that very time, but the Navy was not apprised of it until some time had elapsed. We now see that all components of the Army found time during the war to discuss and evolve the merger project. Even when they learned of it, the Navy seems not to have taken the project very seriously, at least not to the extent of taking time out from the war to give it much consideration. The energy of the Navy remained engaged in preparing for and fighting through the greatest achievement on the sea in the entire history of the world; that was fighting the way to the enemy's heartland, at long distances across the oceans. Perhaps the Navy should have given adequate time and thought to the merger project during the war, but the fact is that they did not. For instance, Admirals Nimitz and Halsey, while very busy out in the middle of the Pacific, were called upon to advise concerning the merger project. Each took a stand which he, when he had time for study, found to be incorrect, and each of them reversed his advice. That was most unfortunate. Both of those admirals have been criticized for shifting their positions, but anyone who realizes the conditions and circumstances under which their first advice was given should understand it.

That is an illustration of the state of mind of the entire Navy during the war years. They were extremely busy in doing something which had never been done before, and all their thought and effort went into the work at hand. Consequently, the Navy did not obtain a general realization of what was happening until the merger had acquired great momentum.

Now, Mr. President, the men in the Army and in the Navy, in all components in both services, are originally just the same kind of material. They come from all over the country, from all elements of our population, and in the beginning they average exactly alike. After spending some years in the respective armed services, those men are found to have developed rather differently and that is largely because of the different circumstances of work and of living. The Army lives in contact with the people during peace. The Navy does not. Naval personnel are outside the country much of the time; and, even when on our coasts, they are at sea on ships and are denied the contacts with the people which are normal for everyone else. Despite that detachment, their loyalty to their country and their observance of the traditional words, "service before self," are not excelled by any other body of this Nation.

From the circumstances of their lives, I think naval personnel tend to view the affairs of their own Nation somewhat more objectively than they would otherwise do. However that may be, the processes of thought and the outlook upon various questions do become different, because of their restricted association with their fellow countrymen, and the effect becomes manifest in various ways. One difference which has resulted is that development under which the Navy has become known as the silent service. They are just that, and Navy personnel has been so for generations. Navy men do not talk very much. Consequently, they cannot talk well and they are not good at stating the case. Strangely enough, there is a tendency among Navy men toward some suspicion of the glib talker; and, though they eventually come to appreciate the value of the ability for ready expression, their effort to acquire it is much too sparse.

The result is that the Navy's case often suffers because it is not well stated. That is a rather normal situation. Since, as I have said, the Navy was quite inarticulate about the merger while the movement was acquiring so much momentum, there is a decided difference in the way the respective viewpoints have been set forth to the country. I think it is common knowledge that, as far as so-called publicity is concerned, the Navy is comparatively inept. In fact, it is years behind in the development of what has become so considerable and important a feature in this Nation's activities.

On the other hand, the Army, which does live in contact with the people, has developed quite differently in those respects. The Army seems to have its fair proportion of those well able to state the case and many of them are very good speakers indeed. Similarly, the Army has always been laps ahead of the Navy in its flair for publicity, and that portion of the Army which became the Army Air Corps certainly does stand out above the rest of the Army in its advertising ability.

In setting forth the merger project before the country, the men of the Army Air Corps have found time to be very active, and they have often gone rather far in publicity—so far that, to my own mind, they have become decidedly out of order. I shall take some time on that angle of the situation.

A few weeks ago the distinguished junior Senator from Wyoming told the Senate of one instance of Army Air Corps publicity, and he thought it propaganda, which emanated from a post in southern California. That instance was in a lower echelon, and it is an example and cross section of what has been going on generally in promoting the merger idea, and particularly the idea of the so-called autonomy of the Army Air Corps, which really means the separate Air Force.

Mr. President, at a somewhat higher level I will, in illustration, mention the activities of one Major de Seversky. He is a Russian, a very brave man, and was a splendid flyer during World War I, in which he was seriously wounded. Since coming to this country, he has engaged in various commercial activities, mostly in connection with aircraft, but with little success. He turned into a writer and publicist and for years, has been prominent in publicity and promotion, as we all know.

Last spring Major de Seversky published an article in the Reader's Digest comparing the damage which he, himself, had observed at Hiroshima and Nagasaki caused by the atomic bombs, as against the accomplishments in mass destruction by Army Air Corps planes using ordinary high explosives. De Seversky also testified before the Senate Special Committee on Atomic Energy and repeated the extravagant statements of his article, a salient one of which was that practically the same damage caused by either of the atomic bombs would have been matched by one 10-ton block buster loaded with ordinary explosives. He also went into some detail, such as, for instance, saying that the Mitsubishi torpedo plant at Nagasaki had, previous to the explosion of the atomic bomb over Nagasaki, been very seriously damaged by ordinary air attack of Army bombers. The Mitsubishi works were ruined all right, but the detailed investigation by proper authorities disclosed that the Army's bombing attacks had resulted in only three small bomb hits into the torpedo factory. In consequence, it was only lightly damaged thereby, and suffered no interruption in production. The really authoritative testimony before the Senate committee presided over by my colleague, the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON], disproved all statements made by Major de Seversky in his Reader's Digest article and in his testimony.

Mr. President, Major de Seversky stated that he was at Hiroshima and Nagasaki as an official representative of the Secretary of War, sent out there to examine and make an official report on the damages in the capacity of an expert. He presented no evidence to show that he was an expert in the effects of high explosives and, in fact, he is without experience in that field. His qualifications as an expert are those of a high-pressure propagandist, and that alone. However, it is to be noted that he went to Japan and back in an official capacity, according to his own statements, and naturally at Government expense.

I submit, Mr. President, that such action is very much out of line with proper ethics and the entire incident is such that anyone who fostered and furthered Major de Seversky's mission to Japan has something to explain. We have heard of propaganda in other fields for which the Federal Treasury has footed the bills and, although Major de Seversky's exploits probably did not cost much, such a procedure is not in order. The objective is very clear. The effects of the atomic bomb were clouding the destruction caused by ordinary bombing and whoever was behind Major de Seversky was interested in changing that impression no matter what distortion of fact might result. Major de Seversky's widely circulated argument was that the Army Air Corps won the war before the atomic bomb was used.

Mr. President, this part of my subject is distasteful to me but I must mention the activities of the Air Power League. During the war years that organization was building up by representing itself as nonpartisan and interested solely in promoting the interest of all kinds and phases of American aviation. Its original name was the Air Force League, but it was changed to the Air Power League to prevent any implication that it was partisan to the Army Air Corps. The Air Power League received naval endorsement, many naval aviators joined it, and it embarked on a drive for members and funds, and it seemed to have accumulated an ample supply of both, particularly of funds.

In its drive for funds, the Air Power League informed prospective contributors that funds contributed to it would be tax-exempt and, in proof thereof, used a letter from the Treasury Department, of which I have a copy. That letter, which is an official letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, states:

> It has been stated in your behalf, (in the Air Power League's behalf), that you will not engage in propaganda or otherwise attempt to influence legislation. It is the opinion of this office, based on the information furnished and outlined above, that if you are operated strictly in accordance with your stated purposes, you will be exempt from Federal income tax. Contributions made to you will be deductible by the donors in arriving at their taxable net income.

Some months after the date of the Treasury Department's letter, from which I have quoted a few sentences, the executive committee of the Air Power League adopted the following resolutions:

> Resolved, That the Air Power League unqualifiedly endorse the establishment of a Department of National Defense with coequal status for Army, Navy, and Air Force.
> It was directed that telegraphic approval of this resolution be requested of the directors and that any statement of the League's position be announced after consultation with the Army Air Forces.
> On motion duly made and seconded, the executive vice president was directed to serve on any committee of strategy that General Spaatz might designate.
> On motion duly made and seconded, it was Resolved, That up to $50,000 would be spent in support of the campaign for a Department of National Defense.

I shall not quote further from the resolutions. That was the beginning. As far as I know, not more than $50,000 has been appropriated to this purpose, but I doubt that that is the case.

The Air Power League is in the hands of gentlemen who have been in or closely connected with the Army Air Corps. In the beginning, one naval aviator served as a vice president for a short time, and resigned when the executive vice president said that once the League finished its program of widespread organization over the country, it would have control of one of the most powerful and virile political organizations in the country. After the naval contingents learned that the Air Power League was far from a nonpartisan organization, they drew out of it. The definitive action in that withdrawal was semiofficial, because on the 10th of December last the leader of the naval aviators, who had been the Assistant Secretary for Air and had just become the Under Secretary of the Navy, wrote a letter formally drawing out of the League. His letter asked for the same publicity that had been given to the Navy's original endorsement which was spread widely over the country. That request, I find upon inquiry, has never been complied with.

Mr. President, it is going very far when an organization, controlled by men who held positions of honor, obtains money and memberships under false representations. The propaganda activities, which seem to head up in this Air Power League, have been extensive and, to great extent, those activities have been, to my mind, just as misrepresentative of facts as was the misrepresentation in the financial field.

I hold in hand a photostat of a clip sheet which was sent in by a somewhat irate editor who does not like to receive so many propagandizing hand-outs. The sheet is called the Air Power News and, as was published some months ago, the employed publishing agency is known as the Hal Leyshan Associates—a high-pressure advertising firm of New York City. The clip sheet indicates that it is widely circulated and this number boasts that the Air Power League is supplying material to 2,000 women's clubs. Another boast concerns financing scholarships for education along air promotion lines. I have made mention of the finances of the League—this clip sheet clearly indicates what the money which was collected is going into.

The only name for these representations which go all over the country is propaganda—it is propaganda to promote legislation for the merger and for separating the Army Air Corps in any case. It is clever propaganda. It uses pictures. One picture shows the new executive vice president of the Air Power League. It shows him in civilian clothes, calls him a veteran and intends to convey that he is in civil life. Mr. President, the facts are that he is on the Regular Army list and pay roll as a field officer of the Army Air Corps attached to General Eaker's office, and carried as on duty with the Air Power League. I wonder if the officer is drawing flying pay for his propagandizing activities.

I greatly dislike to handle dirty linen, and it is far from pleasant to bring out these illustrations. I do it because it is a menacing situation when extreme misrepresentation is spread over this land concerning anything so vital as the common defense. President Truman has reproved the Navy for certain publicity which some of its individuals gave out. I hold that it was entirely right that the President should do so if he became convinced that the Navy was out of order. I have not heard that the President has taken any action whatever about the Army Air Corps' propagandizing activities. There appears to be ample ground for such action.

All of these factors go back many years, when, between wars, there was so much agitation for a separate Air Department per se. During much of the period between wars a considerable number of Navy aviators believed in the separated air force. Probably more than a majority were for it. But such is not now the case, Mr. President, for the Navy's aviators want none of it and are just as much opposed to the merger project as is any other part of the Navy. I mentioned intangibles, Mr. President. An important one is the resentment which the clever but false propaganda has caused in the Navy. We all will grant that a unification which does not unify is not going to improve the Nation's security. This propaganda does not unify.

I cannot see that the Navy has been resistive to change and improvement in economy, cooperation, and collaboration. There is a considerable area of agreement and, without new legislation, agencies have been set up—or existent ones improved—to that very end. After Senate bill 2044 was placed on the calendar, further negotiations occurred between the Secretaries of War and Navy, during which the areas of agreement were further defined. The President took on himself the settlement of the remaining differences, then addressed a letter to the committees of the Senate and House, and the Senate Committee on Military Affairs resumed work. In that work, and, indeed, in the President's very presentation of the problem, I venture to submit that there is an initial defect: There is no defining of the functions with which the various arms are charged, or should be charged. There is no clear and specific defining of fields of action. Many things are nebulous, and the future of the Navy is most unclear.

For instance, as the merger project now stands, the Marine Corps is neither abolished nor absorbed, but there is no assurance that the Navy will continue to have the closely integrated and highly efficient amphibious corps which has so well proven its value in every war we have ever had. In fact, all indications are that future development would be exactly the reverse. The Navy is particularly disquieted and worried by the proposed limitation against its possession and control of certain types of aircraft. That would be a first step toward squeezing the Navy into the British mold and breaking up the sea-air team which, with small bodies of splendid troops, performed so splendidly.

Now, the Navy appears not to have opposed setting up the Army Air Corps as a separate force. Since the Air Corps has always been a part of the Army, the Navy feels that it should leave that question to the Army. And so that so-called autonomy has been part of the project all along. However, Mr. President, in behind all the merger arguments along specific lines lies the Navy's concern that under any of the arrangements proposed the Navy will be a numerical minority. The Army and the Army Air Force, spread over the country, will always be in a stronger political position than will the Navy. Despite any probable good will of the Army and an Air Force split off from the Army, the political position of those services will be used toward the disadvantage of the Navy. That disadvantage would be coupled with the other of being the numerical minority of 1 to 2. Is there any wonder that, in that situation and in the climate which has existed, the Navy fears for its future under an organization in which it would no longer have free and direct access to the President and to the Congress?

Now, Mr. President, wholly apart from any Navy considerations, I wish to put forward some views which concern that old question of simple separation of Army's air components from the rest of the Army. That separation was the subject of much inquiry, investigation, and report between the two wars. Most of the reports—and certainly the most authoritative ones—were against the separation. I submit that the events and developments of the art of war since 1940 strongly tend to prove rather than to disprove the correctness of the prewar decisions.

It is absolutely certain—to my mind at least—that the Navy's experiences are the strongest possible proof that, in amphibious war and the projection of our power over the sea areas of this world, air components must be most closely integrated with the rest. There is success when the various components live and work in contiguity, when they know each other's minds and appreciate each other's part in the common tasks.

The situation on land should be closely parallel, in the case of those ground and air components which likewise must work closely together. That necessity, that essential, will not be met if there is a separation of ground and air personnel into separate watertight compartments. The men will not know each other, there will be a trend toward ignorance of each other's qualities and difficulties, a lack of appreciation of each other's functions, and a drift toward antagonism and jealousy. It is being admitted that special attention and precaution against that trend must be taken so far as the tactical air forces are concerned—those air groups which are to work with the ground army, though belonging to the separated Air Force. Then, Mr. President, why separate them? Why organize into a separation and create difficulties in cooperation, cohesion, and nearly everything else?

The argument for the separate air force—autonomy for the air—which constitutes much of the motivation for the entire merger project, is mostly based on the so-named strategic part of the Army Air Corps. That means the large planes of heavy cargo capacity and with long range. The planes and their personnel have amply demonstrated their high quality. They can cover great distances at high speed. They can observe things on the land or on the sea from some distance—at as low an altitude as circumstances permit—but they definitely cannot examine anything on the land or sea. Where the planes of the strategic air force see something wrong on the surface, or find something suspicious, the only possible next step open to them is to drop bombs. That is the built-in limitation of the strategic air force. It is a war weapon, and it is nothing else. Mr. President, as a part of the international negotiations looking to outlawry of atomic bombs, we ourselves have included other weapons of mass destruction. Well, strategic bombing is mass destruction, the results in Germany and Japan certainly show that very clearly. So in the existing situation, while the international negotiations are in progress, the necessities of the strategic air force provide a poor argument for setting up an air force separated from the rest of the Army. All logical reasoning points to close integration, just as in the Navy, where sea and air team together so well. Any other course means, at least to me, taking grave chances with the power of our forces on the land. Furthermore, if the Navy's position is not menaced by that prospective 1-to-2 minority status, a considerable part of its present concern and objections to merger should die out. So, from all aspects, Army and Navy, I think the separate Army Air Force is the least defensible feature of the merger project.

The idea was originally British, Mr. President, and the visit of the RAF Lancasters brings it to mind. It has been stated that in the 30-day tour of our country the Lancasters are on "operation good will." I thought that we had well demonstrated our good will toward the British. We certainly do not know of any lack of British good will toward us. If one asked what is the real, possibly the hidden, purpose of the visit of the Lancasters, some interesting speculations come to mind. I will not speculate, but one thing is certain—the 30-day tour is not in the interest of the Navy's aviation.

The Lancasters are good planes, and very charming gentlemen will be found in the crews. They will make fine impressions, and a good show will be put on over our country. Many civilians will get rides. Our Army Air Corps planes will participate, will compare splendidly, and will add much to the show. It will cost something, but no doubt we can stand it. One circumstance is unfortunate; this show comes at a time of shortage in the Army Air Corps, a time when it has insufficient personnel to man the planes of the Transport Command. In consequence, that organization has to give contracts for much of its work, at least its overseas work, to the commercial companies. I understand that $49,000,000 have been set aside to pay for that service. When Army personnel is used, the cost is about one-half.

To get back to the British separated air force idea, I hold in my hand an article by an officer of the British Ground Army who had 6 years' combat experience. The article has been printed and reprinted in reputable British magazines, and it is rather authoritative. It is somewhat technical, and it is too long for inclusion in the RECORD. I shall only say that the article goes very far toward proving that the British Army was not at all satisfied with the history of the cooperation that was obtained from the RAF during World War II. The article makes out a very good case on the necessity for close integration of all planes, except defensive fighters and strategic bombers, with the ground army. The writer states that the American record was much better, and he seems to think that our existent organization is better than is theirs.

I think it is already known that the British Navy was in a bad plight throughout the war because of the failure to build up the same kind of a sea-air team which we had. However, another article I have before me, which is by a British naval officer, is brief; and I ask to have it printed at the end of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. HART. I also ask consent to have an editorial from the New Haven Register printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. HART. The general picture, Mr. President, is that British experiences do not afford good reasons for our copying their separate air force.

In closing, Mr. President, I submit that we made a wrong start in the Congress in our approach to this subject. The idea of unification, or merging, of organizations of certain similarity has a strong appeal to us; it is in our blood. We started with the idea of first effecting that separation of the Army's air component, and then tying three services, thus given coequal status, together at the top. The thought was that all the consequent and extremely variant problems would somehow be shaken down and solved within the rough framework of the proposed law. Starting with those broad premises, exceedingly able Senators of the Committee on Military Affairs have spent many arduous days in framing legislation. As the situation has unfolded, more and more difficulties are seen by those most affected, and the only net result at this moment lies in much damage to the unity of spirit without which any unification will in the end be a failure.

There undoubtedly are defects in the organization of our defenses. A portion of those defects are within, rather than without, the War and Navy Departments themselves. Other defects do lie in the relationships of these two departments with each other and with other departments and organizations of the executive branch of the Government which also have war functions. There is a considerable area of agreement covering improvements which can and undoubtedly must be made to remedy those defects.

I think, Mr. President, that a new start should be made; and at the very outset, it seems to me, the task should be to lay out the functions which are to be met. That means fixing upon the responsibilities and activities to be covered in the various fields of action, and then making decisions on the best agencies for their fulfilment. When the proper overall functions are defined, the field of overlapping interests of the armed services can be adjusted to improve real unity of administrative and strategic effort. Then we shall have begun to formulate the heart of the new legislation. In that way we can avoid such an error, as, for instance, restricting the Navy on the types of airplanes which it may operate. The Navy's weapons of the future will automatically develop to conform to the functions assigned to the Navy.

The Navy will be found in a cooperative attitude, as, in fact, it usually is. If anything, that arm sometimes gives way too far in cooperation. In the first Bikini experiment—and we had a second Bikini experiment yesterday—the atomic bomb was dropped from an Army Air Corps bomber from so high that the overadvertised pinpoint accuracy was bound to be a delusion. It has always been a delusion. The bomb exploded several hundred yards off center, which naturally affected results and the quantity of scientific data obtained. The proper method—the way to insure that the explosion would be right where it was wanted—would have been to suspend the bomb from an anchored kite balloon. That method would have been sure, would have eliminated great difficulties in the timing of the entire operation, and made it simpler and cheaper all around. Those facts are so evident that anyone would ask, Why did not the Navy use a kite balloon? The answer is just as evident, and is that the Army Air Corps insisted on being in the show. It could not be left out and thus miss the chance for publicity. We all remember that much of the mass of publicity was about the Army Air Corps participation, and the flying generals gave out many words. So the Air Corps succeeded. The Navy cooperated and is open to the charge of having overcooperated and thus needlessly imperiling the results of an expensive experiment.

Mr. President, it has been announced that the unification project is to be taken up anew by the next Congress. I shall not have the satisfaction and pleasure of being here, to my very great regret. I hope I am not too presumptuous in offering suggestions for the future. One of those suggestions is that the Senate work on the subject with a joint committee and not one of the standing committees alone. I think the task should begin with that delineation of functions to be fulfilled which has been mentioned. I do not think that we should start with the thesis that the Army Air Corps is to be autonomous, coequal, or anything else which will disintegrate the Army's air from its ground forces. That proposal needs a reexamination, and it should be as thorough as was the work of the Morrow Board of some years ago.

Whatever may be the decisions on these points, I think the case for reducing the armed forces departments from two to one would have to be very amply proven because thus far that has failed wherever it has been tried on a large scale. We all hope that we may, in the years to come, safely reduce our armed forces to very small dimensions. When that time comes it will be much more feasible to combine our forces under one Cabinet officer. Those forces are large now and there are many complexities because of the dimensions alone. There are certain improvements which can be effected under the traditional two-department set-up which, after all, has done pretty well in two big wars.

Lastly, Mr. President, I most earnestly request that the deliberations in this body give due attention to those imponderables of spirit and morals which are so essential to a military service. Those are intangibles which are priceless and, once lost, they may never be regained.

EXHIBIT A

In the British magazine the Naval Review for August 1945, in an article entitled "The Naval Air Fleet," there appear the following paragraphs:

"It was possible to make out a good case for a single air force, with all its advantages in regard to standardization and supply of equipment, with specialized branches for naval cooperation and army support. The case was made. The history of exactly how it was put over has never, so far as the writer knows, been authoritatively presented to the public, particularly the Admiralty side. In the official histories the subject will be found to be very lightly skated over, from which fact anyone is entitled to draw his own conclusions. It must, however, be remembered that the Prime Minister was to all intents and purposes a dictator. The Board of Admiralty appears to have been somewhat supine, but it was probably subjected to very severe pressure. The Board was in any case extremely preoccupied with the antisubmarine war, then just beginning to be brought to a victorious conclusion after months of terrible peril. Sir John Jellicoe had been succeeded as First Sea Lord by Sir Rosslyn Wemyss. Whatever the cause, the Board of Admiralty seems to have been either unable or unwilling to put up any effective opposition to the proposal to rob the Royal Navy of its air force.

"Service with the fleet air arm was usually for 2 years. It was allowed to count as foreign service, even in home waters. Officers lost many of their shore allowances while serving in it, thus assuring its unpopularity among them. Having once served his 2 years, it was unusual for even a long-service officer ever to serve in it again, so that the time and effort spent in training him was lost to the Navy forever. Under this system it was obviously impossible for the Navy ever to train younger officers in naval aviation to fill the higher positions; later this became obvious when the Air Ministry had to nominate officers as wing commanders of carriers who were without previous sea experience. This is in no way to belittle the excellent work done by many wing commanders and squadron leaders, RAF, who served as senior air officers in aircraft carriers, but there was not sufficient continuity, there were divided loyalties, and no provision was being made for the future. Few, if any, air force officers would be prepared to jeopardize their careers by continuous service with the Navy, even if the Air Ministry would allow it.

"The Admiralty, continually prodded by the successive commanders in chief of the principal fleets, made several attempts to have the whole question reviewed, but without success. The Prime Minister eventually ordered that the subject was not again to be broached. Naturally, the situation was not hidden from the ambitious young naval officer, who, having selected the Navy as his career, became doubtful of the wisdom of specializing in a branch whose future appeared shaky."

EXHIBIT B

[From the New Haven Register of June 17, 1946]

DEFINITE MILITARY POLICY

President Truman once more has called upon the Congress to enact legislation providing this Nation with unification of its armed forces. His action follows a so-called compromise on vital Army-Navy differences over previously offered merger proposals. Despite high-sounding words and assurances that the plan as now presented by the President carries the support of the military and civilian chiefs of the Army and Navy, cold analysis forces the conclusion that little or nothing has been changed in the current unification plan.

It carries features as unsound and as objectionable as those which made it clear that neither Congress nor the American people would bless it with their approval. In its present form, Congress can serve the best interests of the Nation and of its security only by rejecting the President's plea for adoption. Mr. Truman's unification offering reveals insular rather than global thinking. It must be placed in the discard for this reason, if for no other, until such time as unification thinking can be placed upon a world-wide security basis, which is the only method which will give this country the well-balanced striking force necessary for national protection in an age of fearsome weapons and swift-striking threat.

It is unfortunate indeed that the President's insistence in this program has brought about a situation in which our Army appears as opposing our Navy. The American people have great pride, and rightfully so, in both branches of the service, and in our Air Forces. They should not, in so vital an issue, be arrayed in even an appearance of being on opposite sides, or of pulling and hauling against each other. Despite Mr. Truman, it should not be permitted to escape public attention that the services have now reached accord on 8 of the 12 unification objectives. Only four remain to be cleared away into acceptable form. Congress, if bullheadedness is removed, should be able to clear these away in sensible and satisfactory fashion and give us the definite military policy for which the President makes such eloquent plea. This should be accomplished by calm and careful consideration, not by attempts to foist a hasty and ill-conceived plan down the national throat.

Mr. Truman calls this compromise. If so, it is one vastly more satisfactory to the Army than to the Navy or to the American idea of actual security. It should be noted by Congress that Mr. Truman consistently has taken his stand on the so-called Army side. As far back as last December 19, he urged Congress to adopt the Army plan, without a second look. He followed this up by an attempt to crack down and silence what he chose to term Navy lobbyists. Fortunately for the Nation, this backfired. Now Mr. Truman, by bowing to realism and accepting retention of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, rather than the Army-proposed single Chief of Staff, has in actuality admitted the weakness of the single civilian secretary proposal.

National security must not be made the subject for "trade." It is a subject for long and deep thought. Congress must provide this thought. The call is to make haste slowly.

SENATOR FROM NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. LANGER, Mr. WILEY, and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BARKLEY. For what purpose?

Mr. LANGER. So that I may present the credentials of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on the death of our late colleague, John Moses, approximately a year and a half ago, Governor Aandahl, of North Dakota, appointed Mr. MILTON R. YOUNG, one of our foremost citizens, to the office of United States Senator. Mr. YOUNG has now been our distinguished colleague for approximately a year and a half. To show the esteem in which he is held by the citizens of my State, I wish to announce that in the last election in North Dakota he carried every county in the State. I now present to the Senate his certificate of election.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The credentials were read by the legislative clerk and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

To the PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE:

This is to certify that on the 25th day of June 1946, MILTON R. YOUNG was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of North Dakota, a Senator from said State, to fill the vacancy in the term ending January 2, 1951, caused by the death of Hon. John Moses.

Witness: His Excellency our Governor, Fred G. Aandahl, and our seal hereto affixed at Bismarck, N. Dak., this 23d day of July in the year of our Lord 1946.

Governor.

[SEAL] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-elect will come forward to the desk, the oath will be administered to him.

Mr. YOUNG, escorted by Mr. LANGER, advanced to the desk, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the unfinished business before the Senate is the railroad retirement bill, which was laid aside temporarily in order to take up the conference report which was disposed of last night. We are anxious to move on with that legislation, and with all the other legislation which we must dispose of before the adjournment of Congress. In order that we may do that, I am compelled to ask the Senate to indulge in the luxury of night sessions until we have been able to clean the calendar up and are in such a position that we may be able to adjourn.

At the moment there is a treaty on the Senate calendar known as the aviation treaty. There have been some controversies with reference to it but the controversies have been resolved, so that the treaty is now in a position to be considered. I think it will take only an hour or so to dispose of it, and it is necessary to do it now in order that the action of the Senate may harmonize with a release from the State Department today with reference to the matter.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I think it will take not more than an hour to dispose of the treaty, upon the conclusion of which we will resume consideration of the railroad retirement bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

PROTOCOL AMENDING THE INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably Executive I, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a protocol signed at London on November 26, 1945, for the United States of America, the Union of South Africa, the Commonwealth of Australia, Canada, Denmark, the Provisional Government of the French Republic, the United Mexican States, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, amending in certain particulars the international agreement for the regulation of whaling signed at London on June 8, 1937, as amended by the protocol signed at London on June 24, 1938, and I submit a report (Ex. Rept. No. 9) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the protocol will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Executive A, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, a convention on international civil aviation, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive A, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, a convention on international civil aviation, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944, which was read as follows:

CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

(Preamble)

Whereas the future development of international civil aviation can greatly help to create and preserve friendship and understanding among the nations and peoples of the world, yet its abuse can become a threat to the general security; and

Whereas it is desirable to avoid friction and to promote that cooperation between nations and peoples upon which the peace of the world depends;

Therefore, the undersigned governments having agreed on certain principles and arrangements in order that international civil aviation may be developed in a safe and orderly manner and that international air transport services may be established on the basis of equality of opportunity and operated soundly and economically.

Have accordingly concluded this convention to that end.

PART I. AIR NAVIGATION

Chapter I. General principles and application of the convention

Article 1. Sovereignty

The contracting States recognize that every State has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the airspace above its territory.

Article 2. Territory

For the purposes of this Convention the territory of a State shall be deemed to be the land areas and territorial waters adjacent thereto under the sovereignty, suzerainty, protection or mandate of such State.

Article 3. Civil and State Aircraft

(a) This Convention shall be applicable only to civil aircraft, and shall not be applicable to State aircraft.

(b) Aircraft used in military, customs and police services shall be deemed to be State aircraft.

(c) No State aircraft of a contracting State shall fly over the territory of another State or land thereon without authorization by special agreement or otherwise, and in accordance with the terms thereof.

(d) The contracting States undertake, when issuing regulations for their State aircraft, that they will have due regard for the safety of navigation of civil aircraft.

Article 4. Misuse of Civil Aviation

Each contracting State agrees not to use civil aviation for any purpose inconsistent with the aims of this Convention.

Chapter II. Flight over territory of contracting States

Article 5. Right of Nonscheduled Flight

Each contracting State agrees that all aircraft of the other contracting States, being aircraft not engaged in scheduled international air services shall have the right, subject to the observance of the terms of this Convention, to make flights into or in transit non-stop across its territory and to make stops for non-traffic purposes without the necessity of obtaining prior permission, and subject to the right of the State flown over to require landing. Each contracting State nevertheless reserves the right, for reasons of safety of flight, to require aircraft desiring to proceed over regions which are inaccessible or without adequate air navigation facilities to follow prescribed routes, or to obtain special permission for such flights.

Such aircraft, if engaged in the carriage of passengers, cargo, or mail for remuneration or hire on other than scheduled international air services, shall also, subject to the provisions of Article 7, have the privilege of taking on or discharging passengers, cargo, or mail, subject to the right of any State where such embarkation or discharge takes place to impose such regulations, conditions or limitations as it may consider desirable.

Article 6. Scheduled Air Services

No scheduled international air service may be operated over or into the territory of a contracting State, except with the special permission or other authorization of that State, and in accordance with the terms of such permission or authorization.

Article 7. Cabotage

Each contracting State shall have the right to refuse permission to the aircraft of other contracting States to take on in its territory passengers, mail, and cargo carried for remuneration or hire and destined for another point within its territory. Each contracting State undertakes not to enter into any arrangements which specifically grant any such privilege on an exclusive basis to any other State or an airline of any other State, and not to obtain any such exclusive privilege from any other State.

Article 8. Pilotless Aircraft

No aircraft capable of being flown without a pilot shall be flown without a pilot over the territory of a contracting State without special authorization by that State and in accordance with the terms of such authorization. Each contracting State undertakes to insure that the flight of such aircraft without a pilot in regions open to civil aircraft shall be so controlled as to obviate danger to civil aircraft.

Article 9. Prohibited Areas

(a) Each contracting State may, for reasons of military necessity or public safety, restrict or prohibit uniformly the aircraft of other States from flying over certain areas of its territory, provided that no distinction in this respect is made between the aircraft of the State whose territory is involved, engaged in international scheduled airline services, and the aircraft of the other contracting States likewise engaged. Such prohibited areas shall be of reasonable extent and location so as not to interfere unnecessarily with air navigation. Descriptions of such prohibited areas in the territory of a contracting State, as well as any subsequent alterations therein, shall be communicated as soon as possible to the other contracting States and to the International Civil Aviation Organization.

(b) Each contracting State reserves also the right, in exceptional circumstances or during a period of emergency, or in the interest of public safety, and with immediate effect, temporarily to restrict or prohibit flying over the whole or any part of its territory, on condition that such restriction or prohibition shall be applicable without distinction of nationality to aircraft of all other States.

(c) Each contracting State, under such regulations as it may prescribe, may require any aircraft entering the areas contemplated in subparagraphs (a) or (b) above to effect a landing as soon as practicable thereafter at some designated airport within its territory.

Article 10. Landing at Customs Airport

Except in a case where, under the terms of this Convention or a special authorization, aircraft are permitted to cross the territory of a contracting State without landing, every aircraft which enters the territory of a contracting State shall, if the regulations of that State so require, land at an airport designated by that State for the purpose of customs and other examination. On departure from the territory of a contracting State, such aircraft shall depart from a similarly designated customs airport. Particulars of all designated customs airports shall be published by the State and transmitted to the International Civil Aviation Organization established under Part II of this Convention for communication to all other contracting States.

Article 11. Applicability of Air Regulations

The Council may suggest to contracting States concerned that they form joint organizations to operate air services on any routes or in any regions.

Article 79. Participation in Operating Organizations

A State may participate in joint operating organizations or in pooling arrangements, either through its government or through an airline company or companies designated by its government. The companies may, at the sole discretion of the State concerned, be state-owned or partly state-owned or privately owned.

PART IV. FINAL PROVISIONS

Chapter XVII. Other aeronautical agreements and arrangements

Article 80. Paris and Habana Conventions

Each contracting State undertakes, immediately upon the coming into force of this Convention, to give notice of denunciation of the Convention relating to the Regulation of Aerial Navigation signed at Paris on October 13, 1919 or the Convention on Commercial Aviation signed at Habana on February 20, 1928, if it is a party to either. As between contracting States, this Convention supersedes the Conventions of Paris and Habana previously referred to.

Article 81. Registration of Existing Agreements

All aeronautical agreements which are in existence on the coming into force of this Convention, and which are between a contracting State and any other State or between an airline of a contracting State and any other State or the airline of any other State, shall be forthwith registered with the Council.

Article 82. Abrogation of Inconsistent Arrangements

The contracting States accept this Convention as abrogating all obligations and understandings between them which are inconsistent with its terms, and undertake not to enter into any such obligations and understandings. A contracting State which, before becoming a member of the Organization has undertaken any obligations toward a noncontracting State or a national of a contracting State or of a non-contracting State inconsistent with the terms of this Convention, shall take immediate steps to procure its release from the obligations. If an airline of any contracting State has entered into any such inconsistent obligations, the State of which it is a national shall use its best efforts to secure their termination forthwith and shall in any event cause them to be terminated as soon as such action can lawfully be taken after the coming into force of this Convention.

Article 83. Registration of New Arrangements

Subject to the provisions of the preceding Article, any contracting State may make arrangements not inconsistent with the provisions of this Convention. Any such arrangement shall be forthwith registered with the Council, which shall make it public as soon as possible.

Chapter XVIII. Disputes and default

Article 84. Settlement of Disputes

If any disagreement between two or more contracting States relating to the interpretation or application of this Convention and its Annexes cannot be settled by negotiation, it shall, on the application of any State concerned in the disagreement, be decided by the Council. No member of the Council shall vote in the consideration by the Council of any dispute to which it is a party. Any contracting State may, subject to Article 85, appeal from the decision of the Council to an ad hoc arbitral tribunal agreed upon with the other parties to the dispute or to the Permanent Court of International Justice. Any such appeal shall be notified to the Council within sixty days of receipt of notification of the decision of the Council.

Article 85. Arbitration Procedure

If any contracting State party to a dispute in which the decision of the Council is under appeal has not accepted the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and the contracting States parties to the dispute cannot agree on the choice of the arbitral tribunal, each of the contracting States parties to the dispute shall name a single arbitrator who shall name an umpire. If either contracting State party to the dispute fails to name an arbitrator within a period of three months from the date of the appeal, an arbitrator shall be named on behalf of that State by the President of the Council from a list of qualified and available persons maintained by the Council. If, within thirty days, the arbitrators cannot agree on an umpire, the President of the Council shall designate an umpire from the list previously referred to. The arbitrators and the umpire shall then jointly constitute an arbitral tribunal. Any arbitral tribunal established under this or the preceding Article shall settle its own procedure and give its decisions by majority vote, provided that the Council may determine procedural questions in the event of any delay which in the opinion of the Council is excessive.

Article 86. Appeals

Unless the Council decides otherwise, any decision by the Council on whether an international airline is operating in conformity with the provisions of this Convention shall remain in effect unless reversed on appeal. On any other matter, decisions of the Council shall, if appealed from, be suspended until the appeal is decided. The decisions of the Permanent Court of International Justice and of an arbitral tribunal shall be final and binding.

Article 87. Penalty for Non-Conformity of Airline

Each contracting State undertakes not to allow the operation of an airline of a contracting State through the airspace above its territory if the Council has decided that the airline concerned is not conforming to a final decision rendered in accordance with the previous Article.

Article 88. Penalty for Non-Conformity by State

The Assembly shall suspend the voting power in the Assembly and in the Council of any contracting State that is found in default under the provisions of this Chapter.

Chapter XIX. War

Article 89. War and Emergency Conditions

In case of war, the provisions of this Convention shall not affect the freedom of action of any of the contracting States affected, whether as belligerents or as neutrals. The same principle shall apply in the case of any contracting State which declares a state of national emergency and notifies the fact to the Council.

Chapter XX. Annexes

Article 90. Adoption and Amendment of Annexes

(a) The adoption by the Council of the Annexes described in Article 54, subparagraph (l), shall require the vote of two-thirds of the Council at a meeting called for that purpose and shall then be submitted by the Council to each contracting State. Any such Annex or any amendment of an Annex shall become effective within three months after its submission to the contracting States or at the end of such longer period of time as the Council may prescribe, unless in the meantime a majority of the contracting States register their disapproval with the Council.

(b) The Council shall immediately notify all contracting States of the coming into force of any Annex or amendment thereto.

Chapter XXI. Ratification, adherences, amendments, and denunciations

Article 91. Ratification of Convention

(a) This Convention shall be subject to ratification by the signatory States. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America, which shall give notice of the date of the deposit to each of the signatory and adhering States.

(b) As soon as this Convention has been ratified or adhered to by twenty-six States it shall come into force between them on the thirtieth day after deposit of the twenty-sixth instrument. It shall come into force for each State ratifying thereafter on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

(c) It shall be the duty of the Government of the United States of America to notify the government of each of the signatory and adhering States of the date on which this Convention comes into force.

Article 92. Adherence to Convention

(a) This Convention shall be open for adherence by members of the United Nations and States associated with them, and States which remained neutral during the present world conflict.

(b) Adherence shall be effected by a notification addressed to the Government of the United States of America and shall take effect as from the thirtieth day from the receipt of the notification by the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the contracting States.

Article 93. Admission of Other States

States other than those provided for in Articles 91 and 92 (a) may, subject to approval by any general international organization set up by the nations of the world to preserve peace, be admitted to participation in this Convention by means of a four-fifths vote of the Assembly and on such conditions as the Assembly may prescribe: provided that in each case the assent of any State invaded or attacked during the present war by the State seeking admission shall be necessary.

Article 94. Amendment of Convention

(a) Any proposed amendment to this Convention must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Assembly and shall then come into force in respect of States which have ratified such amendment when ratified by the number of contracting States specified by the Assembly. The number so specified shall not be less than two-thirds of the total number of contracting States.

(b) If in its opinion the amendment is of such a nature as to justify this course, the Assembly in its resolution recommending adoption may provide that any State which has not ratified within a specified period after the amendment has come into force shall thereupon cease to be a member of the Organization and a party to the Convention.

Article 95. Denunciation of Convention

(a) Any contracting State may give notice of denunciation of this Convention three years after its coming into effect by notification addressed to the Government of the United States of America, which shall at once inform each of the contracting States.

(b) Denunciation shall take effect one year from the date of the receipt of the notification and shall operate only as regards the State effecting the denunciation.

Chapter XXII. Definitions

Article 96

For the purpose of this Convention the expression:

(a) "Air service" means any scheduled air service performed by aircraft for the public transport of passengers, mail or cargo.

(b) "International air service" means an air service which passes through the air space over the territory of more than one State.

(c) "Airline" means any air transport enterprise offering or operating an international air service.

(d) "Stop for non-traffic purposes" means a landing for any purpose other than taking on or discharging passengers, cargo or mail.

I CERTIFY THAT the foregoing is a true copy of the Convention on International Civil Aviation dated December 7, 1944, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago, Illinois, in the English language, the signed original of which is deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I, E. R. Stettinius, Jr., Secretary of State, have hereunto caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed and my name subscribed by an Assistant Chief, Division of Central Services of the said Department, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, this twenty-second day of January, 1945.

Secretary of State.
M. L. KENESTRICK,
Assistant Chief, Division of Central Services.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a prolonged discussion of this treaty. I merely wish to call attention to certain facts.

Mr. President, at the Chicago Convention the four agreements regarding international civil aviation were drawn up. It was the opinion of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate that the particular convention which is now before the Senate is independent of the other three agreements; that is to say that its provisions are not dependent upon the provisions of the other agreements and the Nation which becomes a party to the convention does not thereby become a party to any of the other agreements.

The interim agreement, one of the other three documents drafted at Chicago, provides for a provisional organization, the principal function of which is the preparation of aviation standards for the consideration of the permanent organization envisaged by the convention. The provisional organization, known as PICAO, is now functioning in Montreal. This provisional organization, under the terms of the interim agreement, can exist for only about two more years, or until the coming into force of the convention establishing the permanent International Civil Aviation Organization.

The other two agreements which were drawn up at Chicago are the international air-service transit agreement, known as the "two freedoms" agreement, and the international air-transport agreement, referred to as the "five freedoms" agreement. The first agreement exchanges the rights to fly over and make nontraffic stops in the territory of the other signatories, and the second agreement grants, in addition to the rights included in the "two freedoms" agreement, commercial traffic rights to all signatories.

It was the opinion on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the so-called "five freedoms" agreement as well as the "two freedoms" agreement were separate and apart from this convention; but a controversy arose, particularly respecting the so-called "five freedoms" agreement. That controversy has been resolved by a press release issued today by the Department of State. I shall read the release into the RECORD. It is dated July 25, 1946, and reads as follows:

On February 8, 1945, the United States Government accepted as binding upon it the international air transport agreement (commonly known as the "five freedoms" agreement) which was one of the documents drawn up at the international civil aviation conference held at Chicago from November 1 to December 7, 1944.

This multilateral agreement provides that each contracting state grants to the other contracting states, not only the privileges of flight over its territory without landing and the privilege to land for nontraffic purposes (which are included in the international air transit agreement and known as the "two freedoms"), but in addition the privileges of taking on and discharging passengers, mail and cargo destined for or taken on in the territory of the state whose nationality the aircraft possesses and the privilege of carrying passengers, mail and cargo between the territories of any of the contracting states. The agreement also sets forth the conditions under which the above-mentioned privileges may be exercised.

Only 15 countries have accepted the international air transport agreement and of this number, only 2 besides the United States, have developed international air services to any extent. The failure of the nations principally concerned with the operation and development of air-transport services, generally to accept the agreement, and the dissatisfaction with it as reflected at the meeting of the assembly of the provisional international civil aviation organization held at Montreal have made it clear that the agreement cannot be relied upon as an effective medium for the establishment of international air routes for operation by United States carriers. Consequently, the United States has decided to withdraw from this agreement.

In accordance with article 5 of the agreement, any contracting state may withdraw from it on 1 year's notice. It is the duty of the United States at once to inform all other contracting States of this decision. This Government, therefore, will at once inform all the other states which have accepted the international air transport agreement of its intention to withdraw from the agreement dating from today in accordance with article 5.

Mr. President, I may say that this release was issued at 11 o'clock, and official notice of the withdrawal has been transmitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

It was the view of the Committee on Foreign Relations, although there were differences of judgment upon the point, that it was unnecessary to determine whether or not the so-called "five freedoms" agreement was a proper and valid exercise of executive authority, it having been executed as an executive agreement and not having been submitted to the Senate as a treaty. But aside from that fact, the committee was of the opinion that the convention now before the Senate was independent of the so-called "five freedoms" agreement or the "two freedoms" agreement. However, the action taken by the Department of State today goes far to relieve the present situation, and it is hoped and believed that the Senators who were quite directly interested in this matter will no longer press active opposition to the convention itself.

In that connection, Mr. President, I should say that the Committee on Commerce of the Senate has been very seriously concerned about the so-called "five freedoms" and other executive agreements, believing that these agreements were in fact treaties, or rose to the dignity of treaties, and should have been treated as such. But so far as the "five freedoms" agreement is concerned, the notice given today removes that question from the consideration of this convention.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. In that connection, the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], asked that there should be presented at some proper time—perhaps the Senator from Nevada has it in contemplation—the resolution of the Committee on Commerce dealing with the much broader question of bilateral agreements. If the Senator from Nevada is going to present it, that will take care of the situation, but I think it should be in order to keep the record straight in the matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am not prepared to present it. I thought the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], would present it. I do not see him in the Chamber at present.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would it be in order to offer it at this time in order to complete the RECORD?

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the report which was submitted to the Senate sometime ago?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; and copies were sent to the President, presenting what the Committee on Commerce considered to be the applicable law under the Civil Aeronautics Act, of which the Senator from Nevada, I think, was the father.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall have no objection to it being offered for the RECORD at this point, and it can be supplied if it is not presently available.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have a copy of it here, and I shall read the resolution. It is as follows:

Whereas there has recently been announced and presented by the State Department to the Senate Committee on Commerce the so-called Bermuda agreement, between the United States and the United Kingdom, regarding international commercial aviation; and

Whereas the Committee on Commerce has held extended hearings on the subject of commercial air transport agreements between the United States and foreign nations; and

Whereas witnesses and counsel representing major American transportation interests, including organized labor, have testified as to the prejudicial effect of such agreements to the United States and especially to the interests they represent, as well as the illegality of such agreements unless approved as treaties as prescribed by the Constitution; and

Whereas the Congress provided in sections 402 and 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (1) that no foreign-flag air line be allowed to engage in air transportation to and from United States territory unless such foreign-flag air line has obtained a permit issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board and approved by the President; and (2) that no such permit should be issued unless the Civil Aeronautics Board found, after public hearing, that the foreign-flag air line was fit, willing, and able properly to perform the air transportation sought and that such service would be in the public interest; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce advise the Senate that it is the opinion of this committee—

1. That no agreements of this character should be made except in the form of treaties to be considered and ratified by the Senate; that any executive agreement which purports to grant to any foreign country the right to have an air line or air lines nominated by it operate to or from United States territory without public hearing in advance and the determination of public interest by the Civil Aeronautics Board called for under section 402 of the Civil Aeronautics Act is inconsistent not only with the Constitution but with the letter and spirit of said act, and therefore illegal and void; and that any and all proceedings thereunder should be forthwith terminated by appropriate notice to the governments concerned.

2. That notwithstanding the international air transport agreement and the bilateral agreements above mentioned this Government is not bound by such agreements so long as the same have not been ratified as treaties, but the Civil Aeronautics Board and the President continue to have the duty and the obligation of passing, without prejudgment, upon the question whether any proposed operation by a foreign-flag air line is in the public interest, as defined in the Civil Aeronautics Act.

This resolution was adopted by the Committee on Commerce on April 15, 1946, by a majority of 17 to 1. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], concurred, and the acting chairman, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], concurred, as did all the other members of the committee, with one exception, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

As I understand, Mr. President—and I should like to know whether the Senator from Georgia agrees—this is not a matter which comes directly in question here, that is, there is nothing in the treaty before us which has a bearing on the question one way or the other. The ratification of the treaty will in no way imply or involve an expression of opinion by the Senate as to whether or not the bilateral approach is legal or illegal, void or valid.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not; it has no bearing upon it whatever. That was the view taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations when it reported favorably upon the treaty.

Mr. BREWSTER. I concur in that view.

Mr. GEORGE. And the formal report, which I submitted as the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in the absence at the recent Paris Conference of the distinguished chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], expressly states that the committee is not approving or disapproving any of these bilateral agreements, or implying that they are in any way involved in the ratification of the convention which is now before the Senate.

Mr. BREWSTER. The reference is possibly pertinent, because, as the Senator will observe in the President's letter to the Senator, he called attention to that, but said that he was going ahead with the other arrangements. So, unless the Senate took cognizance of that statement, and indicated very clearly that our ratification of the treaty would not involve any approval of the Presidential action in other respects, there might possibly seem to be an implication of accepting the present executive viewpoint with regard to bilateral agreements. I gather that is clearly not the case.

Mr. GEORGE. Before yielding to the Senator from Nevada, I wish to read from the committee report.

The committee has taken due note of the objections raised to certain aspects of the other three agreements concluded at the Chicago Aviation Conference. Due consideration has also been given to the resolution of the Senate Committee on Commerce, which questioned the authority of the executive branch to enter into such important agreements as the international air-transport agreement without submitting them to the Senate in the form of treaties. In the discussion which took place in the Foreign Relations Committee it was made clear that the committee's approval of the convention in no way constituted approval, either directly or indirectly, of any of the other agreements. However, the committee concluded that the ratification of the pending convention should not be held in abeyance because of disagreements relating to matters independent of the convention.

I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia. I desire at the outset of this discussion to express my personal appreciation for the wholehearted, fine, clear-minded assistance and support which I have received during all this controversy from the able junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. The Senator and I have seen eye to eye on this matter from the very beginning. I say this is a day of rejoicing in that we are in receipt of the release from the State Department in which the Department definitely withdraws the so-called "five-freedoms" agreement.

Mr. President, the news is still fresh that the United States has denounced the international air transport agreement, which was agreement No. 4 negotiated at the International Civil Aviation Conference in Chicago late in 1944. This is the so-called "five-freedoms" agreement which the United States accepted as a so-called executive agreement.

Briefly described, the purport of this agreement was to extend to foreign-flag aircraft the right to transport air traffic, including passengers, freight, and mails, between United States cities and foreign countries without securing a specific permit or franchise from the United States, as required by the Civil Aeronautics Act.

Mr. President, news of the action which has been taken in denouncing this agreement is good news. It is encouraging news to all of us who are interested in seeing the United States maintain its rightful position of leadership in the field of international air transportation.

Before I discuss this matter further, it might be well to recount a little history. Four separate and distinct air agreements were drawn up at the Chicago Aviation Conference. Agreement No. 1 provided for the creation, during an interim period, of a temporary organization known as the International Civil Aviation Organization, with a maximum life of 3 years. Agreement No. 2 provided for the organization on a permanent basis of the International Civil Aviation Organization, along the same lines as the provisional organization covered by agreement No. 1. Agreement No. 3, the so-called international air services transit agreement, extended to foreign flag aircraft of nations signing the agreement the right to fly on regular schedules across the United States and to land for refueling and traffic purposes without securing a specific permit or franchise from the United States. Agreement No. 4 I have already described.

Mr. Adolph Berle, who was chairman of the American delegation at the Chicago Conference, announced at the close of the Conference that agreements No. 1, No. 3, and No. 4 would be accepted by the United States as executive agreements, and that agreement No. 2 would be submitted to the Senate for consideration as a treaty. As might have been expected, by those who knew that Mr. Berle ran the Chicago Conference almost single-handed, and had his way in virtually everything that was done there, his prediction was promptly carried out. Agreements No. 1, No. 3, and No. 4 were accepted by the United States as executive agreements, and agreement No. 2 was submitted to the Senate for consideration as a treaty. That agreement is the so-called convention on international civil aviation which is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of a substantial majority of the transportation industry of this country, as well as in the opinion of organized labor, agreements No. 3 and No. 4 were bad. They were agreements exceedingly favorable to the "cheap labor" trading nations. They were agreements which inherently were opposed to the best interests of the United States because they embodied a fundamentally new policy. Furthermore, adherence to these agreements by the United States, under purported executive authority, was illegal, in the opinion of a majority of the authorities on international and constitutional law, since they violated statutory provisions and could, therefore, properly be accepted by the United States only as treaties, and with the approval of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have called both of these agreements bad. Of the two, however, agreement No. 4, the so-called five-freedoms agreement, was by far the worst. Under this agreement, if a domestic air line were authorized to operate to a particular country abroad—for example, to Soviet Russia—all competing domestic lines would be driven into traffic alliances with the Soviet air line monopoly, operating the reciprocal international service to the United States.

Mr. President, the Chicago conference was where the United States took the first step down a path leading, deviously but surely, away from United States supremacy in international air transportation, and toward rule of the air by Great Britain and the international cartels which Great Britain controls.

We have taken other steps down that path, Mr. President. One of the longest steps we took was when we entered into the so-called Bermuda agreement with Great Britain. That agreement, like agreements No. 3 and No. 4 of the Chicago Conference, was entered into by the United States as an "executive agreement," in spite of the fact that there was no authority to do so. I shall mention the Bermuda agreement further in just a moment.

This path that we have been following, Mr. President, toward international cartelization of air transportation, has been so far afield from the best interests of the United States that I am vastly relieved and greatly encouraged by the announcement that we are abandoning it—at least, to the extent of denouncing the five-freedoms agreement.

I am led to hope, Mr. President, that perhaps in the near future our State Department may also take a more realistic view of the Bermuda agreement. At the Bermuda conference, where Mr. Berle again pulled the strings, the United States again got the short end of a very bad bargain, and the extremely able diplomatic negotiators of Great Britain won another victory.

Mr. President, I have so fully expressed my views with regard to the Bermuda agreement, both on the floor of this body and before the Commerce Committee of the Senate, that I will not take time now to repeat them. In passing, however, I wish to mention that I have read with great interest the letter from the Attorney General to the Secretary of State, dated June 18, 1946, which is printed as a part of the report of the Foreign Relations Committee on the aviation treaty which is now before the Senate. That letter from the Attorney General is a very interesting document. It repeats, almost verbatim, arguments advanced earlier by the State Department in support of the authority of the President to enter into the Bermuda agreement as an "executive agreement," in spite of the fact that it violated provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. Mr. President, I have great respect for the present Attorney General, and perhaps I should be chagrined because he has expressed a view so directly contrary to that which I have previously taken, and which I still hold. However, I am comforted by the knowledge that my views are supported by the leading authorities on the question. I am also comforted, Mr. President, by the conviction that Mr. Clark is too good a lawyer to have signed the letter which he sent to the Secretary of State on June 18, if he had previously consulted the authorities, or even if he had read the explanation of the law which I made before the Commerce Committee of the Senate. The arguments of the State Department, which Mr. Clark repeats, had already been advanced, and were completely answered during the Commerce Committee hearings on my bill—Senate bill 1814. Obviously, Mr. Clark did not have time to read these hearings or to consult the authorities on this question. Apparently he consulted only the State Department. I hope, Mr. President, that the Attorney General may find time, in the near future, to go into this matter more thoroughly and obtain a deeper understanding of it.

Mr. President, what was done at the Chicago conference was not done blindly. Cogent warnings were sounded by the representatives of the United States Senate who attended that conference—the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who is chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. These Senators pointed out where the path was leading and warned against entering upon it, but their warnings went unheeded. Mr. Welch Pogue, then Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, who as counsel for that Board had clearly recognized the principles which demonstrate the complete illegality of doing by executive agreement what was done at Chicago, and what was done at Bermuda, gave sound advice to Mr. Berle and to others, but he, too, was unheeded.

Ever since the Chicago conference the junior Senator from Maine and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] in the Senate, and many others outside the Senate, who are also interested in seeing this country fulfill its destiny in the field of international aviation, have been hammering away at the defects and dangers of the five-freedoms agreement. The news that this agreement has been denounced will be widely welcomed all over this country. It will not be so welcomed on the other side of the Atlantic because this action may, perhaps, be considered as an indication that the United States is at last waking up. I pray that may be so. It is time we woke up. I earnestly hope that this action is the forerunner of other and further actions which will free us from commitments against our own best interests. I even venture to hope, Mr. President, that before it is entirely too late the United States may wake up to the fact that in order to preserve our place of leadership in international aviation we must present a united front against the competition of the European cartelists, the empire statesmen, and the big-business diplomats, by adopting the principle of a single, privately controlled but Government-regulated air line to carry the American flag across the oceans and through the skies of the world.

Mr. President, so long as the United States was an adherent to the five-freedoms agreement, I felt—and I know that other Members of this body held the some view—that the convention on international civil aviation, which is now before us, providing for the setting up of the permanent international civil-aviation organization, held dangers so great that it would be my duty to oppose it. Even with the five-freedoms agreement denounced by the United States, I still have grave doubts about the wisdom of entering into this treaty. I think the time will come—perhaps so soon as the early part of next year—when we shall regret having entered into it. However, Mr. President, I am so greatly relieved that we have pulled out of the five-freedoms agreement that I shall not now oppose the treaty. If I could have any assurance that we would similarly denounce the Bermuda agreement I might even, with good conscience, cast my vote in favor of the treaty. The proposed convention has much in it which is good. If we are to be realistic from now on, recognize our own interests, and act accordingly, the Permanent International Civil Aviation Organization can perhaps be made a vehicle for the advancement of international aviation consistent with the interests of the United States. It is in the hope that we shall be realistic from now on, shall recognize where our interests lie, and shall not again be misled into a course opposed to our own interests, that I shall withdraw my opposition to the pending treaty.

Mr. President, in regard to the opinion of the Attorney General, in regard to the attitude of the Committee on Commerce, of which I have the honor of being a member, and in regard to the question of Executive agreements, I desire now, at the conclusion of my remarks, to have inserted in the RECORD my remarks and my statement before the Committee on Commerce when this matter was pending, and before the Committee on Commerce arrived at the statement which has been referred to so ably by the junior Senator from Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the statement made by me before the Committee on Commerce on the subject may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Members of the committee have asked me to make some comment on the authority by which the Bermuda agreement was consummated and implemented.

This question divides itself into two parts. First, the authority by which the State Department entered into the agreement. Second, the authority under which the Civil Aeronautics Board approved the IATA conference procedure agreement. There are some other questions of authority, such as the apparent commitment of the Civil Aeronautics Board under the Bermuda agreement to review rates of United States air carriers in international air transportation; but since, so far, there has been no attempt by the Civil Aeronautics Board to exercise authority in these other fields I speak of, the question of authority narrows down to the two points I have just mentioned.

With respect to the authority of the State Department to negotiate the Bermuda agreement, the State Department's position was made clear in a memorandum read by Mr. Blake, which members of the committee will recall Mr. Blake said was in answer to an anonymous memorandum which he said had been circulated among Members of Congress. In the State Department memorandum which Mr. Blake read, the following statement was made:

"Under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 the President is empowered to grant air transport rights to foreign nations through the CAB by means of agreements negotiated by the Department of State in consultation with the Board. These agreements must be within the framework of the existing statute. The State Department believes that the air transport agreement with Great Britain was negotiated within these powers and conditions."

Mr. Chairman, I have already pointed out that the State Department did not contend that its authority to negotiate an executive agreement at Bermuda was derived from the constitutional powers of the President, but that it was statutory authority. The quotation I have just made from the State Department memorandum sums the Department's position up quite clearly; and since Mr. Blake told us that memorandum was prepared in answer to criticism on this point of authority, I think we may quite properly take this statement from the State Department memorandum as the basis for discussion of this point.

Let me read it again:

"Under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 the President is empowered to grant air transport rights to foreign nations through the CAB by means of agreements negotiated by the Department of State in consultation with the Board. These agreements must be within the framework of the existing statute. The State Department believes that the air transport agreement with Great Britain was negotiated within these powers and conditions."

Mr. Chairman, section 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act provides that:

"The issuance, denial, transfer, amendment, cancellation, suspension, or revocation of, and the terms, conditions, and limitations contained in, any certificate authorizing an air carrier to engage in overseas or foreign air transportation, or air transportation between places in the same territory or possession, or any permit issuable to any foreign air carrier under section 402, shall be subject to the approval of the President. Copies of all applications in respect to such certificates and permits shall be transmitted to the President by the Authority before hearing thereon, and all decisions thereon by the authority shall be submitted to the President before publication thereof. This section shall not apply to the issuance or denial of any certificate issuable under section 401 (e) or any permit issuable under section 402 (c) or to the original terms, conditions, or limitations of any such certificate or permit."

Section 802 of the Civil Aeronautics Act reads as follows:

"The Secretary of State shall advise the Authority of, and consult with the Authority concerning, the negotiation of any agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services."

Section 1102 of the Civil Aeronautics Act reads as follows:

"In exercising and performing its powers and duties under this act, the Authority shall do so consistently with any obligation assumed by the United States in any treaty, convention, or agreement that may be in force between the United States and any foreign country or foreign countries, shall take into consideration any applicable laws and requirements of foreign countries and shall not, in exercising and performing its powers and duties with respect to certificates of convenience and necessity, restrict compliance by any air carrier with any obligation, duty, or liability imposed by any foreign country: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any obligation, duty, or liability arising out of a contract or other agreement, heretofore or hereafter entered into between an air carrier, or any officer or representative thereof, and any foreign country, if such contract or agreement is disapproved by the Authority as being contrary to the public interest."

Now, gentlemen of the committee, each of these three sections of the Civil Aeronautics Act has at one time or another been cited by one or more proponents of the Bermuda agreement as the basis for the authority to negotiate that agreement. Let us consider them one by one.

Section 801 comes closest to meeting the statement of the State Department that "under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 the President is empowered to grant air-transport rights to foreign nations through the CAB by means of agreements negotiated by the Department of State in consultation with the Board." Actually, of course, both sections 801 and 802 must be considered together to get any such concept. And, if we examine these sections very, very perfunctorily, it might appear that they do grant such authority. A somewhat closer examination, however, reveals several interesting facts.

First, section 801 does not grant the President the right to give air-transport rights to foreign nations. It does provide that the CAB can act in this regard only subject to the approval of the President. That may sound like a technical distinction, but it is a very important one. It is important because, on the one hand, you have an assumption that the President may do whatever he pleases about granting rights to foreign air lines, and merely use the CAB as an implement for his actions. On the other hand—and this, gentlemen of the committee, is what the Civil Aeronautics Act provides—the President is given only what amounts to a veto power over the actions of the CAB in connection with rights granted to foreign air carriers, or to United States air carriers to engage in overseas or foreign air transportation. I believe it is going entirely too far to assume that this veto power implies the power of the President to go ahead, after he has disapproved a CAB finding, and make whatever agreement or grant whatever rights he may see fit to make or grant. The President does not have that power under the Civil Aeronautics Act. Let me point out further that section 801 requires that copies of all applications in respect to certificates and permits for overseas or foreign air transportation shall be transmitted to the President before hearing. That portion of the section was not complied with in the case of the Bermuda agreement. As a matter of fact, as we all know, the Bermuda agreement granted rights to foreign air carriers without any hearing whatsoever. Gentlemen of the committee, it is axiomatic in the law that he who seeks to invoke a statute must himself comply with it. I do not see how the State Department or the Civil Aeronautics Board can claim any authority under section 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act unless the authority in question was exercised in full compliance with that section.

Now let us consider section 802. This section does not, as the State Department memorandum would lead us to believe, convey any authority to the State Department to negotiate agreements granting air-transport rights to foreign nations. Let me read the language of section 802 again, at the hazard of your patience:

"The Secretary of State shall advise the authority of, and consult with the authority concerning, the negotiation of any agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services."

All that section says is that when the Secretary of State is about to negotiate or is negotiating any agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services, he shall advise the Civil Aeronautics Board of the negotiations and shall consult with the Board concerning them. This is not a grant of power; it is a restriction upon the authority of the State Department. The authority to negotiate agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services, lies outside this section; it lies outside the Civil Aeronautics Act. All this section does is say that in exercising whatever authority he may have for the negotiation of such agreements, the Secretary of State shall advise the Civil Aeronautics Board of, and consult with the Board concerning, the negotiation of agreements of the type specified. If the Secretary of State has authority to negotiate a certain agreement by treaty, and only by treaty, then section 802 of the Civil Aeronautics Act says that if that agreement concerns establishment or development of air navigation it can be negotiated only after advice to and consultation with the Civil Aeronautics Board.

The State Department complied with section 802 of the Civil Aeronautics Act in negotiating the Bermuda agreement, since the representatives of the Civil Aeronautics Board were present in Bermuda and, in fact, we are told, actually negotiated the agreement, the State Department representative only signing what had been negotiated by the CAB. However, the fact that the department complied with the provisions of this section has no bearing on the question of whether the Department had any authority in law to negotiate the agreement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look at section 1102 of the Civil Aeronautics Act. This is the other side of the coin. Whereas section 802, as we have seen, put a limitation on the power of the State Department, namely, that in negotiating agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, whether by treaty or otherwise, it should advise and consult with the Civil Aeronautics Board, section 1102 provides that the Board, in exercising and performing its powers and duties under the Civil Aeronautics Act, shall have due regard for obligations assumed by the United States in any treaty, convention, or agreement that may be in force between the United States and any foreign country or foreign countries. Section 1102 does not convey any authority to the Civil Aeronautics Board. It is a restriction upon the board. It refers to the powers and duties of the board "under this act." That is, the powers and duties granted by sections of the act other than section 1102. It provides that in exercising and performing its powers and duties under the act, the Board shall do so consistently with any obligation of the United States that may be in force between the United States and any foreign country or foreign countries. Note the language of the section:

"Any obligation assumed by the United States in any treaty, convention, or agreement that may be in force." This clearly contemplates that treaties, conventions, or other agreements may be entered into; and it provides that when they have been entered into, the Civil Aeronautics Board shall exercise and perform its powers and duties consistently with any obligations thus assumed by the United States. I think members of the committee will agree with me that a treaty, convention, or agreement is not in force between the United States and any foreign country unless it has been negotiated and entered into under existing constitutional or statutory authority. Thus, the question of whether the Bermuda agreement was entered into under proper authority, and is therefore binding on the United States, is a question preliminary to determination of whether the Civil Aeronautics Board, under the provisions of section 1102 of the Civil Aeronautics Act, must exercise and perform its powers and duties under that act consistently with the Bermuda agreement. Since it is necessary to show conclusively that the agreement is in force before we can apply to the Civil Aeronautics Board the restriction imposed by section 1102, certainly we may not put the cart before the horse and say that section 1102 makes the Bermuda agreement good, regardless of whether it was negotiated and consummated under proper authority.

So much for the question of the authority under which the Bermuda agreement was entered into. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us consider the question of the authority of the Civil Aeronautics Board to approve the IATA conference procedure.

Members of the committee will recall that Mr. Pogue took issue with Senator BREWSTER when the Senator made reference to the "legal validity of the Board's assumption of jurisdiction here."

Mr. Pogue said, at that time, and I quote, "The authority to decide on this specific kind of a set-up is in section 412, and it specifically mentions this kind of thing on rates."

Section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act provides as follows:

"(a) Every air carrier shall file with the authority a true copy, or, if oral, a true and complete memorandum, of every contract or agreement (whether enforceable by provisions for liquidated damages, penalties, bonds, or otherwise) affecting air transportation and in force on the effective date of this section or hereafter entered into, or any modification or cancellation thereof, between such air carrier and any other air carrier, foreign air carrier, or other carrier for pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, traffic, service, or equipment, or relating to the establishment of transportation rates, fares, charges, or classifications, or for preserving and improving safety, economy, and efficiency of operation, or for controlling, regulating, preventing, or otherwise eliminating destructive, oppressive, or wasteful competition, or for regulating stops, schedules, and character of service, or for other cooperative working arrangements.

"(b) The authority shall by order disapprove any such contract or agreement, whether or not previously approved by it, that it finds to be adverse to the public interest, or in violation of this act, and shall by order approve any such contract or agreement, or any modification or cancellation thereof, that it does not find to be adverse to the public interest, or in violation of this act."

Gentlemen of the committee, I was intimately concerned with the framing and enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. I spent a good deal of my time for many weary years laboring with this subject. We tried as best we could to anticipate every possible contingency, and to phrase the language of the act so carefully as to cover every such contingency. I am sorry if we failed. But I want to say, here and now, that if we had anticipated that any such interpretation would have been placed upon section 412 as has been placed upon it by the Civil Aeronautics Board in connection with the Board's approval of the IATA conference procedure, we should certainly have amended the language. This is one contingency we did not foresee. This section was intended to require the filing of tariffs by United States air carriers engaged in air transportation within the United States, over whose rates and fares the Board has jurisdiction. It was intended also to require the filing of agreements for joint rates and fares, for divisions of such fares, for pooling of equipment, and for various other matters which might be the subject of agreements between air carriers, whether foreign or domestic. It was also intended to require the filing of any agreements between an air carrier and any other carrier—rail or steamship, for instance; to the end that all such fares and agreements might be scrutinized by the Board before becoming effective. In writing the provisions of the act with respect to agreements between air carriers and other common carriers—those provisions are contained in section 1003 of the act—we used language which makes it clear that the rates, fares, and charges referred to were joint rates, fares and charges. In writing the language of section 412, we were not, perhaps, quite so careful. But I submit to you that the intent of the Congress in this connection is readily ascertainable from a reading of the act as a whole, even though it is not spelled out in the section cited. In fact, it is my belief that a reading of section 412 as a whole, without tearing any single phrase out of its context, makes it clear what the Congress intended. I am happy to say that at least one member of the Civil Aeronautics Board understood well enough what the Congress intended. I hope every member of the committee will read carefully, if he has not already done so, the minority opinion of Mr. Josh Lee in connection with the CAB decision on the IATA case. Let me quote one paragraph from Mr. Lee's opinion:

"I further recognize that it will be necessary for the carriers to arrive at understandings in order to facilitate the establishment of through service and joint rates. The Board can, therefore, at its discretion look favorably upon the agreements between connecting carriers for the interchange of traffic, for the coordination of schedules, for the establishment of through services, and for the fixing of joint rates. If these agreements are worked out directly between the connecting carriers themselves without involving other carriers, such agreements should have no adverse effects upon the reservation of competitive incentives and the determination of competitive rates by the action of each carrier. That is, I believe, the type of agreement which Congress anticipated might receive the Board's approval under section 412 (b) of the act."

Gentlemen of the committee, I have spent perhaps too much time on the question of the intent of Congress in enacting section 412 of the Civil Aeronautics Act. I have done so because I feel particularly well qualified to express an opinion as to that intent, and because it is my belief the committee is entitled to whatever light I may be able to throw on that question. The real crux of the situation, however, is whether the Civil Aeronautics Board has acted within the authority conveyed by section 412, whatever that authority may be.

On this point, I can do no better than to again quote Mr. Lee:

"The IATA traffic conference resolution or agreement is admittedly intended to facilitate rate fixing and other joint action with regard to the kind and amount of service to be furnished by international air carriers. Such negotiations or agreements would constitute violations of the antitrust laws of the United States unless the basic agreement providing for this concerted action is approved by the Board, which approval will, pursuant to section 414 of the act, relieve the persons affected from the application of the antitrust laws.

"Section 412 of the act directs that the Board disapprove any contract or agreement submitted to it that it finds to be adverse to the public interest. In my opinion"—and I want to say there, Mr. Chairman, that is not only Mr. Lee's opinion, it is my opinion as well—"the traffic conference agreement submitted to us herein is adverse to the public interest for the reason that it is incompatible with the carefully established international air policy of the United States, and no sound reasons have been advanced why we should abandon this policy, permanently or temporarily."

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated at this hearing that the IATA conference procedure for fixing rates in international air transportation is a cartel agreement. I do not wish to labor this point, but so that members of the committee may ponder the matter for themselves, I want the RECORD to contain a statement of what a cartel is.

Broadly speaking, a cartel is an agreement beween companies, nominally competitive, to eliminate competition between them. Most cartel agreements contain provisions for the limitation of output, Divison of Markets, and often for the fixing of prices. The word is often used interchangeably with the word "monopoly," although such use is probably not technically correct since the word "monopoly" also connotes the control of an industry by a single company as well as control by many companies operating through agreements. The word "cartel" does not apply to single company domination, but rather applies to the understandings and agreements between companies for the joint control and private regulation of production and marketing. Cartel agreements are not necessarily formal or in writing.

The encyclopedia of the social sciences describes a cartel as an association based upon a contractual agreement between enterprises in the same field of business, which, while retaining their legal independence, associate themselves with a view to exerting a monopolistic influence on the market.

In common parlance the word more often refers to agreements between companies of different countries (sometimes cartels have been called private international economic governments), but the term does not necessarily refer merely to international agreements. It has also sometimes been used to refer to agreements between domestic companies, to regulate domestic production and marketing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to a paragraph from the statement made by Mr. L. Welch Pogue, before this committee, on February 27. Mr. Pogue said, and I quote: "In addition to air transport rights in * * * strategic United Kingdom territories, it is also essential to obtain rights in several other strategic areas whose governments are guided by the United Kingdom in their policy and attitude toward air transport. Although obviously this agreement could not award landing rights in the territories of these sovereign countries, there is little doubt that the manifested willingness of the United Kingdom not only to cooperate with the United States but in large part, to embrace its basic air-transport policy, will be of great assistance in obtaining the necessary traffic rights in these other countries." Mr. Chairman, Mr. Pogue was talking about the Bermuda agreement. I submit that the language which I have just quoted means only one thing: That, in negotiating the Bermuda agreement, we were dealing with Great Britain as the head of a cartel, and that we recognized that fact.

Gentlemen of the committee, I promised to discuss the question of the difference between a treaty and an executive agreement. We have had considerable difficulty with that question during the course of these hearings.

The letter of the Secretary of State, which was read to the committee by Mr. Miller, reporting on this bill, refers to numerous agreements with foreign countries respecting aviation, and declares that "in all of these cases the agreements have been consistent with and could be carried out under the terms of existing legislation." A little later in that statement, the Secretary of State points out that "throughout the history of this country, there have been numerous instances where foreign negotiations have been concluded through agreements authorized or approved by acts of Congress in one of the fields of congressional responsibility under the Constitution. So long as these agreements remain within the scope of declared congressional policy, there would appear to be no objection whatever to this procedure."

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State recognizes the principle that executive agreements must be carried out consistent with and under the terms of existing legislation, and within the scope of declared congressional policy. The authority for executive agreements, therefore, is statutory. Now, that being the case, certainly Congress can withdraw that authority, either with respect to specific statutes or with respect to any particular field of negotiations. That should dispose of any contention that S. 1814 is either unconstitutional or improper. The authority for making executive agreements comes from Congress; and Congress can take it away or modify it or circumscribe it, as Congress will.

In that connection, I call the attention of the committee to the statement made by Mr. Miller on the occasion of his appearance before the committee on March 7, that the Bermuda agreement "was only deemed to be within the power of the Executive because of the existing authority vested in the Executive by virtue of previous legislation in Congress."

I am rather inclined to approve the definition of executive agreement offered by our chairman, who said that "an executive agreement is an agreement entered into by the executive department with another country, on behalf of the United States, founded upon an existing treaty or derived from an act of Congress and existing only so long as the authority of the Congress exists."

While Mr. Miller, of the State Department, in his discussion of executive agreements, contended that one source of authority whereby foreign agreements may be concluded, other than as treaties, is the inherent constitutional power of the President as the Chief Executive and diplomatic officer of the Government and Commander in Chief of the armed forces, to conclude agreements with foreign countries within the scope of his constitutional responsibilities, Mr. Miller went on, as I have pointed out, to make it clear that he does not consider the authority for making the Bermuda agreement, or similar agreements, to stem from this source. In fact, Mr. Miller cited what he referred to as—and I quote—"The various so-called executive agreements in the field of international civil aviation," as examples of agreements "concluded by the executive branch in conjunction with legislative action by the Congress under one of its delegated powers." And Mr. Miller went on to say that "while for want of a better term such an agreement is customarily referred to as an 'executive agreement,' it might with equal correctness be called a 'congressional agreement'," since in the nature of this type of instrument its provisions could not be binding upon, or carried out by, the United States without legislative action by the Congress." Pointing out that there may be several different methods in which action by the legislative and executive branches may be combined to bring into being an agreement of this nature, Mr. Miller said that "in the first place, an agreement may be entered into with a foreign country under general powers vested in the executive branch through previous action by Congress." He then cited "the various so-called executive agreements in the filed of international civil aviation" as examples of this type of agreements.

On this question of treaties versus executive agreements, I am somewhat inclined to agree with William Ephraim Mikel, who wrote, in his book, Limitations on the Treaty-Making Power, that "something has been written on the extent of the treaty-making power of the President and the Senate. Little has been decided."

Article II of the Constitution, section 2, clause 2, gives the President the power to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate present at the time, and such treaties are the supreme law of the land. These constitutional provisions contain no definition of the word "treaty" or the words "executive agreements."

It has long been recognized that a treaty is not immutable, but rather is subject to acts of Congress. In 112 U. S. 580, the Supreme Court, back in 1884, declared that: "We are of opinion that, so far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation can become the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal."

Bouvier's Law Dictionary, third revision, volume 2, page 3312, defines a treaty as "a compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare." Bouvier's continues: "Treaties are for a perpetuity, or for a limited time. Those matters which are accomplished by a single act and are at once perfected in their execution are called agreements, conventions, and pactions, but the distinction in name is not always observed."

Here is another pertinent quotation from Bouvier's: "A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress, and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty." And again: "When a treaty is inconsistent with a subsequent act of Congress, the latter will prevail; the Constitution does not declare that the law established by a treaty shall never be altered or repealed by Congress; and while good faith may cause Congress to refrain from making any change in such law, if it does so, its enactment becomes the law. No person acquires any vested right to the continued operation of a treaty. Although the other party to the treaty may have ground of complaint, still everyone is bound to obey the latest law passed."

In the case of Altman and Co. v. U. S. (224 U. S. 583) the question was raised but not decided, as to whether under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States an agreement is a treaty unless made by the President and ratified by two-thirds of the Senate.

Black's Law Dictionary, third edition, page 1752, defines a treaty as "an agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized, and solemnly ratified by the several sovereigns or the supreme power of each state."

Mr. Charles Cheney Hyde's textbook on international law, volume 2, page 1405, carefully points out that the Constitution contains "no definition of a treaty and no statement declaring under what circumstances a conventional arrangement purporting to bind the United States must be dealt with according to the procedure that is mandatory in the case of treaties."

Mr. Green Haywood Hackworth, in his Digest of International Law, volume 5, page 390, cites with approval a memorandum prepared by a former solicitor of the Department of State, classifying agreements made by the Executive and not submitted to the Senate as (1) "agreements made pursuant to authority contained in acts of Congress", and (2) "agreements entered into purely as executive acts without legislative authorization."

On page 402 of the same volume, Mr. Hackworth quotas under Secretary of State Grew, as follows:

"In addition to the authority of the President under the Constitution to negotiate and sign treaties with foreign governments and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to ratify them, the Executive is empowered without legislative sanction to conclude with foreign governments certain classes of agreements which are not classified as treaties in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution. These agreements are concluded by virtue of the authority inherent in the Chief Executive under the Constitution, and are confined to subject matter within the purview of his constitutional authority."

Mr. Wallace Mitchell McClure, in his book International Executive Agreements, at page 277, says: "Perhaps there is no exact definition possible of the expression 'Executive agreements.' It is doubtless used to include international agreements made by the Executive (whether under statutory authority or not), but excluding those made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In this sense it is obvious that the term comprises agreements and acts of a quite varied nature; for while such an agreement may finally be made by the President or under his direction, it may in some cases have a very different basis of authority from others; it may rest on a statute; it may follow a treaty; it may be an exercise of the power of the President under the Constitution and without the aid of statute or treaty, such as a modus vivendi or an agreement for the determination of claims of American citizens against another country; or it may, as in the case of an armistice, be his act as commander in chief."

An article in the Illinois Law Review, volume 35, page 375, expresses the opinion that executive agreements "are not the supreme law of the land," that they "cannot invalidate conflicting previous legislation," and "that they are not binding on individual citizens," but then expresses the final conclusion that they are "nonetheless binding on the Nation as a whole."

The article in the Yale Law Journal, which was quoted approvingly to this committee by Mr. Miller, of the State Department, appears in volume 54. The committee might be interested to know that Mr. Miller deleted a phrase from the passage which he quoted. The full passage is as follows: "Despite many attempts to make distinctions between treaties and executive agreements in terms of form, subject matter and legal, practical consequences, and however surprising or even shocking the conclusion may be to any who have not examined the record, this common usage is the only distinction that the facts of our constitutional law and practice will sustain." This article continues: "There are no significant criteria, under the Constitution of the United States or in the diplomatic practice of this Government, by which the genus 'treaty' can be distinguished from the genus 'Executive agreement' other than the single criterion of the procedure or authority by which the United States consent to ratification is obtained. More explicity, agreements with other governments, when consummated pursuant to congressional authorization or when subsequently sanctioned by Congress, have the identical legal and practical consequences both under the municipal law of the United States and under international law, as treaties, consented to by two-thirds of the Senate. Agreements with other governments made pursuant to the President's authority alone, when within the scope of his independent powers, has, furthermore, substantially the same status as treaties, except in some cases where there is contradictory legislation." Mr. Chairman, although the writer there states definitely his opinion that everything which is not a treaty is an executive agreement, he certainly implies by his choice of language that Executive agreements fall into two classes, namely, agreements with other governments consummated pursuant to congressional authorization or subsequently sanctioned by Congress, and agreements with other governments made pursuant to the President's authority alone and within the scope of his independent powers. That is, to my way of thinking, coming a good deal closer to a definition than Mr. Miller led us to believe.

This same article in the Yale Law Journal contains a very interesting comparison between treaties and executive agreements. It is printed in parallel columns. I believe the distinctions made are so important, particularly in view of the fact that the State Department has quoted this article with approval, that it is worth while to take up the time of the committee to call attention to at least some of them.

A treaty, this article points out, is like a constitutional amendment. It car deal with any subject appropriate to international negotiations. On the other hand, the article states, an executive agreement is strictly limited. It can deal only with subjects especially delegated by Congress or, if made independently by the President, can deal only with normal powers vested in the Commander in Chief and principal diplomatic officer.

A treaty, says this article which the State Department regards as authoritative, can do what Congress cannot. It confers legislative power on Congress. On the other hand, the article declares, an executive agreement cannot do what Congress cannot. It cannot confer on Congress powers of legislation it did not have before.

A treaty, says this article, must be ratified to be binding. An executive agreement, on the other hand, "need not be ratified by the United States." Mr. Chairman, that language is interesting and the reason for it is explained in the next distinction which the article makes between treaties and executive agreements.

A treaty, says the article, binds the United States for its duration. It cannot be repealed by act of Congress except for domestic purposes only. The international obligation remains binding. An executive agreement, on the other hand, this article points out—and I quote—"binds only as long as it suits both sides. It morally binds only the signing executive, not his successors. If they wish it to continue, it is by voluntary act. An executive agreement is subject to repeal by act of Congress domestically and internationally. Unilateral indication of desire to terminate suffices. Repeal of authorizing statute suffices."

Mr. Chairman, it surprised me somewhat to find this comparison in the article from which the State Department representative was quoting. If Mr. Miller read this comparison, I cannot understand why he did not bring it to the attention of the committee. Perhaps he did not have time to read the whole article. The portion which he quoted was from about page 181. The comparison from which I am now quoting begins on page 628.

"A treaty," says this article, "has a special significance in constitutional law. It can repeal an act of Congress. An executive agreement is unmentioned in the Constitution and has grown only through the necessity of making agreements of a character not to warrant submission to the Senate. It can be repealed by Congress at any time, but cannot repeal an act of Congress. It can, of course, be nullified or abrogated by treaty, prior or subsequent."

The article points out that a treaty, under the Constitution, is the supreme law of the land, whereas an executive agreement, "with a few exceptions as to contrary State law or when made pursuant to act of Congress" is not supreme law of the land.

The article then points out that a treaty lasts, with unimportant exceptions, as long as its terms provide. On the other hand, the article states, an executive agreement—and I quote—"is terminable at any time at the unilateral wish of one of the parties. This is true even if it purports to run for a given number of years. No successor to the President is bound by the latter's agreement, although he may consent to permit it to stand."

Mr. Chairman, this comparison concludes with what I consider to be something of a masterpiece of understatement. Pointing out that "no secret treaty can be made by the United States," the article states that: "An executive agreement invites secrecy since the President can make it without notifying anybody. Several secret agreements are now known."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have just one more matter to discuss and I shall be through.

It has been loosely stated that S. 1814 would prohibit the executive branch of the Government from making any agreements respecting aviation. That is not so. The bill merely requires that certain types or kinds of agreements, in the field of international aviation, shall be made in the form of treaties if they are to be made at all. The kinds and types of agreements to which this requirement would be applied are carefully delineated in the bill. I know the committee will wish to consider this point, so let me paraphrase the bill to make this point clear.

One of the kinds of agreements which the bill would require to be made by treaty is an agreement with any foreign government restricting the right of the United States or its nationals to engage in air transport operations. That seems to me a perfectly proper provision. Restrictions on the right of American citizens to engage in international air transportation should not be made effective by this Government except through the orderly and constitutional processes which guarantee an opportunity for the persons affected by the proposed restrictions to have their day in court.

The next kind of agreement which the bill would require to be made by treaty is an agreement with any foreign government generally granting to such government or its nationals, or to any air line representing such government, any right or rights to operate in air transportation or air commerce other than as a foreign air carrier in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938.

The Civil Aeronautics Act sets up a specific procedure and method for granting to foreign air lines operating rights in the United States. It provides for notice and opportunity for hearing. It provides for findings with respect to public convenience and necessity. It provides for Presidential approval. That is the pattern laid down by the Congress. Nothing in S. 1814 would change that pattern. On the contrary, enactment of S. 1814 would insure that the procedure set forth by the Congress shall be followed. Since this procedure is laid down by an act of Congress, it cannot legally be changed by an executive agreement. If it is to be changed, it must be changed by treaty or by a subsequent act of Congress. Therefore, the provision of S. 1814 that no attempt may be made to change this procedure except by treaty certainly does no violence either to the Constitution or to the principles of international law.

One other kind of agreement would be required, under S. 1814, to be made by treaty, if at all. That is, agreements with foreign governments respecting the formation of, or the participation of the United States in, any international organization for regulation or control of international aviation.

Mr. Chairman, participation of the United States in an international organization for regulation or control of international aviation necessarily involves giving up some part of the sovereignty of the United States. No such waiver of sovereignty should ever be made by the mere action of the executive branch. Here, if anywhere, is a proper field for the exercise of treaty powers. Here, again, is a matter of vital interest to the public; a matter upon which all interested persons should have an opportunity to be heard, and upon which the will of the people, expressed through their elected representatives, should be listened to.

Participation by the United States in an international organization for regulation or control of international aviation is a continuing matter, of considerable permanency. By any accepted definition, arrangements for such participation must be regarded as properly the subject of a treaty, rather than an Executive agreement.

Those are the provisions of S. 1814. It does not usurp any powers of the President. It does not take away from the executive branch of the Government any powers which it legally has or can lawfully exercise. In a very large degree, this bill is only an attempted assertion of what is already the law.

This bill is an effective vehicle for the expression of the will of the Congress on this subject. A mere resolution by the Senate would not be effective.

This is a matter which cries out for assertion by the Congress of its rights to form and control the policy of the United States. This bill is a means for asserting that right effectively and unequivocally, in the present instance. If the Congress, with all the evidence before it, refuses to assert its rights now, it will by its silence assume responsibility for what the executive agencies of the Government have done and may do; and if the result is loss by this country of its rightful place in world aviation, the fault will lie, in the eyes of the future, not with any official or department in the executive branch, but at the door of Congress, where it will then belong.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I yield the floor at this point.

RECOGNITION OF SERVICES OF "BILLY" MITCHELL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I think it will not be out of order for me to say a few words of commendation of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] for the valiant fight they have made through the months and years, which has culminated today in at least 80 percent success for their side. The Senate is made up of men who have strong convictions, and these two Senators have stood out for a long time, almost alone, until they have been able to sell their ideas, on the merits, to other members of the committee. So I congratulate them and I congratulate the country for having such able public servants who have waged a valiant and most successful fight.

However, Mr. President, probably it will not be out of order, when we are considering this aviation treaty, for me to say a few words about a great birdman of the past, "Billy" Mitchell. I am making this statement because today the House has passed Representative ROBERTSON'S bill conferring a special medal upon "Billy" Mitchell, and that bill is coming to the Senate.

Mr. President, can men never forgive and forget? Three times the Senate of the United States has passed the joint resolution conferring posthumously upon "Billy" Mitchell the rank of major general. Three times now it has died in the House, because of blind brass-hat revenge.

Today, the House passed Representative ROBERTSON'S bill conferring a special medal upon "Billy" Mitchell—not the Congressional Medal of Honor. I want to point out, Mr. President, that on "Billy" Mitchell's record it still appears that he was "busted" from a brigadier general to a colonel because he had the same kind of courage that has been manifested by the two Senators I have referred to, the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Maine, in their fight on the aviation treaty.

Mr. President, under the provisions of my joint resolution, "Billy" Mitchell's military record would be corrected, and instead of having his former rank of brigadier general restored, he would be elevated, in accordance with the Senate's wishes, to the rank of major general. Three times the Senate has spoken on this matter, and three times now the House of Representatives has turned down the Senate request.

As a military man, Mitchell is entitled to this minimum military honor, namely a major general's commission.

I call attention again to the fact that General MacArthur, the greatest administrator of this age, wrote me in November 1945, commending my joint resolution. I had written to him, respectfully asking him to confirm the long unconfirmed report that he had voted against the court-martial verdict that had cashiered "Billy" Mitchell. This is what General MacArthur said in his reply:

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Thank you very much for the many kind and generous expressions contained in your letter which has just reached me.

I was one of "Billy" Mitchell's most intimate and devoted friends from the beginning to the end. Our families came from the same spot, Milwaukee, and enjoyed the most cordial intimacy for many decades. Your recollection of my part in his trial is entirely correct. It was fully known to him and he never ceased to express his gratitude for my attitude. It would be ridiculous for anyone to say that any posthumous honors that might be granted him would be embarrassing to me. He was a rare genius in his profession and contributed much to aviation history.

I know nothing of the discussion involved in your resolution, but do know that any part I played in his career should have no bearing whatsoever on the matter.

Out here we are making excellent progress. With renewed expressions of thanks and appreciation.

Very faithfully,

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR.

As will be observed in that letter General MacArthur said I was absolutely correct, namely, that he voted against the report of the majority when "Billy" Mitchell was court-martialed. Today we find that in connection with the matter we are considering the majority has been reversed. So I think the House of Representatives might well take heed.

Now the Robertson bill is coming over from the House. I ask that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and the committee immediately report it to the Senate, so that we can do this little bit for the memory of a great American.

BRASS-HAT REVENGE

In talking with Members of the House I have tried to find out why the deliberate, three-time action of the United States Senate has been set at naught. The answer is that the brass hats cannot forget or forgive "Billy" Mitchell for being so decidedly right. It appears, too, that there are those in the Congress who cannot forgive and forget "Billy" Mitchell for being so decidedly right.

My bill, Senate Joint Resolution 34, in its most recent excursion, was passed unanimously by the Senate on April 25, 1945. I have had written commital from Representative MAY, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, that favorable action on the bill in that committee would be speeded. But nothing has been done.

I have contacted both Democratic and Republican members on the committee and they have promised action. But nothing has been done. Mr. President, who owns the House Military Affairs Committee? Who owns the House of Representatives? Do the brass hats own it?

Some sinister influence has blocked that action three times now, and my resolution for "Billy's" major general commission is apparently going to die again in the House Military Affairs Committee.

I can assure my associates in the Senate that when we convene again they will have a chance to pass my resolution once more and send it to the House. I hope that by that time the people of this country will have spoken in no uncertain terms in relation to the vital issues before the country. If they do they will speak emphatically as to the rotten manner, the unmilitary manner, the begrudging manner with which this great American of Wisconsin origin has been treated by blind brass-hat influence.

CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive A, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, a convention on international civil aviation, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation of the kind and generous comments of the Senator from Wisconsin regarding the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and myself.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Maine admits they are true, does he not?

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall not deny them.

Mr. President, I rise to speak regarding this treaty and the situation in regard to international air transportation, because it seems to me of importance that the records of the Senate at this milestone in our progress should indicate very clearly the considerations which have affected the action of at least some of the Members of the Senate. First, I wish to pay a tribute of gratitude for the leadership of my associate, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the nestor of the Senate in air matters, and under whose leadership I have been happy to carry on my education in a field which is coming to be recognized as being of increasing significance. Not only in connection with the development of commercial aviation in America's future, but in regard to the security of the Nation, it stands in the same relationship as the merchant marine stands to our Navy, for it has long been recognized as a vital factor in the national defense. That is a very small parallel in regard to the significance of international aviation of a commercial character to the defenses of America in this aerial age. As American international aviation goes, so eventually must go the defenses of America, so far as concerns making the air secure.

Having but recently returned from observing from the air the explosion at Bikini, it seems to me that as we contemplate the narrowing of this globe as a result of aerial communication, as we establish weather obesrvation posts in the Arctic in order to enable us to overfly the poles, as will be easily feasible and as we shall demonstrate perhaps within the coming months, it becomes evident that a new day has dawned. While everyone agrees with these statements and while they seem trite because they are so true, yet I regret to say that there is also abundant evidence that the United States as a whole and that even the Members of Congress have not appreciated sufficiently the significance of the international commercial operations of this country and other countries in regard to the future progress and security of our land. So I rise to make clear in the RECORD that in the Senate, as we consider the International Convention on Aviation which was concluded at Chicago a year ago last November, there shall be no doubt as to how some of us, at least, feel regarding the significance of these steps and their profound importance to the future of our country.

I share the gratification expressed by the Senator from Nevada as to the announcement by the State Department this morning that notice is being served upon the other countries, parties to the agreement, that the so-called five-freedoms agreement is not one to which the United States will longer subscribe. From the inception of that agreement, proposed to the nations of the world at Chicago under the sponsorship of Adolph Berle, Under Secretary of State, I have firmly opposed it as being nicely calculated to wreck the future of American international aviation. And so it is with profound gratification that I read this morning the announcement of the State Department that approval given by executive action, without reference to this body, and, as most of us who are Members of the Commerce Committee believe, utterly without legislative or constitutional warrant, has now been withdrawn. That action marks a long step in the direction of the recognition of the policies which have seemed to many of us as being vital if America is to progress.

So I am prepared, along with the Senator from Nevada and other Senators who have been and are interested in the matter, not at this time actively to oppose the ratification of this convention, although I wish to suggest reasons why I think it would be much better if action were deferred for another 6 months.

I am ready to withdraw active opposition to the ratification of this treaty, first, because of the elimination of the five-freedoms agreement by the announcement of the State Department; and, second, because of the confidence which I have developed over an association of many years with two of the gentlemen who have recently entered the executive department with primary responsibility for aeronautics. I refer first, of course, to Mr. Edwin A. Locke, now special adviser to the President on aviation matters, who has come into this picture fresh from his experience with Donald Nelson of the War Production Board, where he was the liaison man with the Truman Committee, as it was then known, and where we formed a most favorable impression of his talents for public service, and his devotion to the public interest. Our favorable impression of him is also based on his subsequent association with Mr. Donald Nelson on his trip to China and the high responsibilities which he bore there, and later, after Mr. Nelson retired as active representative of America, in liquidating the remaining responsibilities of Mr. Nelson in that area. Since coming to the White House last spring as Special Assistant to the President on aviation matters, he has devoted himself to the single purpose of becoming informed with regard to this great field. While I cannot speak with regard to his influence, I cannot resist the impression that it is the result of the point of view which he has brought to this matter, and the advice which he has given, that we have had a new orientation of executive policy in this regard.

Mr. President, another reason for my willingness to withdraw my opposition to the ratification of this treaty is the recent appointment to the chairmanship of the Civil Aeronautics Board of Mr. James M. Landis, dean for many years of Harvard University Law School, whom I have known for 20 years, of whose devotion to the public service we have had great evidence in his former public services and particularly in his activities in the Middle East as representative of the United States in that very difficult area during recent years where he had an opportunity at first hand to be educated regarding the implications of international diplomacy, and where he accumulated a background which cannot but be of inestimable service not only to his Board but to the country in the position of great responsibility which he now occupies.

It is too early to expect that either of these gentlemen, coming so recently to this field, should have completed studies of policy which would enable them to go forward on lines which meet with the complete concurrence of members of the Senate who have studied the matter, but it is, at any rate, with profound gratification that we welcome this evidence of progress. During the recess of the Congress for the next few months, studies of these men who have so much authority and responsibility in the executive department, in association with whomever shall come to bear the responsibility in the State Department, will guarantee that American interests will be far more carefully considered than it has seemed to us hitherto has been the case.

When I speak regarding the State Department I wish it to be made clear that my statement contains no questioning with reference to the talents or capacity of Mr. Will Clayton, who, as Assistant Secretary, bears the primary responsibility in connection with this matter. But I think that Mr. Clayton has been the first to admit that, on account of a vast variety of other responsibilities which rest upon him, particularly in connection with the economic developments of recent years and months, it has not been possible for him to give but a very modicum of his time to the consideration of matters affecting aviation. Meanwhile, in the remainder of the State Department we have had a procession of men concerned with the matter since the early days when Mr. Adolph Berle, as Under Secretary, called the Chicago Conference and conducted it to which, by the designation of the President of the United States the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and myself were designated as delegates and served there as advisers in connection with the international efforts, and came away from there—I believe I am speaking for the Senator from North Carolina because he has publicly so expressed himself—profoundly concerned over the consequences of the United States adhering to the third, fourth, and fifth freedoms contained in the five freedoms we are considering today. The Senator from North Carolina went so far as to say that he thought it might be disastrous to American aviation interests if that policy continued to be the policy of the United States. In that behalf he expressed, I believe, the grave conclusion of the members of the Commerce Committee charged with the responsibility and discussion of this matter.

Mr. Berle was precipitately removed 4 days before the conclusion of the International Aviation Conference in Chicago, constituting one of the most amazing reversals in the history of our diplomatic relations. While Mr. Berle was permitted to go on and sign the agreement for this country, he obviously was discredited by the President on the very eve of consummating the negotiations which had been taking place at Chicago for 4 weeks. Thereafter Mr. Berle retired and went to South America as Ambassador, where, it seemed to me, his unfortunate influence on aviation policy was still apparent.

Following that time, Mr. Morgan, who was counsel in aviation matters, Mr. Baker, and other representatives of the State Department carried on, but there has been throughout the past 18 months, I believe, a feeling that the State Department, at any rate, preoccupied with all the other problems incident to the war, had utterly failed to grasp the profound significance of international aviation so far as America was concerned.

I would not say that it reflected the influence of any foreign countries, but certainly some of our foreign competitors in this field could have wished nothing more than that change of personnel and the relegation of the problem to the lower echelons of the State Department should be the policy we followed, while the number 1 man, and some of our leading authorities in this field were giving this problem some of their attention. Men of the first rank in diplomacy, commerce, and international affairs, were guiding the course against our competitors, while our problems were being resolved by men holding very humble positions in the State Department, and with practically no knowledge whatever, rather than by those in the upper echelons, such as the Assistant Secretary of State, or those in the position of Cabinet officers, or others in responsible places.

So it was in that atmosphere that a year ago last February it was announced that the "five freedoms" had been accepted by the President of the United States, and were going into effect without reference to the Senate, which is presumably, along with the House, the policy-making body of the country.

Thus the "five freedoms," which completely reversed the entire course of American policy so far as international operations were concerned, were declared in effect.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am one of a group here that is trying to get the facts before us so that we can intelligently act on the treaty. As I recall, in Chicago four documents were signed.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I think I understand that the first two were what we call executive agreements.

Mr. BREWSTER. No. The first one was the provisional convention. The second one is the treaty we now have before us. The third and fourth were the two transit and transport arrangements.

Mr. WHERRY. The other two were made by executive agreement?

Mr. BREWSTER. There were three which the Executive purported to accept, the first, which was the provisional, the third, which was the transit, and the fourth, which was the "five freedoms." Those three were accepted by executive agreements, or purported to be.

Mr. WHERRY. What we call the transport agreement is the treaty——

Mr. BREWSTER. It is No. 4.

Mr. WHERRY. And No. 4 is the one to which the Senator has reference today, as to which we are serving notice that we are going to withdraw?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The treaty now under consideration is the one in which we participated in the set-up?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is primarily concerned with technical problems, as we shall point out, to complete technical arrangements regarding our operations, but not committing us to the freedoms of the third.

Mr. WHERRY. Why do we have one of these documents come in as a treaty, for the Senate to act upon, and the other documents made apparently as executive agreements, which the Senate was not asked to ratify?

Mr. BREWSTER. That presents a problem which has been troubling a good many of us for 2 years, and it involved a very heated discussion in the Committee on Commerce, and in the committee we finally came to the conclusion, by a vote of 17 to 1, that it was illegal.

The Committee on Foreign Relations considered the matter, and, so far as I know, they never passed upon it. The three executive agreements have never been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations for ratification.

A very interesting constitutional question is presented as to how such a thing can be brought about. Assuming that the President makes executive agreements of any character, and does not submit them to the Foreign Relations Committee or to the Senate, how will the Senate take cognizance of such a situation? How will we bring the President to account? If it involved congressional action, appropriations, or designation of ambassadors, we would come into the picture, but otherwise we are presented with a very difficult problem.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, we are involved in this particular treaty because there is an appropriation connected with it?

Mr. BREWSTER. The State Department has from the beginning taken the position that this convention, or treaty, is a matter upon which the Senate must act, because it would run for a considerable period of time, and because it contains other obligations, for appropriations, as the Senator suggests, and other things, which require Senate consideration.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in that regard I think it might be well, together with what is so ably said by the Senator from Maine, to state that, with regard to the first one, that could well be handled by executive agreement, because it is only temporary in duration anyway.

Mr. BREWSTER. Running for 3 years .

Mr. WHERRY. For 3 years?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. How did we get notice of the executive agreement concerning the "five freedoms"?

Mr. BREWSTER. All we got was through the press. We read it in the newspapers. A press announcement was issued stating that the President had accepted the "five freedoms."

Mr. FERGUSON. For how long a period was the agreement which contained the "five freedoms" to run?

Mr. BREWSTER. There was no limitation on its duration, and it could be denounced on 1 year's notice; and that is the action which is being taken today.

Mr. FERGUSON. So that it will continue for 1 year?

Mr. BREWSTER. Even now; yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. The executive agreement will actually continue for another year?

Mr. BREWSTER. It will be as valid for the next year as it is today. Some of us do not believe it is valid today; but that is a matter which is still being argued.

I might point out that in connection with the treaty the situation is different; and that is one reason why I feel that it would be wiser to defer action on the treaty until next January, and for other reasons I shall point out. The treaty obligates us for 3 years, and thereafter we may retire on 1 year's notice. So that we are committed by this treaty for 4 years.

Mr. FERGUSON. Has the Senator ever seen the agreement containing the "five freedoms"?

Mr. BREWSTER. Oh, yes; we have a copy of it here. We formulated that at Chicago.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does that in any way conflict with the treaty we are considering today?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is called an appendix to it. It makes reference to it. Only those who are members of the international convention may become subscribers to the "five freedoms." You have to join the club before you can come into the "five freedoms." But you do not have to give the "five freedoms" because you are a member of the club.

Mr. FERGUSON. But the "five freedoms" conflict with the present treaty?

Mr. BREWSTER. No; they are entirely in accord with it. They are supposed to be a related part. It was all developed at Chicago, and the idea was that we would set up this international tribunal, and then all the countries that wanted to would accord the "five freedoms," and if they subscribed to them, would be obligated by them.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, in the Senator's judgment, if the "five freedoms" agreement is adhered to, is it not far more important than the treaty we are considering?

Mr. BREWSTER. By all odds. That is the whole gravamen of the thing. The "five freedoms" were the things that gave away America's air to all the world. Fifty-four nations could come here and do about as they pleased.

Mr. BROOKS. That was agreed to, and it started to be adhered to by the United States, without any consultation with the Senate at all?

Mr. BREWSTER. The President, in February 1945, announced our adherence, and notified the countries of the world that we were subscribers.

Mr. BROOKS. Now let me ask about the treaty. Does not that in effect set up an international board to deal with regulations and techniques?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS. And are we not by the pending treaty obliged to take the know-all of American aviation, which is by all odds superior to any aviation in the world, and put it in a common pot, so that any country can see it and use it?

Mr. BREWSTER. It goes further than that, because we are not only obliged to contribute American know-all, but also obliged to continue to contribute publicly all the agreements which United States air lines have with any foreign countries, or any foreign air lines, regarding operations. So that the complete story of how we built American international aviation to the position of preeminence, which it occupied before the war, has to be fully disclosed. That is one of the aspects of the agreement which I would wish could be further considered, and why I would prefer that we wait until next January before we ratify the treaty.

Mr. BROOKS. Is there any immediate necessity for ratification of this treaty?

Mr. BREWSTER. It has been urged by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I think I may say, on the ground that we needed to go forward, although the provisional arrangement has a year and a half to run—a year from next November. I cannot speak for the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I, at any rate, was not clear in my thought about the resolution at Montreal, which it seems to me has a very pertinent bearing on this matter. I refer to the resolution recently adopted at the conference in Montreal by the Provisional Assembly looking to its ratification, and seeming to me to make it very clear that we need be in no hurry. I shall read the first article of the resolution. It is an extract from the minutes of the fifth plenary meeting of the First Assembly, Appendix B, held at Montreal this spring, entitled "Article 18, Preparation of the International Civil Aviation Organization."

Resolved: 1. That all member states be urged to ratify the Convention on International Civil Aviation as soon as possible that the Interim Council be requested, as ratification progresses, to recommend to member states the procedure for depositing their instruments of ratification so that—

That is what to me is profoundly significant. I do not recall that our attention was called to it in the hearing before the Committee on Foreign Relations—so that all states which have not yet done so may deposit simultaneously their ratifications on the 1st of March 1947.

There are seven more articles, which I shall not read, but I ask that the entire excerpt be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM MINUTES, FIFTH PLENARY MEETING, FIRST ASSEMBLY (APPENDIX B)

XVIII. PREPARATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

Resolved:

1. That all member states be urged to ratify the Convention on International Civil Aviation as soon as possible and that the Interim Council be requested, as ratification progresses, to recommend to member states the procedure for depositing their instruments of ratification so that all states which have not yet done so may deposit simultaneously their ratifications on the 1st March 1947.

2. All member states should notify the Interim Council as early as possible, and if possible, during the present session of the Assembly, whether they are prepared or expect to conform to the preceding resolution.

3. That all member states should notify the Interim Council as and when they have accomplished the necessary preliminary legislative and other measures to enable them to deposit their instruments of ratification and that the Interim Council should notify all states of the progress of these measures.

4. That the Assembly, recognizing the necessity of continuity between the provisional and permanent organizations, directs that on the coming into force of the Convention the Interim Council, its officers, the secretariat, and other organs of the provisional organization shall continue to function under existing rules and regulations until they are replaced by corresponding organs of the permanent organization, or until the permanent Assembly or Council shall otherwise direct.

5. That on the coming into force of the Convention, the Interim Council shall call the first session of the Assembly, fix the time and place of its meeting and prepare its draft agenda, and that the president of the Interim Council shall open the Assembly and preside over it until a president has been elected.

6. In fixing the date for the convening of the first permanent Assembly, the Interim Council shall have regard to the importance of ensuring the widest representation of states on the Council of the permanent organization.

7. That the Interim Council shall prepare recommendations for the first permanent assembly with respect to the general organization of its work, basing such recommendations on the experience of PICAO, the development of international civil aviation and the powers conferred on the permanent organization by the Convention; and that the Interim Council shall prepare draft rules of procedure for the conduct of work in the Assembly, Council, commissions, and committees of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

8. That the first Assembly of the permanent organization shall be authorized to approve the statements of accounts of the last fiscal year of the provisional organization.

Mr. BREWSTER. The significance of that is that it is clearly indicated that the permanent convention is not to go into effect until March 1 under that resolution, which makes it very clear that if we should wait until January, when I think we will know a great deal more about this situation, because of the speed with which it is developing, we could ratify this treaty with equal effect, and we should be prejudiced in no way, and meanwhile there is functioning the provisional organization, to the support of which America is contributing most of the funds and most of the personnel that has carried on its activities.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I interpose to say that some nine countries have already ratified this convention, and they are necessarily building up an organization. When a sufficient number of countries have ratified they will form the council, and if we have not ratified we will have no part in it. If there is anything that is of supreme importance to this country it is to have some say-so in planning and mapping aviation standards for commercial aviation throughout the earth during the immediate future ahead of us. The extreme importance of it lies in the fact that we should become an early ratifying member so that we may have some opportunity of asserting our not inconsiderable influence in a field in which we have made so great progress.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia did not appreciate the significance of the resolution which I read.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, I think I do appreciate its significance. I saw it in the newspapers at the time. The Foreign Relations Committee considered it.

Mr. BREWSTER. On what does the Senator base the suggestion then that other countries may move in, when the resolution clearly provides that all remaining countries shall deposit ratifications simultaneously on March 1, and only nine have so far ratified out of the 26 that are required.

Mr. GEORGE. That simply means, as I take it, that the countries which do not ratify, so as to give life and validity to this treaty, are invited to be ready to deposit ratifications by March 1. If there are 26 countries which should ratify, 9 having already ratified, many of them now being ready to ratify, and we are not among the ratifying countries, we will naturally have no voice in the setting up of this technical international organization which will fix standards that will be so important in the general picture of commercial civil aviation in the future.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure the Senator at any rate does not interpret this language as I do, which clearly contemplates that—I read again:

Resolved, That all member states——

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely overlooking the first and early statement in which they urge immediate ratification of the identical convention which is now before the Senate. Then they proceed to say that the nations which do not ratify, however, are invited—that is the effect of it—and urged to be ready to deposit evidences of their ratification by next March.

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall read the language again.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator read the first part?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes. I shall read the entire resolution.

Resolved, That all member states be urged to ratify the Convention on International Civil Aviation as soon as possible.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. That does not say anything about March 1. March 1 relates to a different category.

Mr. BREWSTER. Let us go on. The only trouble is that there is no period and no semicolon there.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know from what the Senator is reading. Is he reading from a newspaper article?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am not. I regret that the Senator from Georgia was compelled to obtain his views regarding this matter from the newspapers, as I was, until from Montreal—not from our State Department—I secured a copy of the entire resolution, which completely demolished the foundation upon which the State Department had urged this ratification, I am happy to hand to the Senator from Georgia a copy of this excerpt from the minutes, so that he may be informed regarding it, as I think the State Department should have furnished it to him when this matter was under consideration.

I now proceed to read. After the initial statement—

That all member states be urged to ratify the Convention on International Civil Aviation as soon as possible—

It continues—

and that the Interim Council be requested, as ratification progresses—

Mark that language, "as ratification progresses"— to recommend to member states the procedure for depositing their instruments of ratification so that all states which have not yet done so may deposit simultaneously their ratifications on the 1st of March, 1947.

Now I should like to make it clear why in my judgment that was adopted. It was adopted so that there should be no danger that the permanent convention, which would come into effect on the ratification by 26 states, should happen inopportunely. In other words, the interim council clearly contemplated that it should continue to function until next March 1, and meanwhile if they could secure the necessary 26 states they wanted them to come in at that time and file their instruments of ratification so that the permanent convention could then go into effect.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator's interpretation of the resolution cannot be correct, because the convention does come into being, into life, and does supersede the interim agreement when 26 nations sign. This obviously refers only to those who have not previously——

Mr. BREWSTER. Who have not "yet."

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, who have not yet.

Mr. BREWSTER. Who have not yet done so, meaning all the states except nine.

Mr. GEORGE. Who have not yet done so on the 1st of March next year.

Mr. BREWSTER. No; who have not yet done so, referring to the present time.

Mr. GEORGE. In my opinion, the resolution is not subject to such interpretation. I read:

That all member states be urged to ratify the Convention on International Civil Aviation—

The convention which is now before the Senate—

as soon as possible, and that the Interim Council be requested, as ratification progresses, to recommend to member states the procedure for depositing their instruments of ratification so that all states which have not yet done so may deposit simultaneously their ratifications on the 1st of March 1947.

It clearly contemplates that if all states can be persuaded to ratify or see fit to ratify even before March 1, that they will proceed, because the convention itself is controlling, and it comes into being, and the Council is set up when 26 states actively ratify. If we are not among the ratifying states, we will not have any voice in setting up the international organization.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the difficulty of the Senator is because he does not distinguish between "ratification" and "deposit of ratification."

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; I do. The deposit of ratification is simply——

Mr. BREWSTER. We are going to, we hope, ratify it. That is ratification. But not until its deposit with the named government does it become effective and the convention go into effect, and this resolution is obviously drawn with that distinction clearly in mind. The Senator will notice that the next section, section 2, reads:

That all member states should notify the Interim Council as early as possible, and, if possible, during the present session of the Assembly, whether they are prepared or expect to conform to the preceding resolution.

SEC. 3 That all member states should notify the Interim Council as and when they have accomplished the necessary preliminary legislative and other measures to enable them to deposit their instruments of ratification and that the Interim Council should notify all states of the progress of these measures.

In other words, they draw clearly and all the time, the distinction between the ratification by the competent constitutional tribunal, and deposit of the instruments of ratification in order that the convention may not go into effect until the 1st of March 1947, when it will then proceed.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the Senator explain the Interim Council? In the meantime, what organization is set up?

Mr. BREWSTER. That council was set up under what was called the Interim Convention for 3 years from November 1944 at Chicago, and has been functioning. It is a council of 21 members, and they have been doing a great deal of preliminary ground work on technical arrangements as to international aviation.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it the Senator's understanding that the 21 individuals constituting the Interim Council will continue to act?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes, until on the first of March the ratifications are deposited, and then the new arrangement is set up. Then they will form the permanent convention or the permanent assembly and council.

Mr. BROOKS. Do we, as in connection with almost everything else, contribute the major portion of the fund to this Interim Council?

Mr. BREWSTER. Under the provisions of both the interim and the permanent organization the Assembly determines the assessments. That was one thing the executive department recognized it could not do, and so in the announcement of adherence the executive department stipulated that so far as the payment of the assessment was concerned the United States could not be committed without action of the Congress. That was reserved in respect to the interim organization. With respect to the permanent organization of course it will be covered by the ratification by the Senate, if that takes place.

Mr. BROOKS. I desire to join in the Senator's view that this could very well be left until the next Congress, when we shall have ample time, before the 1st of March, to consider it in the light of events occurring between now and then.

Mr. BREWSTER. The discussion regarding the situation in Montreal is one of the major reasons why I felt it would be very well to defer action on the treaty until January, without incurring any possibility of confusion in the functioning of the permanent council.

I desire now to discuss the permanent treaty, which is the matter we are considering today. At the time of the Chicago conferences there was a proposal by New Zealand that all international air services should be operated by one world air line. That was the proposal of New Zealand, which, however, was rejected.

Subsequent to the agreement, Mr. Berle in a magazine article outlining his views, indicated that the world air line was the ultimate solution. That was a world air line in which all nations should participate, and no nation should be allowed to maintain any international air service of its own, either privately or publicly.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. This seems to be a matter that is troublesome to some Senators. The convention itself which we are now called upon to consider provides that it shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states. I read from the convention:

The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America, which shall give notice of the date of the deposit to each of the signatories and adhering states.

When 26 states adhere the permanent organization goes into effect, and we shall have no part in it unless we shall have adhered to it by the time of the organization of the permanent council. What the interim council in Canada was trying to do was undoubtedly to stimulate an interest in the early ratification, and asking those who had not ratified to get ready to do so, to take the preliminary steps, and finally to make the deposit of their notices of ratification by at least March 1. The document is here before the Senate. There is no doubt that when 26 nations ratify it and notify the United States Government in Washington that they have ratified, the international organization will go into effect; and if we are not then a party to it, we shall be on the side lines.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have had no disposition at any time to dispute the position of the Senator in that regard. That is clearly the provision of the convention which we are considering. But I am also entirely clear that the resolution of the international provisional group will undoubtedly control, because the 21 states which are most interested were meeting at Montreal——

Mr. GEORGE. I do not care to argue the matter with the Senator now, but the interim organization itself is purely temporary. When this convention is ratified it will take the place of the interim organization. That is the whole purpose of the program.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to conclude what I was saying, the resoution of the 21 states meeting at Montreal will be conclusive, not on the matter of the interpretation of the agreement, but on the matter of the policy of the adhering states, because those 21 states are the ones most concerned with aviation. I believe that my interpretation of their resolution is correct, but I shall not seek further to labor the point. It seems to me that nothing could be clearer than that the 21 states meeting at Montreal desired that the deposit of the ratifications should be delayed for the very purpose of bringing the whole thing into operation on March 1, 1947. That was the first reason why I felt it would be wiser to wait.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. How many States have already ratified?

Mr. BREWSTER. Nine.

Mr. AIKEN. If we ratify, we shall be the tenth.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me add that nine have already ratified, and we have notice that several other States are now taking steps to ratify.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in the light of what the distinguished Senator from Georgia has said?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me correct the last statement. I am informed that 11 States have now ratified.

Mr. WHERRY. If we were not to ratify this convention today, and were to proceed under the theory that if we ratified it by March 1 we would come under the provisions of the permanent international body, is it the Senator's position that we would not jeopardize our rights, that we could operate under the Interim Council up until March 1, and that at any time we might ratify the convention, up until that time, we would become a member of the international organization?

Mr. BREWSTER. Again it is apparently entirely a question of construction of language, and of procedure. The Senator from Georgia is quite correct when he says that if 26 States should deposit their instruments of ratification with this Government the convention would go into effect.

Mr. WHERRY. Would that foreclose us?

Mr. BREWSTER. No. We could then ratify. The argument has been that the convention might go into effect during the next 4 months, while the Congress was in recess. My position is that the resolution at Montreal clearly indicated that the deposit of instruments of ratification would be deferred until March 1, for what I think are very good and sufficient reasons. I have no concern whatever that there will be any premature action; but that is a matter which I presume honest men may argue.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further observation?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not seem to me that the point is even arguable. Here is a convention which provides expressly that it shall go into effect when 26 states have ratified it by depositing in Washington, with our Government, their instruments of ratification. They are not to be deposited with the interim council. The interim council has no power on earth to change or modify the convention; and if the convention is ratified by 26 states, then under the terms of the convention itself those 26 states must set up the permanent organization. The interim council has no authority or power to change the treaty. We could thereafter come into the organization. We could wait until March of next year, or longer if we so desired. We could then come into the international organization. But the first 26 nations ratifying it will set up the permanent organization, and will, of course, have a voice with respect to many important matters which affect our interest. We now have a considerable influence in the control of the existing organization; but if 26 other states should precede us in ratification the permanent organization would go into effect, and we would have no voice in the matter. We might subsequently join and become a party to the convention. That is true; but the interest of the United States undoubtedly is to have some voice in the establishment of the organization itself commensurate with the considerable influence which we have in the field of commercial international aviation.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia advise the Senate whether or not he has any assurance that, assuming that we ratify this convention, the instrument of ratification will be duly deposited with the United States Government immediately, rather than being deferred until March 1, 1947?

Mr. GEORGE. According to the information which I have, it will be deposited immediately with the United States Government. Eleven states have already deposited their instruments of ratification.

Mr. BREWSTER. Can the Senator say who has given him that information?

Mr. GEORGE. It has come to me from the State Department, from the Assistant Secretaries who have appeared before the committee.

Mr. BREWSTER. So the Senator, acting for the Committee on Foreign Relations, is entirely confident that our instrument of ratification would be immediately deposited?

Mr. GEORGE. Undoubtedly, if we should ratify the convention.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the convention which we are considering runs for 3 years, with the right of denunciation on 1 year's notice after that time. It commits us for 3 years.

When I was interrupted, I was speaking of the world air line which was advocated by New Zealand, which Mr. Berle, in his magazine article, advocated as the ultimate solution of this whole problem, eliminating all international air transport except that of one international service—a most interesting indication of the internationalization of one of the most important functions in the world of transportation. It is very interesting to note that subsequently, at Montreal, Great Britain indicated that it was giving serious consideration to a plan of that character which might result from the pooling arrangements which it has had under consideration.

As has been previously stated, the convention has no direct relation to the bilateral arrangements under which American policy has been carried on. The Committee on Commerce has expressed itself 17 to 1, and has filed with the Senate its opinion, that the bilateral arrangements are beyond the executive power under the Civil Aeronautics Act which was recommended to the Senate by the Commerce Committee, and which all those responsible for its formulation agree was to be interpreted as requiring a quasi-judicial hearing before the Civil Aeronautics Board, exactly as is required in the case of domestic air lines, before a foreign air line should be granted a permit to operate in the United States.

All the legal opinions previously have been to the same effect—not only the opinion of the Members who sponsored this measure in the Congress in 1938, but the opinion of Mr. L. Welch Pogue, who, as general counsel of the Civil Aeronautics Board, was asked this question, and who filed an extended opinion on October 18, 1939, in which he laid down very clearly his views on the subject. Subsequently Mr. Pogue was chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board and served until very recently. He is still actively identified with aeronautics. I have before me the memorandum opinion of Mr. Pogue, filed with the Civil Aeronautics Board in response to this question. I ask unanimous consent to have the opinion printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 18, 1939.

OPINION MEMORANDUM

To: The Authority.

From: The General Counsel (Hon. L. Welch Pogue).

Subject: Relation between sections 402, 1102, and other pertinent provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938.

This opinion memorandum is submitted in response to your request of August 15, 1939, submitting the difficulties introduced into international negotiations by section 402 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, hereinafter generally referred to as the "Act," if it must be held to prevail over all other provisions of the act dealing with problems of foreign air transportation; and pointing out the impossibility (if that section must be so interpreted) of giving a foreign government any specific assurance that one of its air carriers will be admitted to the United States on a particular international route as a consideration for the granting by such foreign government to American air carriers of an appropriate reciprocal right of admission to the country concerned. Acting upon your request, I have reviewed the pertinent provisions of the act and a memorandum on this question, a copy of which is attached, has been prepared for me by Mr. Barber of my staff.

I. CONCLUSIONS

In reply to the specific question which you submitted to me I submit the following general conclusions:

1. A self-executing treaty,[1] of the type described below between the United States and any foreign country or countries would, if properly worded, legally supersede any provision of section 402 which might be inconsistent therewith so that, for example, foreign air carriers could enter the United States under the terms set forth in such treaty. The term "self-executing treaty" when used herein means a treaty complete in itself, and which requires no further action by Congress to clarify it or render its provisions operative, such as a treaty specifically providing, among other things, that foreign air carriers, certified or otherwise identified by the foreign government, be admitted to the United States, notwithstanding and without regard to the provisions of section 402 which requires notice and hearing and the exercise of the Authority's judgment in the premises, and providing means by which any permits (or other specified authorization) should be issued.

2. No international agreement, as distinguished from a treaty, can be made between the United States and any foreign country or countries which will have the legal effect of dispensing with the notice and hearing, and the exercise of the Authority's judgment, called for by section 402 of the act; and the provisions of any such agreement designed to accomplish such an end could not be enforced in our courts. Thus, in the absence of any self-executing treaty, section 402 must be observed in the issuance of permits to foreign air carriers and in the alteration, modification, amendment, suspension, cancellation, or revocation thereof.

II. DISCUSSION

A brief statement of my reasons for the above-mentioned conclusions follows, and a detailed review of the various authorities on the legal questions involved appeared in Mr. Sarber's above-mentioned memorandum.

[1] The word "treaty" as used herein means a treaty ratified by the Senate of the United States, and includes any convention (i. e., an agreement between the United States and foreign countries) when so ratified. The word "agreement" when used herein includes all other forms of agreement between the United States and a foreign country or countries.

A. SECTION 402

Section 402 of the act not only requires notice and hearing upon an application before a permit may be issued to a foreign air carrier but also requires the Authority to exercise its judgment upon the question of whether or not the particular applicant should receive a permit. The test on this matter is couched in the following language in clause (b) of section 402:

"(b) The Authority is empowered to issue such a permit if it finds that such carrier is fit, willing, and able properly to perform such air transportation and to conform to the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and requirements of the Authority hereunder, and that such transportation will be in the public interest."

It should be noted particularly that section 402 contains an absolute prohibition against any foreign air carrier engaging in foreign air transportation without a permit. The pertinent part of clause (a) of section 402 dealing with this point reads as follows:

"No foreign air carrier shall engage in foreign air transportation unless there is in force a permit issued by the Authority authorizing such carrier so to engage."

It should also be noted that in connection with altering, modifying, amending, suspending, cancelling, or revoking any permit, a notice and hearing and the exercise of the Authority's judgment are likewise required by clause (g) of section 402.

But even though section 402 seems clear in terms, the question arises as to whether or not the control, particularly and specifically granted to the Authority by section 402, has been in whole or in part superseded or modified by any other statutory provision. The first of the other statutory provisions to be considered in this connection is section 1102 of the act.

B. RELATION OF SECTIONS 402 AND 1102

Does section 1102 require the issuance of permits pursuant to the terms of any agreement (as distinguished from a treaty) without regard to the provisions of section 402? Section 1102 provides as follows:

"SEC. 1102. In exercising and performing its powers and duties under this act, the Authority shall do so consistently with any obligation assumed by the United States in any treaty, convention, or agreement that may be in force between the United States and any foreign country or foreign countries, shall take into consideration any applicable laws and requirements of foreign countries and shall not, in exercising and performing its powers and duties with respect to certificates of convenience and necessity, restrict compliance by any air carrier with any obligation, duty, or liability imposed by any foreign country: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any obligation, duty, or liability arising out of a contract or other agreement, heretofore or hereafter entered into between an air carrier, or any officer or repesentative thereof, and any foreign country, if such contract or agreement is disapproved by the Authority as being contrary to the public interest."

Deferring for a moment a consideration of the authority necessary for the creation of a valid treaty, convention, or agreement, let us assume that an international argeement is made on behalf of the United States by the President with a foreign country, providing that any person designated by the competent air authorities of the foreign country should be permitted to fly over a designated route into the United States, to a named point, on a stated frequency in exchange, let us say, for certain reciprocal privileges granted to the United States by such foreign country. The question then arises as to whether or not such person would be required to file an application and secure a permit under the provisions of section 402; and, if so, whether or not the Authority in passing upon any such application so filed would be required to hold a public hearing but, because of the provisions of section 1102 (requiring the Authority to exercise its powers and duties consistently with the obligations assumed in such agreement), merely to go through the form of exercising its judgment in a perfunctory manner and without giving effect to the standards established in section 402.

It will be remembered that certain provisions of clause (a) of section 402 prohibit any foreign air carrier from engaging in foreign air transportation unless there is in force a permit issued by the Authority authorizing such air carrier so to engage. There is no express provision in section 1102 that the Authority shall disregard any other express requirements or prohibitions of the act, or that the Authority shall fail to exercise any of its powers and duties to be performed under any of the other provisions of the act. On the contrary, the provisions of this section clearly assume that such other powers and duties will, in general, be performed. Accordingly, it seems clear that an application would have to be filed and a permit issued under section 402 before the carrier could engage in foreign air transportation.

As to the question of whether or not the Authority would have to hold a hearing but merely go through the form of exercising its judgment in a perfunctory manner, a difficult question of statutory construction arises. In a situation of this kind where provisions of the same act are apparently inconsistent, it becomes necessary to resort to means other than the use of the plain meaning of the language to ascertain the underlying legislative intent. In this connection, it is important to bear in mind certain fundamental principles of statutory construction. It will not be presumed that Congress has done a vain thing and every effort must be made to give each provision of the statute its intended meaning and effect so that each provision will, insofar as possible, harmonize with other provisions of the statute, thus permitting each provision to be effective. Accordingly, it will not be presumed that Congress has done a vain thing in providing in section 402 for notice and hearing and the exercise of the Authority's judgment, and, therefore, if the operation of the provisions of that section comes in conflict with the operation of the provisions of section 1102, established principles of statutory construction require that the more particular and specific provisions of section 402 must prevail over the broader and more comprehensive provisions of section 1102 and that the latter must be limited to cases not within the language of the particular or specific provisions. As indicated above, section 1102 refers to "powers and duties under this act," i. e., all powers and duties in general, whereas section 402 confers upon the Authority the power and duty to take action for the accomplishment of objectives specifically set forth in that section pursuant to standards therein established.

Entirely apart from the statutory construction problem with respect to the relationship of section 402 and 1102, is the question of whether or not there is in the statutory or nonstatutory law a basis for making of a treaty or agreement which could have the legal effect of superseding or modifying some or all of the provisions of section 402. This question will now be considered.

It is clear that a self-executing treaty made after the enactment of the act, if properly worded, would legally supersede any provisions of section 402 which might be inconsistent therewith. This result follows because by article VI of the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution, the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States, are the supreme law of the land. Thus, treaties and laws of the United States are placed on the same plane and a treaty would supersede any provisions inconsistent therewith contained in a law of the United States theretofore enacted; and any treaty would in turn be superseded by provisions inconsistent therewith contained in any later law of the United States. It should be noted, however, that no provisions of either a law of the United States or a treaty will be superseded by any later treaty or law, respectively, except pursuant to express language or pursuant to necessary implication such as would exist if a provision of a treaty were inconsistent with a provision of a law of the United States theretofore enacted so that it would be impossible to give effect to both provisions. The vital importance of careful draftsmanship is, therefore, apparent.

However, as to an agreement made on behalf of the United States by the President (and not ratified by the Senate) as distinguished from a treaty, a different problem is presented.

The legal status of such agreements deserves notice. In the absence of authorizing legislation, agreements made by the President (and which have never attained the status of a treaty) cannot be regarded as creating law which our courts are called upon to recognize or enforce because that would involve the approval of an improper delegation of the treaty power. However, certain agreements may, in the absence of authorizing legislation, be made by the President, which are legal and enforceable in our courts (to the extent of their power to enforce them). Thus, if the act had not been enacted and if there were no other applicable statute dealing with the matter, the President would have power to make agreements with foreign countries relating to the access to this country of foreign aircraft. His right to do this flows from the general power of the Executive to prohibit physical contact with our territory in a manner prejudicial to the interests of the United States; but the exercise of that power would be subject to subsequent action of Congress. However, it seems to be well established that where Congress has acted with respect to the method or means of permitting or prohibiting physical contact with our territory the President alone has no power to make agreements on the same subject, but must carry out the provisions of the statute. In the case before us, Congress has acted specifically with reference to the way in which foreign air carriers may obtain permission to enter the United States. Accordingly (unless there exists specific statutory authorization for the Executive to make such agreements), no executive agreement can legally be made based on the Executive's general nonstatutory power, referred to above, which would have the effect of interfering with the operation of the provisions of section 402.

We next turn to see whether or not there exists specific statutory authorization for the Executive to ener into agreements concerning the entry of foreign air carriers into the United States which is clear enough to authorize the making of agreements which would supersede or modify the provisions of section 402. Section 1102 contains no language specifically authorizing the making of such agreements, but merely states, among other things, that the Authority shall perform its powers and duties consistently with the obligations assumed by the United States in any agreements. No such specific statutory authorization has been found, but the provisions of section 802 should be noted in this connection.

C. SIGNIFICANCE OF SECTION 802 IN ITS RELATION TO SECTIONS 402 AND 1102

The provisions of section 802 harmonize with the principles and conclusions heretofore reached with respect to the status of the provisions of section 402. Section 802 provides as follows:

"SEC. 802. The Secretary of State shall advise the Authority of, and consult with the Authority concerning, the negotiation of any agreements with foreign governments for the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services."

The legislative history of the Civil Aeronautics Act reveals that in a bill considered on the floor of the Senate this section authorized the Secretary of State to negotiate with foreign countries with a view to entering into such agreements and to conclude such agreements "as may be satisfactory to the Authority and to the President." This proposal provoked considerable debate in the Senate, the objection being that it was an improper attempt to curtail the power of the President and his agent, the Secretary of State, to conduct foreign negotiations and enter into agreements and treaties. After this debate, the section was changed to its present form, leaving it very difficult to ascertain the exact effect which Congress intended by the change. However, the Committee hearings indicate the general understanding to have been that the agreements referred to would be of a nature dealing generally with such matters as the freedom of innocent passage from one country to another, the honoring by each country of pilot certificates issued by the other, and the recognition by each country of certificates of air worthiness for export issued by the other country; and that any specific operation by an individual carrier to a foreign country would be authorized by permit issued to such carrier by the foreign country concerned.

Whatever may be the exact scope of section 802 in recognizing by implication that agreements may be made with foreign countries for the "establishment and development of air navigation, including air routes and services", it is clear that the thrust of section 802 is merely that the Secretary of State shall advise the Authority at some time of, and consult the Authority at some time concerning, the negotiation of agreements of the kind specified. Section 802 contains no affirmative grant of power but, as just indicated, imposes certain responsibilities and obligations upon the Secretary of State in connection with the negotiation of the agreements therein mentioned. In any event, it seems clear that this section with its very general language cannot be deemed to have authorized the President to make agreements inconsistent with the provisions of section 402.

D. THE PRESIDENT'S SUPREME POWER UNDER SECTION 801 DOES NOT ELIMINATE THE AUTHORITY'S DUTY UNDER SECTION 402

Finally, it must be observed that the issuance, denial, transfer, amendment, cancellation, suspension or revocation of, and the terms, conditions and limitations contained in, any certificate authorizing an air carrier to engage in overseas or foreign air transportation "shall be subject to the approval of the President" with the result that he is the final and supreme judge of these matters. Section 801 of the act provides as follows:

"SEC. 801. The issuance, denial, transfer, amendment, cancellation, suspension, or revocation of, and the terms, conditions, and limitations contained in any certificate authorizing an air carrier to engage in overseas or foreign air transportation, or air transportation between places in the same Territory or possession, or any permit issuable to any foreign air carrier under section 402, shall be subject to the approval of the President. Copies of all applications in respect of such certificates and permits shall be transmitted to the President by the Authority before hearing thereon, and all decisions thereon by the Authority shall be submitted to the President before publication thereof. This section shall not apply to the issuance or denial of any certificate issuable under section 401 (e) or any permit issuable under section 402 (c) or to the original terms, conditions, or limitations of any such certificate or permit."

From this section it appears that it was the intent of Congress to make the President the final and supreme judge of whether affirmative or negative action should be taken with respect to the matters specified, including the question of whether or not a permit should be issued in any given case. As illustrating the power of the President under this section, let us consider the result where the President disapproves of the issuance by the Authority of an application for a permit filed with it under section 402. Section 1006 (a) specifically exempts orders of the Authority which are subject to the approval of the President from judicial review, and here, again, is indicated the intent of Congress to give the President the power to take final action with respect to the matters specified in section 801. In case the President should disapprove a denial by the Authority of an application for a permit, it is assumed for the purposes of this opinion memorandum that a court, upon petition by the appropriate party, would, by some applicable legal action, compel the Authority to issue a permit in accordance with the decision of the President.

Under these circumstances, the question arises as to why it is not possible, if the President is the final judge of such matters, for the President to enter into commitments in advance with respect to the disposition ultimately to be made by the President of applications filed under section 402. In the first place, as has already been pointed out, there would be no legal authorization for the making of such an agreement and consequently it might be difficult to persuade a particular foreign government to become a party thereto. In the second place, such moral obligation as might be created by such an agreement could not possibly be binding upon any President other than the one making it and this, again, would be a factor presumably making it difficult to persuade a foreign government to become a party to the agreement. Thus it may be assumed that no such agreement can be depended upon to accomplish the desired result because of its legal invalidity and, as a result of that fact, of the impossibility of giving the foreign country the assurances which it will presumably require.

Furthermore, no valid implication of an intent on the part of Congress to authorize the President to enter into such agreements is contained in the provisions of section 801. It seems clear that questions of international relations and national defense may well be of overruling importance so that the Executive should have the right to make the ultimate decision as to whether or not a permit should be issued in a particular case. It appears to have been the intent of Congress to require a public hearing for the disclosure of such facts as may be made thereat by the applicant and other interested persons so that the President would have the advantage both of the record and of the Authority's judgment (exercised under the standards established in sec. 402) before he is called upon in connection with reaching a final decision to superimpose his judgment formed after he has analyzed such additional facts relating to international relations and national defense as he, alone, may have. The disclosure of facts at a public hearing, referred to above, would presumably include facts bearing on questions of public interest, including (a) the carrier's fitness, willingness, and ability properly to perform the air transportation service in question, and to conform to the provisions of the act and the rules, regulations, and requirements of the Authority thereunder; (b) relevant information concerning the effect of the proposed operation upon the operations of American air carriers serving the point within the United States proposed to be served by an applicant for a permit, or serving points competitive therewith; (c) relevant information concerning foreign air carriers from whatever country desirous of serving the same or competitive points; and (d) relevant facts to be used as a basis for attaching to the permit by the Authority of such reasonable terms, conditions, or limitations as the public interest may require involving various questions of safety, competition, and the proper coordination of the air transport system.

My conclusion, therefore, is that except with respect to self-executing treaties (which, by appropriate language might not only supersede the provisions of sec. 402 but also those of sec. 801), no agreements can be made, while the act retains in its present form unamended, which will eliminate the necessity for compliance with the provisions of section 402.

Mr. BREWSTER. I shall quote only one passage from the opinion, as affirming the position which I take. In response to the question as to whether this subject could be handled by executive agreements, Mr. Pogue stated, in paragraph 2 on page 2 of the opinion, in a summary:

No international agreement, as distinguished from a treaty, can be made between the United States and any foreign country or countries which will have the legal effect of dispensing with the notice and hearing and the exercise of the Authority's judgment—

called for by section 402 of the act; and the provisions of any such agreement designed to accomplish such an end could not be enforced in our courts. Thus, in the absence of any self-executing treaty, section 402 must be observed in the issuance of permits to foreign air carriers, and in the alteration, modification, amendment, suspension, cancelation, or revocation thereof.

Mr. Pogue discusses the legal reasons for that opinion at some length, with arguments which are completely compelling.

Subsequently, the Civil Aeronautics Board asked the Congress to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act so as to authorize the President to develop our foreign air routes by bilateral executive agreements in the broad fashion which now is being done without the amendment of the law, inasmuch as the Congress had never seen fit to adopt the recommendation of the Civil Aeronautics Board in its annual report of 1942. Here again was controlling evidence that at that time the Board considered that it was utterly beyond its powers to carry out such an arrangement without a further statutory amendment of the law. Subsequently, Mr. Wiprud, who at that time was in charge of the Transportation Division of the Department of Justice, retiring therefrom about a year ago, wrote an extended opinion, which was published in the George Washington Law Journal of April 1945, with the permission of the Department of Justice, although that does not necessarily imply the Department's acceptance of his views. But he was the man then counseling with the Department in regard to its transportation matters, and he wrote a most extensive and authoritative exposition of the law and the precedents in this case, showing his complete agreement with the opinion of Mr. Pogue.

I say all this, not because it is directly related to our problem here but because the President in submitting the treaty to the Senate stated that he was carrying on the matter in the same fashion—a fashion which the Committee on Commerce had found to be utterly beyond his powers.

Assuming the ratification of the treaty, which, as the Senator from Georgia has said, in no way implies approval or disapproval of that procedure, I hope that the executive department may exercise the greatest self-restraint in regard to the assumption of powers in this regard and in the execution of bilateral agreements, either pending the time when the Congress accepts the recommendation of the Civil Aeronautics Boad to amend the law and to confer upon the President such additional powers, which have been allocated by the Executive, or until there is a further determination of policy by the Congress.

I think we have fully discussed the general matter of delay, and I shall not discuss it further. It is an interpretation of the language of the Interim Council, at Montreal. It seems to me it is very definite as to what their plans are, and I shall be very much surprised if the construction which I have placed upon this instrument is not confirmed by those immediately concerned with this matter and by Mr. Wanner, who was the representative of the United States at Montreal.

There are two other provisions of the agreement which I think the Senate should at least understand thoroughly in connection with the question of ratification of the treaty. One is as to the nonschedule operations. This is a field which is developing increasing significance.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Some time since either the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] asked a question as to which of these instruments namely, the Convention or the other arrangements embodying the "five freedoms," was of the greater importance. I should like to have the Senator's comment on that point. The message which the President sent to the Senate in connection with the transmittal of this convention to the Senate contains the following statement:

> The convention makes no attempt to cover controversial questions of commercial aviation rights. It leaves these questions to be settled by other international agreements, which are entirely independent of the convention, and which provide for the reciprocal exchange of commercial air transport rights. Under authority vested in me, I have actively undertaken to consummate such agreements, in order to assure the most favorable development of international civil aviation. Naturally, agreements of this nature to which the United States is a party are consistent with the requirements of the Civil Aeronautics Act, are valid under its terms, and fully protect the public interest. Under these agreements, before foreign air-carrier permits are issued by the United States to foreign airlines, they must qualify under the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act.

Mr. President, I pause at this point in reading the President's letter of transmittal to say that I take it from the discussion which I have heard in part that the Senator has the view that the other agreements, so-called, are of greater importance and deal with matters of more concern to the United States in the aviation field than does the convention itself, and that the President in his message to the Foreign Relations Committee recognizes that distinction. Am I correct about that?

Mr. BREWSTER. That is correct, and that is why it has given us so much concern that the major determinations on our foreign air policy were being made by executive action, whereas the comparatively minor phases as to technical developments are being submitted to the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Yes. Then, up to this time, at least, the President's proposal has been to leave the matters of moment or controversy or consequence to himself, and he was proposing to deal with them by executive agreements, whereas he was proposing to leave to the Senate only the matters of lesser consequence.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; matters of far lesser consequence.

Mr. WHITE. This matter has bothered me greatly. I had the feeling that we were ready to go forward with ratification of the treaty if—and I shall read from the hearings—

> If the convention or treaty which is considered here—

In other words, the treaty now before us—

> could be entirely separated from the implications of the other agreements which are proceeding, I do not think anyone would have any question about the desirability of immediately going forward.

I suppose that means going forward with the ratification of this treaty.

I have not heard read the statement which comes from the State Department, and I do not know its terms. But I should like to have my colleague's opinion as to whether this treaty is separated from the implications of the other agreements which are proceeding, or whether it is not separated.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it was a little unfortunate as to the terminology which was used in the so-called five freedoms, as characterized in the document submitted by the State Department and in the official agreements as appendix 4 of the convention which we are considering.

However, I think the action of the United States Government this morning in denouncing that agreement makes it perfectly clear that we are in no way committed under it. While it is certainly interwoven, and while it is true that no one may be a party to appendix 4 who is not a party to the convention, the reverse is not true, namely, that we are now committed to appendix 4 because we signed the permanent convention.

Mr. WHITE. Taking all the factors into consideration, I wonder, then, whether those of us who had indicated our disapproval of the other arrangements, but had found no great fault with the treaty itself, are in a position in good faith to vote to ratify the treaty or whether we are free, under the circumstances, to exercise our judgment and to express our fears by casting an adverse vote.

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly should not undertake to dictate the course of my colleague's vote.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has never undertaken to do so, but the senior Senator from Maine usually feels much safer when he follows his colleague.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have indicated that in view of the denunciation of the "five freedoms," I was not prepared actively to oppose—I think those were the words which were used—the ratification of the treaty at this time, although I did preserve in all the preliminary discussions the right to state fully the situation so that there would be no misapprehension on the part of the Senate as the considerations which were involved, and I did indicate clearly to those in the executive department with whom I discussed the subject that I thought it would be very much better judgment for them to defer action on this treaty until January. If, however, they force action at this time, I hesitate to take the very serious responsibilities involved in indicating such dissension on matters of our foreign policy and on a matter which is rendered of very much less moment because of the denunciation of the "five freedoms." So if I vote for the treaty today, I shall do so with reluctance and with an indication that I believe the Executive is unwise in pressing for it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may intervene at this point, let me say that confusion has arisen in the minds of some Senators, I think, regarding the exhibit or appendix 4, which is the "five freedoms" agreement. It is not an exhibit to this treaty at all. The treaty, too, is an appendix. That is simply an appendix to the Chicago Convention—the International Convention which was assembled at Chicago for quite a time.

Number 2 is the treaty upon which we are passing, No. 4 is not directly connected with it in any manner. It is not an appendix to the treaty, but it is merely an appendix to the work of the Convention as a whole.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is quite correct, namely, that these various matters are appendices to the Chicago agreement. Whether appendix 4 has any relation to appendix 2, is a question which I shall have to leave to the authorities on anatomy. I think it is unfortunate terminology. I think it would have been better if they had called them something else than appendices.

However, in connection with the Senator's statement and the statement in the President's letter that, under these agreements, before foreign air carrier permits are issued to foreign air lines, they must qualify under the Civil Aeronautics Act, Mr. Pogue, the predecessor to Mr. Landis, has testified before the Commerce Committee that he would consider the President's agreement controlling; that while they might be permitted to pass upon technical problems concerning the safety of the foreign air lines, they could not enter into the question of public interest, since that would be considered as concluded by the President's agreement, which we believe to be in violation of the law requiring quasi-judicial determination by the Civil Aeronautics Board, and I think the statute is clearly opposed to this procedure. I think it is a very small hole out of which they crawl in the justification of that procedure.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is perfectly sound in what he has said in that respect. I recall very definitely, following the line of thought of my colleague, that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], when he appeared before the committee, clearly stated as his opinion, and I believe the opinion of the members of the Commerce Committee which have been studying this matter for 2 years or more, that what was being proposed in this agreement was a clear violation of the civil aeronautics authority law, and being a violation of the law it was wholly without Presidential authority.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that has been the opinion of most Senators who have considered the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I say that I think a careful reading of the testimony of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] will show that his statement was confined to the so-called "five freedoms." I do not think he questioned the validity of the other agreements which were reached at Chicago. But he did question the authority of the executive branch to enter into the agreement with respect to the "fifth freedom."

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the third, fourth, and fifth freedoms were concerned in his final statement of the matter. I think he questioned very seriously the legal authority of the third, the fourth, and fifth freedoms. The transit arrangements, 1 and 2, were the subject of much less doubt in his mind.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a letter which I wrote on November 26, 1944, to the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Berle, regarding the Chicago agreements, in which I stated the reasons why I found myself unable entirely to go along with the agreements. I will read two paragraphs from that statement in order to indicate a position which I think is still as persuasive as then. One paragraph of the letter indicates the supreme importance of our guarding our air. The paragraph reads as follows:

> Air power treacherously mobilized at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, brought us one of the greatest disasters in our history and set back our war potential in the Pacific for at least a year.

I have always been concerned with the fact that under the "five freedoms" we were opening up the possibility of any foreign power, friendly or otherwise, flying freely over Pearl Harbor, the doing of which in this atomic age might mean the destruction of all the instruments which we may assemble there.

The other paragraph to which I refer reads as follows:

> For these reasons, among others, I earnestly hope that this present conference may be adjourned without generalizing to the world either the right of nontraffic transit or the right of commercial access to the United States, continuing for the present to rely upon the policies of service to other countries that proved so successful before the war.

That paragraph stated my position then and now. The repudiation of the "five freedoms" has enabled us to be much nearer to that ideal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NOVEMBER 26, 1944.

The Honorable ADOLPH A. BERLE, JR.,
Assistant Secretary of State.

DEAR MR. BERLE: I have deeply appreciated the opportunity to see at first-hand the operations of an international conference and I have accumulated a very wholesome respect for those charged with the responsibility of conducting a gathering of this character.

As a Member of a body with certain concurrent responsibilities in the conduct of our foreign relations, I am sure I shall have a far more sympathetic understanding hereafter of the difficulties that face our State Department in these unsettled times. I hope it may not be felt that my education has been secured at too high a price.

I regret that prior engagements of long standing prevent my remaining beyond the 3 weeks originally planned.

Somewhat to my regret all that I have learned here has only tended to confirm my conviction that at this time I could not assent to a plan that proposes to give to the world 51 franchises to fly into the United States—the richest potential market for air travel in the world since it seems generally expected that Americans will furnish perhaps 75 percent of international air travel in the decade following the war.

The Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate has had under study for the past year the postwar policy of the United States in international air transport and on August 19, 1944, addressed a letter through its chairman, Senator JOSIAH W. BAILEY, to the President as the one finally responsible in the conduct of our foreign relations. Copy of this letter is attached, but I quote certain paragraphs that seem pertinent.

"The question of whether or not the United States should now modify its historic position as to sovereignty of the air above its borders and to what extent the United States may wisely go in subscribing to the various doctrines being proposed that contemplate general agreements with another nation or group of nations concerning freedom of the air or freedom of innocent transit seem to the committee to invite the most careful consideration by both the executive and legislative branches of the Government and particularly of those concerned with the determination of policy.

"Whether or not operating franchises in foreign countries should in general continue to be secured by direct application of the American flag airline concerned or through governmental negotiations is also pressing for a decision. Prior to the war, operating franchises in approximately 50 foreign countries and colonies had been granted to the American flag airlines system by the foreign governments concerned. The advantages or disadvantages of any change in this previously prevailing practice may well be weighed carefully.

"The committee will appreciate continuing to be kept advised, and meanwhile would request that no action be taken regarding international air transport applications for new routes or acquisition of existing services outside the continental United States and Canada until full consideration of Government policy can be had by Congress.

"In view of this time lag, the committee feels no prejudice to the national interest would be involved in deferring definitive decision on international applications until the Congress shall have reassembled and had opportunity for considering all phases of the situation and for taking such legislative action as might then seem wise."

The suggestion or insistence of other countries that now was the time to fix the pattern for postwar aviation does not seem to have been justified by events.

The very prudent provision in the call of the conference for division into three main objectives in the agenda affords appropriate opportunity for deferring for the present the most difficult of these objectives in the light of the present unsettled condition of affairs.

Without adequate knowledge of the diplomatic discussions that preceded the calling of this conference, I was not in a position to judge its necessity but in the light of what has now transpired I feel more strongly than ever that now is not the time to freeze our position in the postwar aeronautical world for the indefinite future.

There will never be any difficulty in giving away franchises to fly into the United States. There will be very grave difficulty in recalling these franchises once they are granted.

If 10 Americans fly to Europe for every single European that flies to the United States, the American people will never be able to understand the equity of a plan that proposes to start us out on a 50–50 basis or that reckons Americans embarked in Europe as credits to European air lines.

America has been very generous in its relations with the world. In a matter of this character that is not directly connected with the conduct of the war, it would seem well for our country to proceed with the prudence in postwar matters that characterizes the other great nations of the world and reserve such assets as are not essential to the successful prosecution of the war until we can see a little more clearly the shape of things to come.

Air power treacherously mobilized at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, brought us one of the greatest disasters in our history and set back our war potential in the Pacific for at least a year.

The right of nontraffic transit of the Pacific by way of Hawaii or Alaska in the possession of 50 nations of varying ideals and ideologies may well furnish the stage setting for another disaster of even greater magnitude in the aerial world of tomorrow.

Hawaii is the strategic key of the Pacific that we are now securing at a terrific price. Why give this pearl to the world in the very hour of its reestablishment as our guardian of the Pacific when there can be no guarantee at present that other aggressors may not rise in the cloak of at present friendly, or at least neutral, nations, that may once again threaten the peace of the world?

Is it asking too much of the world that we shall not at present be expected to throw away this key to the Pacific that we are securing at such a price?

In future decades with world order well established America may well liberalize its policy, but in the present a proper concern for the lives lost in the Pacific argues very persuasively for not at once relinquishing this heritage.

The world may well have more confidence in American altruism than in its own capacity to prevent aggression once again rearing its ugly head in some corner of the world and moving with devilish ingenuity to use the tools that may be available—among which one of the most dangerous to peace-loving nations may be the complete freedom of commercial transit envisioned in the current discussions.

In the past 2 decades 50 nations have welcomed American air transports without suggestion of requiring reciprocal rights. Certainly this experience would argue very strongly for continuing a tested policy that has demonstrated such a success that American air transportation was the leader in the international field.

All the world is looking to America for aid in reestablishing a sound economic order and one of the greatest contributions America can make to world understanding and world order is the establishment of an all-American system of air transport that shall enable America to see and sell the world on the things that have enabled America in a century to become one of the great powers of the earth and one that undoubtedly outweighs in human happiness and material comforts all the nations of the earth.

For these reasons among others I earnestly hope that this present conference may be adjourned without generalizing to the world either the right of non-traffic transit or the right of commercial access to the United States continuing for the present to rely upon the policies of service to other countries that proved so successful before the war.

One further consideration may also perhaps properly be urged.

Particularly is it of the higest importance at this time to avoid so far as practicable controversy within our country or with foreign countries over subsidiary matters while our major relationships in the postwar world are still in process of formulation. Nothing must be permitted to distract American thought from this all-important objective.

The turn of events in the past week has seemed to make it rather easily possible without serious controversy to dispose of two of the items on the agenda of the conference of very real significance in the field of technical and operational control and to set up an organization to consider the unfolding problems of air transport in the postwar world in the light of conditions that shall then prevail which it is now obviously most difficult to anticipate.

While I recognize the primary responsibility of the Executive in the conduct of our foreign relations, I am sure we are all agreed also in recognizing the very great desirability at this crisis in our affairs of accomplishing that coordination between the executive and legislative branches of our Government under our Constitution since our history is unfortunately replete with examples of the disasters that have come to us when that coordination was lacking.

When you first indicated on last Thursday that you desired unanimous approval in the American delegation of any action which you might take, I was confronted with the necessity of leaving you under no possible doubt as to my position.

I trust that any failure on my part to press my objections more vigorously as the discussions proceeded will be understood as arising only from my desire not to obtrude my views, which I believed were rather well understood by you if they had not been so fully expounded to other members of the delegation.

I want again to express my appreciation for the very courteous consideration you have constantly accorded me under all the pressure of this conference and to express the hope that time may vindicate in some measure your experiment in inviting me, as a member of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, to participate in these deliberations.

Cordially yours,

OWEN BREWSTER.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am required to leave the floor because of a conference on atomic energy legislation. I wish to make a brief statement in the Senator's time.

It has been impossible, because of my absence from the country, to follow as intimately as I should like to have followed the developments which the Senator is now discussing. The Senator and I have been in close contact throughout the entire affair, and I merely wish to state for the RECORD that what the Senator has been saying has been said for me as well as for himself. I concur completely in his attitude and his conclusions, and I should like to add my felicitations for the zeal and vigilance with which he has pursued the subject, as the result of which we have witnessed the action of the State Department today, which makes some concession to the protection of America in the air.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I certainly appreciate very profoundly the comment of the Senator from Michigan who has been so active in our foreign relations. I appreciate the generosity of his comment, however little it may be deserved.

There are two other items which I think the Senate should have in mind. I apologize to the majority leader for the time which I have consumed, but it has resulted from questioning, perhaps, rather than my assertions. I have taken a little more time than I had anticipated being required to consume.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to the provision on pages 5 and 6 regarding nonscheduled operations. Nonscheduled operations are rather freely allowed, though the Civil Aeronautics Board may be in control. This is one of the phases the significance of which has become as important as that of scheduled operations domestically. There are almost as many planes flying in the United States under nonscheduled contract operations as there are in the scheduled air lanes, resulting in the Civil Aeronautics Board, in recent weeks, demanding that the operators of all nonscheduled operations file schedules with them and submit to control. That same situation will develop in the foreign field. Already this very method has been announced by the British. Three months ago the Duke of Hamilton, on whose estate Mr. Hess landed, was in this country for the purpose of arranging for nonscheduled contract operations, and the British are moving very definitely into this field. I trust that the authorities concerned will recognize this very grave danger and not permit a situation to develop whereby the nonscheduled contract-carrier operations in the foreign field shall threaten the entire basis of American international aviation.

The other consideration which gives me pause in connection with my consideration of the treaty is that with regard to the filing of copies. That means that we must file reports of all our financial operations. Article 67 states:

Each contracting state undertakes that its international air lines shall, in accordance with requirements laid down by the Council, file with the Council traffic reports, cost statistics, and financial statements showing among other things all receipts and the sources thereof.

That means that we must bare all the intimate details of our operations. If we can be sure that every other country will do the same, it may seem fairer to the American people; but it must be realized that in other countries every major operation is a government operation. There is no other country in the world which pursues our policy of private airlines operations. That means that our companies must bare their books to all lines operating in other countries. Meanwhile, the operators in other countries will be filing reports of receipts and expenditures; but there are 100 different methods by which subsidies may be secured. The result will be that America will be operating under a very great handicap under this compulsion of filing.

Secondly, Mr. President, we must file immediately all aeronautical agreements, private or public. That requirement alone may result in very hazardous developments with regard to our national defense. If that requirement had been in effect during recent years it might have revealed activities which would have very vitally affected our national defense. When such a situation occurred preceding our entrance into the war, action was taken by our Government which, if provisions of the kind to which I have referred had been in effect, it would have been utterly impossible, and America could not have taken the steps which she did take and which resulted greatly to our advantage.

For the two reasons which I have given, the provisions regarding nonscheduled operations, and the requirements concerning filing copies of reports are not well calculated to serve the interests of the United States.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Were those matters thoroughly brought out and discussed before the Foreign Relations Committee when it considered the general subject.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Nevada and myself did the best we could do there, although this matter has been one which has not engaged such widespread interest or attention as I would feel its importance warrants.

Mr. BROOKS. I concur in the Senator's position. I think that the matter is of such great importance that it ought not to be acted upon at the present time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am glad the Senator from Illinois is at least impressed with the desirability of delay, which I continue to believe would be wise.

Now I come to speak, perhaps, as a member of the minority, as the devil's advocate, in connection with pointing out something of our problem, and how, as it seems to me, our policy to the present time has utterly failed to achieve our objective, or to measure up to the standards of other countries. So this naturally involves matters of comparison.

At the present time Britain, of course, is a major country in the international aviation field, while Russia looms on the horizon. A seat had been kept vacant in the Interim Council for Russia, and contemplated in the 21 seats in the Permanent Council. That had extended for a year or so, and Russia had shown no indication of coming in. Immediately after the Bermuda agreement in February with the British, under which America and Britain were to secure 109,000 miles of international air routes, Russia held a national conference at Moscow, and announced that they were going to have 108,000 miles of air routes; they did not indicate whether domestic or foreign, but they indicated they were to be in the air picture in a 5-year program.

I speak of this because it seems to me that while the pending treaty deals only with technical aspects, we must yet recognize that today, perhaps, is the only time the Senate will consider the matter, and the executive department should at least understand that the Senate itself is vitally concerned with the prosecution of a successful air policy, which thus far has certainly not been developed.

What do we find in the British white paper on air policy, which they issued about a year ago under the former Government, and which has been continued under the present one?

They changed the former policy to eliminate participation by the shipping lines in the British air service to South America, and of the railroad lines in the British air service to Europe.

There has been made available for the British Overseas Air Line $600,000,000. That is the importance which Britain, with its impoverished treasury, to which we have just contributed nearly $4,000,000,000, attached to the future of international air so far as Great Britain is concerned—$600,000,000, $300,000,000 of which is available for the auxiliary services of the associated countries to whom Britain, in its air policy, is offering, first, British equipment on any terms it may be determined are desirable; second, British servicing; third, training of the personnel; fourth, traffic arrangements with any countries which may decide to enter the British sphere of influence in international air.

I am pointing this out in no spirit of envy and no spirit of criticism, but in order that those responsible for our aviation activities shall realize that we here in America are fully conscious of the fact and of the extent to which America, under present policies, is spending much more time in internal disagreements than we are in the uniting of America, of all aviation interests alike, in order to achieve the position in international aviation which is vital not only to our commercial development, to our trade-following-the-flag, but to our national defense as well.

I welcome the fact that we are seeing the entry of new blood into the aviation field in our Government. I spoke in opening of Mr. Locke and Mr. Landis—Mr. Landis fresh from his experience in the Middle East where he has had opportunity to study conditions and Mr. Locke fresh from China. In both fields American aviation efforts are seriously threatened, and in South America as well.

I wish at this point to insert in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, an article from the New York Herald-Tribune of July 24, yesterday. The heading is "British block United States air rights in Middle East. Iraq only Arab state to permit American lines to carry local traffic."

I read a paragraph from the article:

Efforts of American air lines to obtain operating rights in Syria, Lebanon, and Iraq are being continually hamstrung by British opposition exerted through diplomatic channels, according to Americans attending International Air Transport Association meetings at the Aley mountain resort near here.

This is a wireless to the Herald Tribune from Allen Raymond at Beyrouth:

This opposition, the Americans allege, consists of pressure on the governments involved—

Those are the Arab governments—in addition to advice to newly formed Arab air lines—in which the British are heavily interested—not to let American competition enter the field. The result of this pressure was visible, they assert, in the decision of the recent Arab League aviation conference not to grant to other than Arab air lines the so-called fifth freedom of the air—the right to pick up and discharge passengers within the Arab states.

At the same time the Americans said, the Arabs rebuffed a move, believed to have been inspired by British advisers, to make a single consolidated Arab League air line, the capital of which could have been proportional to each government's share in supporting the league. This would mean that Egypt, through its Misr air line, which is dominated by the British, would have been in complete control of local air transport throughout the Middle East.

I ask for the insertion of the whole article in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITISH BLOCK UNITED STATES AIR RIGHTS IN MIDDLE EAST—IRAQ ONLY ARAB STATE TO PERMIT AMERICAN LINES TO CARRY LOCAL TRAFFIC

(By Allen Raymond)

BEYROUTH, LEBANON, July 23.—Efforts of American air lines to obtain operating rights in Syria, Lebanon, and Iraq are being continually hamstrung by British opposition exerted through diplomatic channels, according to Americans attending International Air Transport Association meetings at the Aley mountain resort near here.

This opposition, the Americans allege, consists of pressure on the governments involved, in addition to advice to newly formed Arab air lines—in which the British are heavily interested—not to let American competition enter the field. The result of this pressure was visible, they assert, in the decision of the recent Arab League aviation conference not to grant to other than Arab air lines the so-called fifth freedom of the air—the right to pick up and discharge passengers within the Arab states.

At the same time, the Americans said, the Arabs rebuffed a move, believed to have been inspired by British advisers, to make a single consolidated Arab League air line, the capital of which could have been proportional to each government's share in supporting the league. This would mean that Egypt, through its Misr air line, which is dominated by the British, would have been in complete control of local air transport throughout the Middle East.

There are four relatively new national air lines in this region developing passenger and freight services—Egypt's Misr Line, two Lebanese lines in the Middle East, the Compagne Generale de Transport, and the Iraqui Line. So far they have only a few planes and scheduled runs are infrequent. But they cover a great territory—north to Turkey, west to Cyprus, south to the Sudan, and east to the Persian Gulf.

Their services cut across routes to Pan American Airways and Trans-World Air Line on the way to India, but they are not in any way competitive, in the opinion of American air transport officials, who want the right to pick up and discharge passengers in their territory, but who believe this would foster growth of the Arab air lines as feeders to the great world trunk systems.

Negotiations lasting over many months have thus far failed to win operating rights for American air lines in Lebanon, and only a verbal concession has been obtained to date at Damascus, which is likely to be rescinded any time the Arab League decides to get really tough with the United States for fostering the migration of additional Jews to Palestine. Temporary rights, however, have been obtained in Iraq.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, this article appears to me to be a spur which comes to urge American aviation, in cooperation with the Government, to enter into these fields where we have not heretofore ventured.

Now as to American superiority in the air. That has been our proudest boast, established incident to the war, with the vast productive facilities of America turning out airplanes without limit for war and for transportation. We gave them to our allies freely and without let or hindrance. Meanwhile we fondly imagined that American planes would continue supreme in the era to come.

It is my advice, which I have received from those expert in this field, not only in operation, but in construction—Mr. Glenn H. Martin, of the Martin Co., is one of my authorities—that the probabilities are that within the coming year British aviation will launch passenger transport across the Atlantic with jet turbine engines, which are already developed and in production for operation. Meanwhile our own country is producing the first of 40 jet turbines for the Army; the next 40 are to go to the Navy, and the next 40 to Glenn Martin, with the result that the necessary experimentation will take us at least 18 months to develop and try out the engines preliminary to use in transport service. The British are altogether likely in that period to sweep the sky. I hope this is not true, although in this class of competition we cannot challenge the right of our British friends to carry on in this way. We must admire their enterprise while we regret the threat to our position. But if British passenger transportation in the next year shall establish 5-hour service between London and New York, it will bring home to us with compelling force recognition of the fact that we cannot rest on our laurels, that we must use every instrument at our command in order to retain the position which we should rightfully enjoy.

It is to that end that I address myself in asking that our Government, having given up the "five freedoms," so that we are entirely free to accord to such lines or countries as we see fit the access to our area, the policy shall be exercised with an eye primarily ringle to the interest of the United States.

Everybody says, Why not reciprocity? If we let them come into our area, they will let us go into theirs. The difficulty is that 80 percent of international air traffic is of American origin, and it is extremely difficult to know why foreign countries should furnish 1 in 10 of the travelers on any plane, but expect that there should be a 50–50 division with the United States in the transportation that shall be carried on.

Whether or not we can secure access to any foreign country must depend on our arrangements. I only point out that in the period before the war 52 countries had afforded us access to their areas without reciprocal rights of any character, that in only two instances was reciprocity required, the countries of Britain and France, with a subsidiary arrangement with Colombia. So there was every reason from past experience to know that, if we should permit American companies to go forward aggressively, they might continue the remarkable record established in the decade before the war in securing the establishment of American international aviation operation upon a scale commensurate with our interests and calculated to serve the very great values which we have.

As a result of the developments of the past few weeks and months, when it has become evident that the administration is beginning somewhat belatedly, as we feel, to recognize the soundness of the position which some of us have taken in this matter hitherto, these are the reasons why we believe it would be in the interest of America, as well as of international aviation, to defer action on the treaty until January, when we might consider it in the light of what, in my judgment, will be the very tremendous developments in the interim.

However, as I stated in the beginning, I repeat, in the light of the denunciation of the five freedoms, in the glow resulting from that tremendous step in progress, I have indicated that I should not, more actively than I have, oppose the immediate action which is being urged by the administration. I shall simply ask that the Senate make it perfectly clear that those in the administration who are asking the ratification of this treaty assume full responsibility for the consequences which may result if some of the perils which I have pointed out should befall us. The Senate should make plain that the responsibility is clearly in their hands, and I express the fervent hope that Mr. Locke and Mr. Landis, who is now the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, will continue to contribute their very great talents to the formulation of an American policy far better calculated than in the past to achieve the goal of an American international air operation commensurate with our productive capacity and with the skill and the organizing ability of American businessmen.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Returning to the inquiry which I made in the beginning of the Senator's discussion, and reading the last paragraph of the release which was put out on July 25 by the Department of State, which is as follows:

> In accordance with article 5 of the agreement, any contracting state may withdraw from it on 1 year's notice. It is the duty of the United States at once to inform all other contracting states of this decision. This Government, therefore, will at once inform all the other states which have accepted the international air transport agreement of its intention to withdraw from the agreement dating from today, in accordance with article 5.

Can the Senator explain why it is that the United States is withdrawing from the multilateral international air-transport agreement in which we accepted? Why are we withdrawing?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think that those now responsible for formulating our policy have come to the considered conclusion that the "five freedoms" present a very great hazard to the safety and the progress of American aviation. They have come to that considered conclusion somewhat belatedly, but I am delighted that they have arrived at it, for it represents a tremendous advance.

Mr. WHERRY. Are all in agreement with that, or is that a question of controversy?

Mr. BREWSTER. The State Department are the only ones I think who have urged speedy action. I have not heard any Member of this body do so. If I should include the Senator in the chair at the present time, the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], I know that he, as one familiar with aviation, and as a member of our committee, has repeatedly expressed the strong opinion that the "five freedoms" was not calculated to serve our interests, and I think every one else who has studied the subject in the Senate has come to the same conclusion.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will indulge me a little further, I am trying to obtain all the information I can on this matter. I am not a member of the committee. The Senator was in Chicago with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and others when the whole program was discussed, and, as I understand, it was there that the announcement was made, or there at least was where the executive agreements were entered into.

Mr. BREWSTER. The President did not actually advocate our adherence until February 1945, following November 1944.

Mr. WHERRY. Who in the State Department negotiated those treaties for the United States?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Berle was the chairman of our delegation at Chicago and in charge of our procedure, though he was out of the Government subsequently, so that when it came to the finality it was handled by Mr. Acheson, the Under Secretary, who did have a rather serious misunderstanding with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. As a result of a misunderstanding with each of them the adherence was announced when the Committee on Foreign Relations had adopted a resolution asking that no action be taken until there was further consideration by the Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. Acheson apparently misunderstood the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Texas, and announced the adherence without further action by either committee. That is how the adherence came about. It was later rather thoroughly thrashed out and great regret expressed on both sides, but it was then urged that it would be a serious "loss of face" if the United States should immediately withdraw its announcement. Now, the Department has done it; so we feel very much gratified over having finally brought that to pass.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I am utterly unwilling that this debate should come to a close without speaking a brief though wholly inadequate word of tribute to my colleague for the great labor he has put forth in the study of this whole problem, for the zeal with which he has made his presentations, both to the gathering at Chicago and to the members of the Commerce Committee of the Senate and lastly to the members of the Foreign Relations Committee of which I and other Senators who are present are members.

Mr. President, he has stated this problem in all its phases. He has brought to these efforts an analytical mind and power of speech, a persuasiveness of speech, that is unsurpassed in this body.

Mr. President, he has been motivated at all times by a burning patriotism, a desire that America's interest in the air throughout the world should be fully realized and should be adequately protected, and that in all the steps that we, as Senators, take, the interest of the United States shall be first and foremost in our consideration and in our loyalty.

I am very proud of my colleague, and I am happy to say this wholly inadequate word in appreciation of what he has done.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I express my deep appreciation of the fine and overgenerous words of my colleague, which I fear are colored by the sentiment of our association.

I also want to express my appreciation of the consideration which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has shown during the year which has elapsed during which this treaty has been before the committee, for the constant courtesy and consideration he has always accorded me in laboring my views at very great length, because of my concern.

Finally, my apologies to the majority leader for this matter having taken somewhat more time than was estimated. For my participation in that I present my humble apologies.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator need not apologize to me. I had understood that the matters involved in this treaty, which had been so controversial, had been resolved, so that it would not take a great while to dispose of.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator has no idea what time would have been required had it not been for the arrangement which he suggests had been made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, and, of course, as we in the Senate know, we can never be assured that any proposition which we may think may consume an hour may not consume 3 or 4 hours. So that if we can obtain a vote on the matter and have the treaty ratified we will absolve the Senator from Maine from any self-imposed difficulties under which he may feel he rests.

Mr. BREWSTER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to propound another question to the distinguished Senator from Maine. I, too, want to utter the same sentiments expressed by the minority leader for the services rendered by my colleague from Maine. I want him to know that I have appreciated his work, and not only that, but that, to a great extent, I follow his judgment on certain matters, because he is so well-informed and has brought such help and aid to me individually in the Senate. I am deeply appreciative of it. But I should like to ask the Senator a question. Inasmuch as we were led, by executive agreement, into signing a multilateral agreement which did not come before the Senate, and which was entered into, apparently, under misunderstanding, but which it now seems, it has turned out apparently to our disadvantage to participate in, is that not a lesson to us that we should not rush into ratifying the pending treaty until we can perfect it after further knowledge and further deliberations between now and the 1st of March next year? That is contingent upon the fact that we do not lose any advantage, or become foreclosed from any of our rights by not ratifying it before that time.

Mr. BREWSTER. That, Mr. President, is why I have indicated that I should prefer to see this matter deferred. On the other hand, if the administration, which after all is primarily responsible for the conduct of our foreign policy, insists on our consideration of the treaty today, I have indicated that I would not vote against its ratification, as I feel that to indicate such a division in our foreign relations, after having achieved the progress we have, would be unfortunate. I hope the administration will appreciate whatever small contribution this is to domestic as well as to international harmony and will seek very earnestly in the next few months to continue to make progress toward what I believe to be a much sounder policy. As I have suggested, I have great confidence in Mr. Locke and in Mr. Landis to that end. That is one of the considerations that greatly reassures me.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Nebraska, that I think there is opportunity for us to lose advantage which we might otherwise gain. There is much more opportunity for us to lose an advantage that we might gain by this treaty than there is for us to gain advantage by delay. What I mean by that is that I think we should be in the forefront of all these movements, and by this treaty, with the warning that we have had, with some of us watching the situation quite closely, with new personnel in charge of the matter in the administration, I believe that much is to be gained by ratification of the treaty. That is my personal opinion.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Nevada mean by new leadership, new leadership in aviation or in the Department of State?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; by new leadership I mean Judge Landis in the CAB and Mr. Locke in the White House.

Mr. WHERRY. Will Mr. Acheson, to whom reference has been made, have anything to do in the perfecting of any further treaties or agreements relative to this particular matter?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not able to answer who may have charge in the State Department. But I think, with the vigilance that is being put forward and with the new blood, if I may so term it, in the CAB, we can better afford to go forward with this treaty than we can to delay it.

Mr. BREWSTER. I may say on that particular point that there is pending legislation creating the position of Assistant Secretary, which, as I understand, will be for Air. If there is action upon that legislation at this session I think it is contemplated that there shall be an Assistant Secretary for Air in the State Department, which I think is of the very highest importance. If there can be obtained for that position a man comparable with Mr. Locke or Mr. Landis, with the same character, background and experience, it will certainly be the dawn of a very happy day. I say that without disparagement of Mr. Clayton. He has been preoccupied with other matters, so that he has not been able to give time to this subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I hope that the new man in charge of this program will be a man of the caliber of Mr. Landis and Mr. Locke, men who are interested in furthering the interests of America rather than the interests of Great Britain. I hope to see American-minded men in charge. In some instances in the past we have not had such men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive A, Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, a convention on international civil aviation, concluded at the International Civil Aviation Conference at Chicago on December 7, 1944.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

CONVENTION ON REGULATION OF INTER-AMERICAN AUTOMOTIVE TRAFFIC

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Executive C, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, a Convention on the Regulation of Inter-American Automotive Traffic, which was signed on behalf of the United States on December 31, 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the Convention on the Regulation of Inter-American Automotive Traffic, in the Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French languages, which was opened for signature at the Pan American Union in Washington on December 15, 1943. Signed on behalf of the United States on December 31, 1943, which was read, as follows:

CONVENTION ON THE REGULATION OF INTER-AMERICAN AUTOMOTIVE TRAFFIC

The Governments of the American Republics, desirous of establishing uniform rules among themselves to control and regulate international automotive traffic on their highways, and to facilitate the movement of motor vehicles among such States,

Have decided to conclude the present Convention in order to effectuate the foregoing purposes, and have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

It is recognized that each State has exclusive jurisdiction over the use of its own highways, but agrees to their international use as specified in this Convention.

ARTICLE II

Under the terms of the present Convention, a motor vehicle shall be defined as any self-propelled vehicle circulating upon a public highway without the need of rails and used for the transport of persons or merchandise.

A highway shall be defined as any public way maintained for and open to the use of the public for purposes of vehicular travel.

An operator shall be defined as any person who drives or is in actual physical control of a motor vehicle upon a highway.

ARTICLE III

The operator of a motor vehicle circulating in any State which is a party to this Convention is subject to the traffic laws and regulations in force in that State or subdivision thereof.

A copy of such laws and regulations may be handed to the operator at the time of entering each State, by the customs authorities who are clearing the vehicle for entry, or by any authorized agency.

ARTICLE IV

The Contracting States shall not allow customs measures to be put into effect which will hinder international travel.

Simplified customs and other regulatory measures which have been or may be put into effect by any contiguous States parties to this Convention, for the facilitation of international automotive traffic, shall be considered to be in furtherance of this Convention and shall be encouraged.

ARTICLE V

Before admission to international traffic, every vehicle shall be registered by the State of origin in the manner prescribed by its laws, or by any subdivision thereof having legal authority to register vehicles.

ARTICLE VI

Every motor vehicle operator before admission to international traffic shall have such driving license as may be required by the laws of his State or such as may be issued by any political subdivision thereof having legal authority to issue driving licenses. In the event that no such driving license is required by his State or any political subdivision thereof, a special international driving license such as is specified in Article XIII shall be valid. No operator shall be admitted to international travel who is less than 18 years of age.

ARTICLE VII

Evidence of compliance with the conditions of this Convention shall entitle motor vehicles and motor vehicle operators to circulate on the highways of any of the Contracting States.

ARTICLE VIII

Each State or its political subdivisions shall maintain central bureaus of registration with facilities for the exchange of informaton with other States as to registration of vehicles and operators.

ARTICLE IX

In addition to the registration plate or plates of the State of origin or of its legally empowered political subdivisions each vehicle shall display an international registration marker indicating the country of origin. This marker shall be in the form of an oval plate not less than 3 inches (8 cm.) wide by 10 inches (26 cm.) long bearing capital Latin letters painted black on a white background.

The distinctive names or letters indicating the several countries shall be the following:

Argentina	ARGENTINA
Bolivia	BOLIVIA
Brazil	BRASIL
Chile	CHILE
Colombia	COLOMBIA
Costa Rica	COSTA RICA
Cuba	CUBA
Dominican Republic	REP. DOM.
Ecuador	ECUADOR
El Salvador	SALVADOR
Guatemala	GUATEMALA
Haiti	HAITI
Honduras	HONDURAS
Mexico	MEXICO
Nicaragua	NICARAGUA
Panama	PANAMA
Paraguay	PARAGUAY
Peru	PERU
United States of America	U. S. A.
Uruguay	URUGUAY
Venezuela	VENEZUELA

This distinctive plate shall be issued by the State or its authorized representatives.

All registration plates shall be plainly visible.

Motor vehicles bearing the international registration markers provided for by the International Convention for the Circulation of Automobiles, 1909, as amended in 1926, shall be recognized as having complied with the foregoing conditions concerning international registration markers.

For admission to international travel, each motor vehicle shall bear in a readily accessible location the name of the manufacturer of the vehicle, the manufacturer's number of the chassis, and the manufacturer's number of the engine.

ARTICLE X

Unless otherwise provided by the laws or regulations of the respective States or subdivisions thereof, the size of vehicles and loads shall be limited to the following:

1. No vehicle shall exceed a total outside width, including any load thereon, of 8 feet (2.44 meters).

2. No vehicle with or without load shall exceed a maximum height of 12 feet, 6 inches (3.80 meters).

3. No vehicle shall exceed an over-all length of 35 feet (10.70 meters) and no combination of vehicles coupled together shall exceed a total length of 45 feet (13.75 meters).

4. No vehicle shall carry any load extending more than 3 feet (91 centimeters) beyond the front thereof.

5. No passenger vehicle shall carry any load extending beyond the line of the fenders on the left side nor extending more than 6 inches (15.2 centimeters) beyond the line of fenders on the right side thereof; provided however that in States in which the left-hand drive is compulsory the provisions of this paragraph referring to the side of loads shall be reversed.

6 Special permits for vehicles or combinations of vehicles exceeding these limits may be issued by the competent authorities of the States.

ARTICLE XI

Unless the laws and regulations of the respective States or political subdivisions thereof provide otherwise, the following requirements as to equipment shall be indispensable for motor vehicles admitted to international traffic.

1. Every motor vehicle shall have brakes adequate to control the movement of and to stop and hold such vehicle. The brakes shall be capable of stopping the vehicle on a dry, smooth, level road within a distance of 30 feet (9 meters) when travelling at a speed of 20 miles (32 kilometers) per hour.

2. Every motor vehicle shall have a suitable horn or other warning device satisfactory to the regulatory authorities.

3. Every motor vehicle other than a motorcycle shall be equipped with two head lamps, at the front of and on opposite sides of the vehicle, which shall at night, under normal atmospheric conditions and on a level road, produce light sufficient to render clearly discernible a person not less than 350 feet (107 meters) ahead and shall be capable of operation so as not to project a glaring or dazzling light. Every motorcycle shall have at least one head lamp.

4. Every motor vehicle, and every trailer or semitrailer which is being drawn at the end of a train of vehicles, shall carry at the rear a lamp which exhibits a red light plainly visible at night under normal atmospheric conditions from a distance of 500 feet (152 meters) to the rear of such vehicle. The registration plate carried on the rear of such vehicle shall under like conditions be so illuminated by a white light as to be read from a distance of 50 feet (15 meters) to the rear of the vehicle.

5. Every motor vehicle shall have a muffler in good working order and in constant operation to prevent excessive or unusual noise.

6. Every motor vehicle which is so constructed or loaded as to obstruct the driver's view to the rear thereof from the operator's position shall be equipped with a mirror so located as to reflect to the driver a view of the highway for a distance of at least 200 feet (70 meters) to the rear of such vehicle.

7. Every motor vehicle other than a motorcycle shall have a windshield wiper in good working order.

ARTICLE XII

A special international automobile certificate, in addition to the registration required by Article V, may be required for each motor vehicle for admission to and circulation in any individual State party to this Convention, if the State so elects. Provision for the issuance of such certificate shall be made by each Contracting State, and such document shall be issued by the State, or by any authorized political subdivision thereof, or by an association duly empowered by such authorities, or by an authorized representative of either the Contracting State or of one of its political subdivisions, having legal authority to issue such certificates. The validity of such special international automobile certificate shall be recognized by all officials having jurisdiction over matters involving legal ownership of the vehicle. The certificate shall be in the form, of the size, and contain the information prescribed in Annex A to this Convention, and shall be valid for one year from date of issuance.

The international automobile certificate issued in accordance with the International Convention of 1926 on Automobile Circulation shall be deemed to meet the requirements of this Article.

ARTICLE XIII

A special international driving license may be required for each operator admitted to circulation in any individual State party to this Convention, if the State so elects. Such a special license shall be required for each operator who does not possess a domestic driving license as required in Article VI. Provision for the issuance of such international driving license shall be made by each Contracting State, and such document shall be issued by the State, or by any authorized political subdivision thereof, or by an association duly empowered by such authorities, or by an authorized representative of either the Contracting State or one of its political subdivisions having legal authority to issue driving licenses. The validity of such special international driving license shall be recognized by all officials having regulatory powers over automotive traffic. The license shall be in the form, of the size, and contain the information prescribed in Annex B to this Convention, and shall be valid for one year from date of issuance.

The international driving license issued in accordance with the International Convention of 1926 shall be deemed to meet the requirements of this Article.

ARTICLE XIV

A general bond guaranteeing payment of customs charges on any motor vehicle to be admitted to international traffic, due and payable within the country in which such charges may be incurred, may be required by any State party to this Convention.

The international customs pass (carnet de passage en douane) of the Association Internationale des Automobile Clubs Reconnus or of the Alliance Internationale de Tourisme shall be deemed to satisfy the requirements of this Article for any Contracting State in which a bond is required.

No bond shall be required in any Contracting State if the stay of the foreign vehicle therein does not exceed the period allowed for free stay.

ARTICLE XV

Each State may establish such requirements as it may deem necessary to record the passage into and out of its territory, of vehicles and operators admitted to international traffic. If such records are maintained, they shall include a notation that the vehicle has complied with the provisions of Articles X and XI.

ARTICLE XVI

The hours and routes dedicated to the crossing of frontiers by properly registered vehicles shall be fixed by common consent of the adjacent States and their decisions communicated to the corresponding custom authorities.

ARTICLE XVII

Infractions of this Convention shall be punished in conformity with the laws and regulations of the country in which committed.

Infractions which shall have incurred judicial penalty shall be communicated by the judge or magistrate to the proper authorities, who in turn shall communicate them to the authorities of the State or its political subdivision in which the vehicle and its owner or operator were originally registered.

ARTICLE XVIII

Any vehicle or operator admitted to international traffic under the provisions of the International Convention for the Circulation of Automobiles, 1909, as amended in 1926, and holding the documents required thereunder, will be recognized as fulfilling the requirements of the present Convention.

ARTICLE XIX

The original of the present Convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French shall be deposited with the Pan American Union and opened for signature by the American republics. The Convention shall also be opened for the adherence and accession of American States which are not members of the Pan American Union. The Pan American Union shall transmit authentic certified copies to the Governments for the purpose of ratification.

ARTICLE XX

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory Governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE XXI

The present Convention shall come into force between the High Contracting Parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE XXII

The present Convention shall remain in effect indefinitely, but may be denounced by means of one year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory Governments. After the expiration of this period the Convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces it, but shall remain in effect for the remaining High Contracting Parties.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries, having deposited their full powers found to be in due and proper form, sign this Convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French, at the Pan American Union, Washington, D. C., on behalf of their respective Governments and affix thereto their seals on the dates appearing opposite their signatures.

The Plenipotentiary of the Dominican Republic signs the Convention with the following reservation:

That the provision in Art. XIV does not mean that the term of one year indicated by Art. XII refers to the time during which a vehicle may travel in a Contracting State without having posted bond or without paying the duties which its laws require, but to the period after which the certificate of admission which the State may require will lapse. Likewise, that this Convention does not affect treaties, conventions or other international agreements which the Dominican Republic may have agreed to or may agree to, nor its immigration laws.

I hereby certify that the foregoing document is a true and faithful copy of the original, with the signatures affixed thereto up to the present date, of the Convention on the Regulation of Inter-American Automotive Traffic, deposited in the Pan American Union and opened for signature by the American States on December 15, 1943.

Washington, D. C., January 17, 1944.

[SEAL] PEDRO DE ALBA,
Secretary of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. CONNALLY], who is present, handled this convention before he went to Paris. It simply provides for reciprocal treatment among the inter-American countries of automobiles, recognition of licenses, license plates, and registration. It is an attempt to do between the American states substantially what the States of the Union do by way of reciprocal arrangements.

I do not believe that this matter will require any discussion whatever. The protocol was not controversial in the Foreign Relations Committee, and it speaks for itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive C, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, a convention on the regulation of inter-American automotive traffic, which was opened for signature at the Pan American Union in Washington on December 15, 1943, and which was signed on behalf of the United States of America on December 31, 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

PROTOCOL TO PROLONG INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Executive D—Seventy-ninth Congress, second session—a protocol to prolong the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, which was signed on behalf of the United States on April 30, 1946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The protocol is laid before the Senate. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the protocol to prolong the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, modifying the International Sanitary Convention of June 21, 1926, which was signed in Washington on behalf of the United States of America on April 30, 1946, with the reservation, "subject to ratification," which was read as follows:

PROTOCOL TO PROLONG THE INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION, 1944, MODIFYING THE INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION OF JUNE 21, 1926

The Governments signatory to the present Protocol,

Considering that, unless prolonged in force by action taken for that purpose by the interested Governments, the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, Modifying the International Sanitary Convention of June 21, 1926, will expire on July 15, 1946, the expiration of eighteen months from the date on which the said 1944 Convention entered into force; and

Considering that it is desirable that the said 1944 Convention shall be prolonged in force after July 15, 1946, between the Governments parties thereto;

Have appointed their respective Plenipotentiaries who, having deposited their full powers, found in good and proper form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

Subject to the limitation provided for in Article II of the present Protocol, the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, Modifying the International Sanitary Convention of June 21, 1926, shall be prolonged in force on and after July 15, 1946, in respect of each of the Government parties to the present Protocol, until the date on which such Government shall become bound by a further Convention amending or superseding the said 1944 Convention and the said 1926 Convention.

ARTICLE II

The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (hereinafter referred to as UNRRA) shall continue to perform the duties and functions assigned to it by the said 1944 Convention, as prolonged by the present Protocol, until such time as a new International Health Organization shall be established, at which time such duties and functions shall be transferred to and shall be assumed by such new International Health Organization, provided that if the new International Health Organization has not been formed or, having been formed, is unable to perform the above duties and functions by the date on which UNRRA, owing to the termination of its activities in Europe or for any other reason, ceases to be able to perform them, those duties and functions shall be entrusted to the Office International d'Hygiene Publique and the countries signatory to this Protocol will, in that event, make appropriate financial provisions so as to enable the Office to perform those duties and functions.

ARTICLE III

The present Protocol shall remain open for signature until May 1, 1946.

ARTICLE IV

The present Protocol shall come into force when it has been signed without reservation in regard to ratification, or instruments of ratification have been deposited or notifications of accession have been received on behalf of at least ten governments. The present Protocol shall come into force in respect of each of the other signatory Governments on the date of signature on its behalf, unless such signature is made with a reservation in regard to the ratification, in which event the present Protocol shall come into force in respect of such Government on the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

ARTICLE V

After May 1, 1946, the present Protocol shall be open to accession by any Government which is a party to the 1944 Convention and is not a signatory to the present Protocol. Each accession shall be notified in writing to the Government of the United States of America.

Accessions notified on or before the date on which the present protocol enters into force shall be effective as of that date. Accessions notified after the date of the entry into force of the present Protocol shall become effective in respect of each Government upon the date of the receipt of that Government's notification of accession.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries sign the present Protocol, on the date indicated opposite their respective signatures, in the English and French languages, both texts being equally authentic, in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America and of which certified copies shall be furnished by the Government of the United States of America to each of the signatory and acceding Governments and to each of the Governments parties to the said 1944 Convention or the said 1926 Convention.

MEMORANDUM SETTING FORTH THE RESERVATIONS WITH WHICH AUSTRALIA ACCEDED TO THE 1944 SANITARY CONVENTIONS

The accession of the Australian Government to the 1944 Sanitary Conventions was subject to the following reservations:

(1) As regards the International Sanitary Convention, 1944:

"(a) Under Article No. 24 the Australian Government declares that the Convention does not apply to the Territories of Papua and Norfolk Islands or the Mandated Territories of New Guinea and Nauru.

"(b) The Australian Government reserves the right in respect of certificates of inoculation against cholera, typhus, yellow fever, and certificates of vaccination against smallpox, to accept only those certificates which are signed by a recognized official of the Public Health Services of the country concerned, and which carry within the text of the certificate an intimation of the office occupied by the person signing the certificate.

"(c) The Australian Government reserves full rights under Articles Nos. 7 and 9 of the 1926 Convention, especially with reference to the last paragraph on the reestablishment of the Eastern Bureau or analogous agencies as regional bureaux for Asia or the Pacific zone."

(2) As regards the International Sanitary Convention for Aerial Navigation, 1944:

"(a) Pursuant to Article No. 21, the Government declares that the Convention does not apply to the Territories of Papua and Norfolk Islands or the Mandated Territories of New Guinea and Nauru.

"(b) The Australian Government reserves the right in respect of certificates of inoculation against cholera, typhus, yellow fever, and certificates of vaccination against smallpox, to accept only those certificates which are signed by a recognized official of the Public Health Services of the country concerned and which carry within the text of the certificate an intimation of the office occupied by the person signing the certificate.

"(c) The Australian Government, for temporary reasons of a practical nature, is not in a position to accept the full obligations arising out of Section 1, Part 1 of the 1933 Convention in relation to aerodromes within its territory which are within operational areas or under the control of the Air Forces of the Commonwealth or any Allied power.

"(d) Notwithstanding Article No. 35 or other provisions of the 1933 or the present Convention, the Australian Government reserves the right to require that every member of the crew and every passenger on every aircraft arriving from overseas shall, on arrival at the first landing place in Australia, produce to the quarantine officer there a certificate of recent vaccination against smallpox as defined in the Convention, or a certificate that he has given proof that he is adequately immune to smallpox, failing both of which certificates he shall submit to be vaccinated against smallpox.

"(e) The Australian Government reserves the right to prohibit the importation into Australia on any aircraft of any animal other than approved insects and parasites."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not believe that any explanation is required. The committee was unanimous in reporting the protocol. It is simply an attempt to preserve the health of the country against epidemic diseases. Executive E follows along the same line, and relates to a sanitary convention for aerial navigation. Both are health measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The protocol is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D, Seventh-ninth Congress, second session, a protocol to prolong the International Sanitary Convention, 1944, modifying the International Sanitary Convention of June 21, 1926, which was signed on behalf of the United States of America on April 30, 1946, with the reservation, "subject to ratification."

PRINTING OF HANDBOOK ENTITLED "LAWS RELATING TO THE PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED"

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 160, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the handbook entitled "Laws Relating to the Physically Handicapped" be printed as a House document, and that 12,000 additional copies shall be printed for the use of the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

WAR CONTRACT HARDSHIP CLAIMS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1477) to authorize relief in certain cases where work, supplies, or services have been furnished for the Government under contracts during the war, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "December 7, 1941" and insert "September 16, 1940"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out "December 7, 1941" and insert "September 16, 1940"; and on page 2, line 20, to strike out "December 7, 1941" and insert "September 16, 1940."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. Let me say by way of very brief explanation that the bill passed the House as it passed the Senate, except that the House changed the date from December 7, 1941, to September 16, 1940, which was the date on which the Selective Service Act was passed. It merely extends the period retroactively during which the law may be effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not in charge of the bill which is the unfinished business of the Senate. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce which dealt with this proposed legislation, will be in charge of it and will make a detailed explanation of it. However, I wish to make a very brief statement with reference to it, so that the Senate may understand the situation in which we find ourselves with reference to this bill.

It has been suggested that probably there should be as full an attendance as possible while this bill is under consideration. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief general preliminary statement with reference to this proposed legislation. The Senator from Colorado, as I indicated a moment ago, who was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce handling this bill, will give a more detailed explanation of it.

I wish to state that for many years it has been recognized that amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act have been necessary. In the first place, for a long time it has been recognized that the fund itself, out of which retirements are paid, has been on an unsound basis, and that the contributions both by the carriers and by the employees would have to be increased in order that the fund might be placed on a sound basis. I do not think there is any serious disagreement as to the need of strengthening the fund and putting it upon a sound basis.

The pending bill provides that the contributions shall be increased on a gradual basis, reaching their ultimate peak in 1952. The present rate of contribution is 3½ percent of the pay roll, and that is contributed by each side. The pending bill provides for an increase of that rate until in 1952 it will reach a maximum of 6¼ percent. But the process is a gradual one, increasing a fraction of a percent each year, until 1952, and that increase is applicable to the retirement payments, not to unemployment insurance. The bill will not add to the fund insofar as unemployment insurance is concerned, as I understand it.

Mr. President, for 5 or 6 years the railroad brotherhoods, who are primarily interested in this legislation, have been urging that amendments increasing the contributions and making other changes in the law be enacted. Of course, as in all such cases, a large amount of information and organization and presentation of the matter before congressional committees and, prior to that, before the organizations themselves, were required in order that a program might be worked out.

On May 11, 1944, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] introduced in the Senate the amendments which had been discussed and had been agreed upon, the bill at that time being identified as Senate bill 1911.

A similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative CROSSER, of Ohio, on May 15, 1944. It carried the number House bill 4805. Hearings in connection with House bill 4805 got under way before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on May 23, 1944, and extended intermittently through June 1, on which date the Railway Labor Executives' Association committee concluded presentation of testimony in support of the bill then pending in the House of Representatives, House bill 4805.

The opposition to the measure succeeded in preventing resumption of the hearings up until the time the Congress recessed, on June 23. Congress reconvened on the 1st day of August 1944, and efforts were made by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, through its executive committee, to have the hearings before the House committee resumed. But on the 30th of August 1944, the House committee voted not to resume the hearings at that time. Congress adjourned without hearing the opponents of the bill.

When the Seventy-ninth Congress convened in January 1945, Representative CROSSER, of Ohio, on the 11th of January 1945, introduced House bill 1362, which is the bill now pending before the Senate. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] introduced Senate bill 293, on January 15, 1945. Hearings before the House committee got under way on January 31, 1945, and continued until February 16, when a recess was taken until February 27, on which date the opponents of the bill began the introduction of their testimony. Presentation of the testimony by the opponents was concluded on March 21, 1945. The hearings were resumed on April 18, and they were concluded on April 26, 1945.

Hearings on Senate bill 293 commenced on July 23, 1945, before the Senate committee, and were concluded on July 26, 1945.

In March 1946 a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, whose chairman was the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], reported to the full committee. On April 9, 1946, the subcommittee of the House committee made a report to the full committee.

The petition to discharge the House committee from consideration of the bill was filed in the House on April 18, 1946. That was more than a year following the introduction of the bill in the House, and nearly a year following the conclusion of the hearings before the committee of the House. On May 9, 1946, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the bill amended in substantial conformity with the recommendations of the subcommittee of that committee.

House bill 1362, as originally introduced by Representative CROSSER, was passed by the House of Representatives on July 3, 1946. It came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and on July 13, 1946, the committee reported the bill with the recommendation that it be passed without amendment.

I might say Mr. President, that this bill, involving as it does a tax upon the employer and the employee, could not be taken up and considered by the Senate until it had been acted upon by the House. Therefore, when the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, of which the Senator from Colorado was chairman, reported to the full committee it called attention to the full committee of the fact that the Senate could not act upon this legislation because it provided for a tax and, under the Constitution, it would have to originate in the House of Representatives.

The House bill came to the Senate and was referred to the committee. As promptly as possible, in the absence of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I, as the ranking member of the committee, called the committee into session and the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, there is an unfortunate parliamentary situation which has grown out of the delay elsewhere than in the Senate. I do not wish in any way to say anything which might be regarded as critical of the procedure in the other body which had this bill before it for so long a time. But the result of the situation is that the bill, having come to us only in July, and having been referred to the committee, and having been reported by the committee on the 15th of July, has come before the Senate so late that we are in such a parliamentary situation that, if the bill is amended in any particular, it will fail of enactment at this session of the Congress. That is an unfortunate circumstance for which the Senate is not responsible. I myself believe that the bill needs some clarification.

A great deal of confusion has been created in the country with respect to the coverage carried in the section of the bill dealing with coverage. The intent of the bill is to increase the tax on both the employers and the employees, that is, the carriers and their workers, in order that the fund may be strengthened and placed upon a sound basis. That is absolutely essential. It is unthinkable that this fine, progressive piece of legislation, which was conceived and advocated by the railway employees of the United States, should continue on crutches so that it will not have the full strength which it should have in order that it may be properly administered, and in order that the time will never come when the fund will be inadequate to meet the requirements of the law and the requirements and needs of the railway employees.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I may say that the bill contemplates including within its coverage railroad-owned trucks. In the case of railroads owning trucks, to all intents and purposes the operators of the trucks are employees of the railroads. The bill contemplates also including within its coverage freight forwarders, who, we understand, now occupy a special status with respect to transportation in interstate commerce. They are just as much a part of the transportation systems of the country as are the railroads themselves, or as are the railroad-owned busses or trucks.

In my judgment, there has been a great deal of confusion injected into the consideration of this legislation, whether by design or otherwise I would not say, as to the coverage of all sorts of activities and organizations which created within their own minds the fear that they were being taken into the bill. Among them are the ice companies. There is nothing in the bill which either specifically or indirectly refers to ice-manufacturing companies, or to ice companies which service the railroad cars. In the report of the committee it has been made clear that such companies are not intended to be covered by the coverage section of this bill. Warehouse companies which store articles of various kinds and operate as warehouse concerns, and may have commerce transferred from them to railroad cars and to railroad tracks, have developed the fear that they are covered under the language of the bill. I tried to make it clear in the report that that is not the intention of the bill, and so far as a report can clarify the bill to which it refers, I think that the report has done that. I do not mean to say that those fears do not bear on their face some justification, because the coverage section of the bill, from a technical standpoint, has not been as clearly drawn as it might have been.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not know who is responsible for sending persons from Chicago and other parts of Illinois to see me about this bill. But I do not believe, in connection with any bill, that more persons have come to see me with opinions of what the bill does or does not do.

The individuals who believe they are covered by this bill are not in accord with what the distinguished Senator from Kentucky has stated in his report. I am in favor of the fundamental principles of the bill, but certainly icemen, warehousemen, and a dozen others whom I could name should not be covered in a bill of this character. If there is any question about it, they should be excluded. That is the position I wish to take, and I have so advised persons from my State.

For example, men who are engaged in the trucking business in Chicago, and teamsters' groups there, are vitally interested in this bill and its provisions, especially the section regarding coverage. Their lawyers or representatives have advised them that, under the strict construction of the bill, they are covered. I do not know whether they are or not. I have not had an opportunity to analyze the bill from every angle. But not only one but at least eight or nine separate concerns have sent representatives to see me who have said definitely that they were covered under the bill, and have asked me, "Will you please take us out by an amendment?"

I do not know anything about the parliamentary situation. In fact, I thought an amendment or two might not hurt the bill. I more or less promised two men that I would support amendments of that nature. I now find, according to the Senator from Kentucky, that if I do that, I will defeat the bill because of a parliamentary situation which exists about which I did not know.

Mr. President, that is the situation I am in, and I wanted to make myself clear.

I think there is strong disagreement with the Senator's conclusions so far as paragraphs 2 and 4 of section 1 are concerned. After all, we have seen that the administrative agencies at the other end of the avenue do not always follow what Congress has recommended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I might say that I have been visited by representatives of some of the interests who indulge in fears such as the Senator from Illinois has described. I refer to representatives of such industries as ice companies, warehouse companies, and other companies of that nature. They came to me because I have supported the bill and filed the report on behalf of the committee. I have assured the ice companies that they are not covered, and there is a letter from the Railway Retirement Board itself in which they state that they would not interpret the law, even if amended, to cover those companies.

I am afraid that somebody has stirred up this fear. It is not so much a conviction as it is a fear which has been fostered, I am afraid, by those who oppose the legislation or do not want any legislation passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. This morning there was handed to me this communication from the National Association of Refrigerated Warehouses, and I imagine every Senator received a copy. It says:

> Section 1 (a) (2) of the bill specifically states that the term "employer" shall mean, among other things, "any person other than a carrier which performs any service within the term 'transportation' as defined in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act."
> The services included within the term "transportation" as defined in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act are receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage and handling of property, consequently the true meaning of section 1 (a) (2) of H. R. 1362 is as follows:
> "The term 'employer' shall mean any person other than a carrier which performs, for hire any service in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage and handling of property transported, being transported, or to be transported."

I call attention to the fact that if that interpretation had been adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission it would have been the duty of the Commission to regulate every one of them, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has never taken the position that these groups, which are not owned or controlled or operated by the railroad companies, come within the provisions of the act, and they have never attempted to regulate them.

Those who drafted the bill took the phraseology of the Interstate Commerce Act, which had been construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and I think by the courts, and they used this language in section 1, namely—

> Any person, other than a carrier regulated under part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, which, pursuant to arrangements with a carrier or otherwise, performs, for hire, with respect to passengers or property transported, being transported, or to be transported by a carrier, any service included within the term "transportation."

But the Interstate Commerce Commission has put an entirely different construction upon the term "transportation" from what these people are now seeking to put on it. The testimony before the Senate committee and before the House committee was exactly to the effect that it was not intended to include anything which was not either owned or operated by the railroads themselves.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield so that I may make a comment to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I attended practically all the hearings of the subcommittee, probably as many as any of its members except the chairman, as I think he will agree. The testimony before the subcommittee clearly showed that there was a difference of opinion, and even the proponents of the bill admitted that the language of the bill might very easily include workers of an ice company which sent ice to a depot. I recall reference being made to a small ice company in Phoenix, Ariz. They sent ice to the depot, and delivered the ice to refrigerate the cars. The representatives of the railroad brotherhoods contended very positively that the men who took the ice to the depot and serviced the trains would come under the proposed law.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is entirely wrong about that. I have not the testimony of one of the representatives of the railway companies who testified on the subject, but the question was definitely asked him in the House committee as to whether an ice company was included, and he said definitely and positively that it was not.

If the word "transportation" should be interpreted as those who are making this contention claim, it would not only have been the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it would have been their duty to regulate such companies; but the Commission has never construed it in that way.

I am sure the Senator is wrong in referring to the testimony on the part of representatives of the railroad brotherhoods, because everybody who was connected with the drafting of the bill said definitely that it did not cover such activities.

Mr. HAWKES. I dislike to disagree with my distinguished friend from Montana, but I have a very clear recollection, and I am sure the hearings will show, and I am also sure the chairman of the subcommittee will recall, that Mr. Schoene, who represented the railroad brotherhoods, and several others at the hearings, admitted that there was confusion in this definition, and that it should be corrected.

How about subsection 4, which reads:

> Any person engaged in rendering, pursuant to any arrangement for one or more carriers, any service which (i) is of such a nature as to be susceptible of indefinitely continuous performance and (ii) constitutes a part of or is necessary or incidental to the operation or maintenance of way, equipment or structures devoted to transportation use, or constitutes a clerical, sales, accounting, protective, or communications service necessary or incidental to the conduct of transportation carried on by a carrier, or is rendered with respect to passengers or property transported by railroad, at point of departure or shipment or at destination or between such points.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator is directing his question to me, I say that the language in subsection 4 is not intended to include an independent contractor. The language is intended expressly to eliminate an independent contractor.

Mr. HAWKES. What is the Senator's definition of an independent contractor?

Mr. WHEELER. An independent contractor is one who does a specific job at a certain time, and is not carrying on regular work for the railroad; for instance, a building contractor who does building work on the railroad.

Let me suggest what I think the language of section 4 is aimed at. For instance, the Santa Fe railroad during the war was unable to get men to work on the sections because it could not raise wages sufficiently high to attract men. So it let out contracts to someone who was not a railroad man at all, and who could pay higher wages. He contracted to do the work of the upkeep of the road. He had a wage scale which he could pay, and which would attract men to work on the railroad. But he was doing nothing but repair work, the same as the Pennsylvania, the Northern Pacific, or any other road would do. The only reason why the Santa Fe road did that was that it was the only way by which they could attract men to do the repair work and the section work which ordinarily would be done by the railroad itself

This language is inserted expressly for the purpose of enabling the roads to have essential work done. That is why there is included the language I have just read. In other words, where a railroad contracts with somebody to do essential railroad work, the section covers that, and it is intended to cover it.

Mr. HAWKES. It may be that the Senator is correct, and that that is what it is intended to cover, but the fact remains that warehouses, icing plants, those who serve the railroads with ice to refrigerate the cars, even the port authority in New York, and the public-service organizations which send electric cars to depots to pick up passengers are all concerned. The lawyers of most of them, some of the most eminent counsel in the United States, very definitely say that, as the bill now reads, they think it covers them, and they do not want to be covered. If it be true that there is a question of their being covered, why should we not correct the language of the bill now?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to continue, I may say that I did not rise to discuss the details of the bill section by section, because the Senator from Colorado, who is chairman of the subcommittee, and the Senator from Montana, who is chairman of the full committee, who introduced the legislation more than 2 years ago, will undertake that. I rose to make a preliminary statement calling attention to the difficulties we confront from a parliamentary standpoint.

I do not deny that the bill needs clarification with respect to coverage; but I think that any amendment to the bill at this time will mean that it will be dead, and that there will be no legislation looking to this end.

I have prepared a concurrent resolution to introduce to clarify the bill, so that there can be no question with respect to ice companies, warehouse companies, or others who should not be or are not intended to be covered. That can be attended to after the passage of the bill. But if we undertake to do it in the bill, under the unfortunate circumstances which I have described, it will mean that there will be no legislation at all. After all these years of efforts made to strengthen the law, and after we have gotten this close to final enactment, to fail merely because of delay somewhere for which we are not responsible, and when mistakes can be corrected later, where correction is needed, seems to be most unfortunate. That is all I have to say about it at this time. I did not intend to go into a discussion of the bill section by section.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I should like to suggest in connection with the criticism of paragraphs (2) and (4) particularly, that those who are interested in the matter should, in connection with those two paragraphs, read paragraph (11) on pages 6 and 7, which is an expression of clarification of paragraphs (2) and (4), specifically limiting coverage.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is undoubtedly true, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Did the Senator say that because of some parliamentary situation we cannot undertake to amend a bill 56 pages long, full of indefinite controversies, affecting millions of employees, and billions of dollars before we get through, simply because in some way it may delay the enactment of the bill into law? That seems to me to be the most extraordinary proposition I have ever heard advanced on the floor of the Senate in regard to important legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. It grows out of an extraordinary situation regarding this legislation. I do not say that the Senate could not amend the bill. The Senate has a perfect right to amend it all it wants to amend it. But I felt it my duty and feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if it is amended it will fail of enactment. I would not agree with the Senator from Ohio as to the bill being full of indefinite controversies, or as to the number of controversial points in it, but whatever clarification is needed so as to express the intention of Congress can be made by a concurrent resolution after the bill is passed, and it is to that end that I have had a joint resolution prepared undertaking to do that. Of course, the concurrent resolution itself could be amended when it comes before the Senate for action.

Mr. TAFT. I cannot understand how we can be sure of the passage of a joint resolution. If the House will not take our amended bill, why on earth will they take a joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the chances would be more favorable of getting action on the concurrent resolution than of getting action on the bill if it is amended because—well, Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the parliamentary situation that exists, or say anything about it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. We have a great social-security system in the United States, and we have this particular security situation under discussion which is confined to a certain group. Further action on the social-security system has been postponed. It also ought to be improved. Yet we propose to take a system which is handed to us to cover a certain number of employees, and accept it just as it is presented, dollar for dollar, setting an example for the social-security system for the rest of the people of the United States, for all other persons in the United States. I cannot understand why the Senate should not consider on its merits a measure so important as is this, and consider it, section by section, in connection with whatever amendments may be presented, and decide the amendments on their merits. If the House will not take them, that is the privilege of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senate can do that. It has a perfect legislative and parliamentary right to do that. It has the right to cut the bill to pieces and to change it in any way it sees fit to do. But what I felt it my duty to do and which I feel it my duty to do, under a situation for which we are not responsible, is to say to the Senate that that course means the death of the legislation. And we can, by a concurrent resolution, correct whatever needs to be corrected subsequent to the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that the author of the bill himself has proposed many amendments which he wished to have incorporated?

Mr. Latimer of the Railroad Retirement Board has something like 50 amendments which he wants incorporated, which the House did not incorporate, which our committee have even refused to consider. Is that not a fact?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether Mr. Latimer has any amendments, or if he has any, how many he has. If he had any amendments they may have been presented to the House committee. I will also say in that connection, that when the House committee, after a petition had been filed in the House to discharge the committee from further consideration, reported the bill with amendments, certain amendments were adopted by the House in the Committee of the Whole, and after the House went out of the Committee of the Whole and into the House, the amendments were rejected.

Mr. TAFT. By reason of that extraordinary procedure, as I understand, the House eliminated not only the controversial amendments proposed by the committee, but eliminated approximately 100 other amendments which were admitted by all persons to be necessary to clarify and improve the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that amendments which had been agreed to in committee were eliminated in the House. We are not responsible for that. I have told the Senate what would be the result of amendment by the Senate of the bill. The Senate of course can act in its own wisdom and judgment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to call attention to the language of the Interstate Commerce Act, and then to explain the construction which has been placed upon that language by the courts and by the Commission. I submit that it is not at all necessary to amend the bill. The only reason advanced for amending it is to quiet the nerves of some individuals who are becoming excited. Some of the amendments have been suggested by individuals who desire to defeat the bill. For instance, in my own State persons have come to me with suggestions for amendment, and I have tried to explain the whole situation to them.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have had the question put to me by some persons who were extremely desirous of having the situation clarified, and who had no purpose of stirring up controversy. For instance, as a concrete example, I mention the small ice company, the independent ice producer, who services the refrigerator cars of a railroad company under contract, perhaps from year to year or from month to month. The question arises whether the men who service the cars, and are in the employ of the ice company, come under this measure.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think they would. They are employees of an independent ice company, not controlled by the railroad in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. BARKLEY. And their services are paid for by the ice company, and not by the railroad.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The question is, Do those men come under the act?

Mr. WHEELER. No, they do not.

Mr. TAFT. Why are they not covered by section 4? The ice companies are independent contractors. They have to service the cars, day and night. It is a continual performance. I do not see how the language of section 4 can be construed not to include such companies.

Mr. WHEELER. The language in the Transportation Act of 1940 is as follows:

> The term "transportation" as used in this part shall include locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission had put the construction upon that language which is being contended for by ice companies and others, it would be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate every single one of these concerns.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is dealing with section 2. But section 4 says "transportation use not related to the Interstate Commerce Act in any way."

Mr. WHEELER. I am referring to section 2.

Mr. TAFT. I was dealing with section 4. I do not know enough about the Transportation Act to know what section 2 would cover, but section 4, it seems to me, clearly would cover the situation.

Mr. WHEELER. It certainly does not cover an independent ice company, and it certainly does not cover any independent storage company or any concern of that kind.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator says, "It certainly does not cover," but why not?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my statement. The Senator does not give me time to finish. I cannot cover the whole subject in one sentence. I first desire to call attention to the fact that the first objection made with respect to the coverage of this bill, and the big outcry against it, was with reference to section 2, because of the fact that the language of the Transportation Act, in section 3 (a), was used. The reason the language in section 3 (a) of the Transportation Act was used was that the courts and the Commission itself had construed that language and had interpreted it. I can understand how someone might go to an independent ice company or an independent refrigerator company and say, "You are included in this provision, because the language is broad enough to include you." But I cannot understand how a lawyer who has looked into the question and found how the courts and the Commission have construed the act could come to that conclusion. In dealing with this language of the Transportation Act, it is necessary to look at the construction which has been placed on it by the courts and by the Commission.

With respect to paragraph (4) on page 2, the question was asked by the Senator from West Virginia with reference to a company which furnished ice alone to the railroad company. Is that correct?

Mr. REVERCOMB. No, in the case that I mentioned, the general ice manufacturer merely furnished ice to the railroad company more as an accommodation because the railroad company's own supply of ice had gotten away from it. A contract was made with the ice company to furnish ice and refrigerate the cars at one or two stations. The employees—the men who did that work—are employees paid solely by the ice maker.

Mr. WHEELER. Frankly, that would be a very much closer case than the case of the ordinary ice company.

Mr. REVERCOMB. This is an ordinary ice company which furnishes ice to the public generally.

Mr. WHEELER. In my judgment, a company which furnishes ice to the public generally would not be included under the terms of the bill. If its principal business were the furnishing of ice to a railroad company under a contract, the situation might be different. The railroads own certain ice companies. There are certain ice companies which are exclusively in the business of furnishing ice for icing railroad cars.

Mr. REVERCOMB. This is an independent ice company.

Mr. WHEELER. Suppose the company, instead of itself furnishing the ice, sublets the contract to another company. Then I should say it would come under the terms of the bill. But in the case which the Senator cites, in which a company is engaged in the general ice business, and the furnishing of ice to the railroad is only incidental, in my judgment the company would not be covered.

Mr. REVERCOMB. This inquiry is made in a very serious way by the persons who are interested. They are relatively small businesses. The companies are in the general business of furnishing ice to the public, and one of their customers is the railroad. They furnish ice for the icing of railroad cars. That is the case which I have laid before the Senator. Why could not the whole question be taken care of by a simple amendment providing that those who come under the act shall be the employees of the railroad company?

Mr. WHEELER. That is what this language is intended to do. I cited a concrete example of the purpose of section 4. Take the Santa Fe railroad as an example. During the war it was not permitted to raise the wages of its section workers to the point where it could attract labor. In order to obtain the labor it had to deal with someone who was not in the railroad business at all, but who had a sufficiently high wage scale for common laborers to attract labor. He did the railroad work. He had never done any railroad work before, but he used employees who had formerly worked for the railroad, and he used railroad equipment. Under the language which the Senator suggests, those men would not come under the Retirement Act, although they are engaged in the business of taking care of the railroads.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I see the point of the able Senator. The railroad employees who have talked to me want the act kept as a railroad employees' retirement act. It is intended for railroad men. Why not clarify the whole situation by having the act apply only to the employees of the railroads, or those whose entire work is in the service of the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. If we were to use the language "in the service of the railroads," there would be many instances in which railroad contracts would be involved. The courts have held that certain dock workers who formerly worked for the railroad, and who were performing services for the railroad under a contract which had been let to someone else, were not railroad employees. But they were really doing railroad work.

Mr. REVERCOMB. They may not be working for the railroad if the work is performed under a contract which is let to someone else; but their work is devoted to the purposes of the railroad and so long as they are solely in railroad work they may well come under the retirement act. Let the language of the proposed bill be made clear on this point and remove this doubt about it, then the bill can be passed as truly a railroad employees' retirement act.

Mr. WHEELER. I feel quite positive that the interpretation which would be placed upon such language, and which should be placed upon it, would be that they would not be considered as coming under the Retirement Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if Members of the Senate will take the trouble to read the section of the committee report on pages 6 and 7, beginning with the subhead "Coverage," approximately a third of the way down on page 6, and extending to the end of the next to the last paragraph on page 7, I think they will get a very clear idea of what was intended to be covered by this legislation. The committee report goes into that question and points out the fact that the bill is intended to include two additional classes beyond those now covered: First, those who are engaged in what we call freight forwarding, whose services are indistinguishable from railroad services; and a second category including workers on railroad-owned trucks. Both of those categories include not more than 10,000 additional employees to be covered under the act, as compared with a million and a half railroad employees now covered by the act.

It seems to me that the report of the committee clarifies the situation so far as the intention of the sponsors of the bill is concerned.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say, and I yield the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fair statement that what the Senator is now advocating is that the Senate shall pass this legislation without the dotting of an "i," the crossing of a "t," or the insertion of a comma, practically eliminating ourselves as a part of the legislative machinery of the Government, and turning over full power and responsibility to the other body?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator can place his own interpretation on the action of the Senate, and can couch it in whatever language he chooses to use. What I have suggested to the Senate is that in view of the situation which exists—which I agree is an unfortunate situation—to change this bill in any particular would mean that it might not be enacted at this session of Congress.

Mr. WHITE. If that is the situation——

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the situation.

Mr. WHITE. If that is the situation, I would much prefer, instead of a complete surrender of our functions, to send this legislation in amended form to the other body, and let that body take some responsibility for what happens.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate has the right to do that, but I would prefer to pass this legislation as it is. After all these years of study, interminable hearings, and delays, I would rather pass it as it is and run the risk of correcting whatever ought to be corrected independently of a vote on the bill than to amend it and thereby make it impossible to legislate on the subject.

Mr. STEWART and Mr. CAPEHART addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have occupied the floor longer than I intended. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are in charge of this legislation. I made this preliminary statement because, in the absence of the Senator from Colorado, I called the committee together and made the report.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky one question.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, have I the floor?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I still have the floor, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky claim the floor?

Mr. BARKLEY. I had intended to yield the floor, but if any Senator wishes to ask me a question, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Senator place in the RECORD the interpretation by the committee which appears on page 7 of the report?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if that is what the Senator refers to.

Mr. STEWART. I wonder if the Senator would mind placing in the RECORD that particular part of the report which interprets the provisions of the bill relating to coverage?

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the section of the report beginning on page 6 with the subhead "Coverage" and extending over to page 7, down to the subparagraph entitled, "Elimination of Inequities and Facilitation of Administration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Coverage: The bill, in section 1, redefines the term "employer" by spelling out in more detail the application of the act to companies and associations that are a part of the railroad industry but are not technically "carriers." It was the purpose of the present law to cover not only technical "carriers" but all other elements in the railroad industry such as railroad subsidiaries engaged in performing service in connection with railroad transportation, railroad associations, tariff bureaus, demurrage bureaus, railway labor organizations, and so forth.

The bill brings under the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts two new groups of employers, namely, railroad-controlled trucking companies and those freight forwarders that are not now covered. The railroad-controlled trucking companies are operated as part of the raiload plant for the performance of railroad transportation. (See Interstate Commerce Commission et al. v. Harry A. Parker et al., Supreme Court of the United States No. 507, October term, 1944, and brief of Pennsylvania Railroad Co. filed therein.) The reason they have been heretofore treated differently from other railroad subsidiaries performing service in connection with railroad transportation is merely historical accident. The employer definition of the Railroad Retirement Act and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act was largely copied from the Railway Labor Act where trucking subsidiaries were excepted because at the time of the Railway Labor Act amendments of 1934 the labor relations of these companies were governed by the NRA trucking code and it was not considered desirable to disturb the then existing situation. That condition has long since passed and in any event there has never been any valid reason in principle for making a special exception of trucking subsidiaries as distinguished from other railroad subsidiaries so far as the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts are concerned.

Freight forwarders are intimately associated with the railroad industry. The great bulk of their employees perform work that is indistinguishable from the handling of less-than-carload lot freight by regular railroad employees. The employees are nearly all represented by a standard railway labor organization, the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. Two of the largest of the companies are held by the Railroad Retirement Board to be railroad-controlled and, therefore, covered under present law as railroad affiliates performing services in connection with railroad transportation. The anomalous position that these companies occupied in relation to the railroad industry for regulatory purposes was brought to an end in 1940 when they were brought under regulation by the Interstate Commerce Act. They should now similarly be uniformly covered by the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts.

The total number of employees brought into the system by such extensions of coverage is estimated not to exceed 10,000 as against some million and a half carrier employees currently covered. The inclusion of these relatively few additional employees could in no event impose any ascertainable burden on the railroad retirement account as a result of their not having been subject to tax in the period since 1937; and the probabilities are that these circumstances impose no financial burden at all since the employees involved are on the whole of a younger-age group than carrier employees on the whole.

Many representations have been made to the committee indicating that persons (other than carriers subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act) engaged in manufacturing, harvesting, storing, distributing, selling, or delivering refrigeration or ice to or into equipment used for refrigeration purposes in connection with the transportation of passengers or property are included in the term "employer," and that therefore their employees will be considered to be railroad employees. The committee would like to state categorically that there is no purpose or intent to include such persons as employers under the act and that it is the unanimous understanding of the committee that such persons are not so covered. The committee also unanimously understands that notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (2) and (4) of section 1, there is no purpose or intent to include warehouse or trucking companies, or individuals carrying on either of such businesses, within the term "employer," if they are not owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by, or under common control with, a carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Is it the opinion of the Senator that if there is any ambiguity in the bill the interpretation of the committee will govern?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the report of a committee interpreting a bill is not always automatically binding upon a court or administrative agency. But it certainly has great weight, and ought to have great weight, in elucidating the intention of Congress in enacting the legislation.

Mr. STEWART. As I understand the Senator from Kentucky, in the light of the report on the bill, there is no question that the companies to which reference has been made are not included.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my interpretation. Let me say, also, that I believe that will be the interpretation of the Railroad Retirement Board itself.

Mr. STEWART. As I understand, that is the interpretation of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, there is no question about it. I have gone into the question very thoroughly, not only with the attorneys for the Railroad Retirement Board, but with members of the Board. I am sure that that is the construction which the present Retirement Board places upon the bill. That is the construction placed upon it by the lawyers for the railroad men, and that is the construction that was placed upon it by the majority of the committee.

Mr. STEWART. And that construction would carry weight.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Retirement Board should place any other construction on it, I should say that it would be placing a construction upon it which was never intended.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, being a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I feel that I have some slight responsibility in connection with this proposed legislation. I believe that the RECORD should be made perfectly clear with respect to what has happened up to date in connection with this measure.

I think it is a fact that the subject was studied in the House, and that hearings were held over a period of possibly 2 years. A subcommittee of the Senate committee also held hearings. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House held 37 hearings and approximately 20 executive sessions. It spent many days on this legislation. It finally reported a bill to the House, which I offered as an amendment the other day and asked that it lie on the table. I offered it as a substitute for this bill. The House committee, after days and weeks and months of study—the sort of study I presume that the majority leader was referring to a moment ago—of the so-called Crosser bill, finally reported to the floor of the House a bill which was completely and entirely ignored by the House. The House passed the original bill, notwithstanding the fact that the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board was anxious to have many perfecting amendments added to that bill, and notwithstanding the fact that there were many other amendments which it was admitted should have been incorporated in the bill. The bill which the House passed—not the bill which was recommended by the House committee, which spent so long in studying it, as the Senator from Kentucky has said—finally came to the Senate. The Interstate Commerce Committee held a hearing which lasted about 30 minutes, at which time the chairman of the subcommittee, the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], admitted that the bill possibly should be corrected and that there were many errors in it. However, he suggested that the errors could be corrected next year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I simply wish to announce to the Senate that the President has signed the OPA bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, after 30 minutes in the full committee, we listened to the same story which the able Senator from Kentucky told us a moment ago, namely, that we must take this bill just as it is, because if we amend it one iota, no matter what the reason, there will be no legislation on the subject.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention to the fact that the House committee reported no bill until a petition was circulated in the House to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. In our judgment, if that petition had not been circulated, the committee probably would not have reported any bill on the subject. That shows, to my mind, that the House committee did not give very serious consideration to the subject, although the committee had the bill before it for a long period of time.

Furthermore, let me call attention to the fact that, while the House gave consideration to it and likewise the Senate committee gave consideration to it, and held long hearings on the bill——

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator means the subcommittee; does he not?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the subcommittee.

Mr. CAPEHART. And the chairman of the subcommittee reported to us in the full committee that the bill did contain many errors and imperfections which should be corrected.

Mr. WHEELER. No report of that kind was made to the full committee.

Mr. CAPEHART. The chairman of the subcommittee, the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], reported to the full committee that the bill did have some errors in it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am happy to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not want the Senator to misstate my position, although unintentionally, of course. I did state to the whole committee that the subcommittee was of the opinion that the bill could very well stand some amendment, and that in our opinion amendments on coverage were very desirable. I also stated to the committee that if we attempted to place any amendments in the bill, even amendments of a clarifying nature or merely in the nature of making a correction of a typographical error, the bill would go to conference, and there it might possibly be held, and in that case there would be no legislation on the subject at all.

The Senator will recall that I presented the matter in that light before the committee. Although I said that perhaps some amendments were desirable and that the subcommittee would suggest a few amendments, not many, I also said that under the parliamentary situation which we were facing it was not desirable to amend the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if I remember correctly, at the same meeting we likewise asked a representative of the Office of the Legislative Counsel whether in his opinion the language of the bill was such as to bring under the terms of the bill the ice companies and the forwarders and the terminal people. He stated to us that in his opinion it was.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not care what the representative of the Office of the Legislative Counsel may have said. I was not there when he testified. But I say that in view of the construction which has been placed on the Transportation Act by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the courts, how any one, whether he is member of the Office of the Legislative Counsel or is holding any other position, can say that the ice companies will come under this bill is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether in his opinion, if it were possible to have the bill amended and enacted at this session of the Congress, the Senator would recommend that it be amended.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know. I do not know whether amendments are necessary.

Let me say that the only reason why the majority leader suggested the passage of the joint resolution is that every time a bill is introduced in the Senate, someone representing certain groups expresses the fear that the proposed legislation will do this or will do that. After the measure is enacted, the fears disappear. I have never seen any important legislation come before this body but that some lawyers in the business of representing certain parties would attempt to conjure up in the minds of their clients certain fears. That seems to be their work, and that seems to be the way they earn their money.

I do not think it is necessary to amend the bill. But if it would calm the fears which some people seem to have, I say that for that purpose the joint resolution suggested by the Senator from Colorado would be all right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. REED. With the permission of the Senator from Indiana, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the construction recently placed upon the term "transportation" and the effect of paragraph (2) of section 1 of this bill. One must go back to the beginning of section 1.

I read subdivision (a) of section 1:

> The term "employer," except as otherwise provided in this section, shall mean—
>
> * * * * *
> (2) Any person, other than a carrier regulated under part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, which, pursuant to arrangements with a carrier or otherwise, performs, for hire, with respect to passengers or property transported, being transported, or to be transported by a carrier, any service included within the term "transportation."

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. WHEELER. So do I.

Mr. REED. This copy is corrected up to January 1, 1946. Here is what is included in paragraph (3) of section 1, as included in the Transportation Act:

All services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

If that is not broad and all-inclusive, according to the language of paragraph (2) of section 1 of House bill 1362, I would have difficulty in understanding what would be.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator is an expert on transportation, and I am sure he understands that if this language were as broad as it is contended to be, then it would be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate every one of the ice companies and every one of the other companies.

Mr. REED. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Montana, but that is not a correct interpretation of the law. The Interstate Commerce Commission regulates the carrier. The carrier can hire and can pay for the icing and for his various other activities under the act. They are not brought under regulation as a common carrier. But this bill provides that, within regulations—

The term "employer" except as otherwise provided in this subsection, shall mean—

When we go to paragraph (2), we find this:

(2) Any person, other than a carrier regulated under part I of the Interstate Commerce Act—

So let us leave that out and read it in this way:

(2) Any person * * * which, pursuant to arrangements with a carrier or otherwise, performs, for hire, with respect to passengers or property transported, being transported, or to be transported by a carrier, any service included within the term "transportation" as defined in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act, whether or not such service is offered under railroad tariffs.

Here is section (1), paragraph 3, of the Interstate Commerce Act:

The term "transportation" as used in this part shall include locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement for the RECORD. I believe it to be a true statement, and if it is not, I shall be very glad to have any Senator correct it.

I assert that the bill which was studied for 2 years, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated, and considered by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee consisting of some twenty-odd members, which held 37 hearings on it, is, in form, the bill which I hold in my hand. It was recommended by the House committee but is not the bill we are considering today. The bill we are considering today is the original Crosser bill, and it is not the bill which the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House reported to the House.

Mr. WHEELER. But the bill reported by the House committee was promptly voted down. The pending bill is the one which was studied in the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

Mr. CAPEHART. I admit that the House passed the bill, or otherwise it would not be before us at this time. I still believe that the RECORD should show that the bill we are now considering is not the one the Members of the House committee reported to the floor of the House. Therefore, what we are now considering has not received 2 years of study, as the Senator from Kentucky has stated.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill before us now is the bill which the House studied because it was introduced by Representative CROSSER, and it was studied for 2 years.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am glad the Senator has made that statement. He is correct. The bill which the House originally studied and held hearings on for 2 years is the bill which the House threw aside as being undesirable and, in its place, passed a different bill. I have in my hand the original bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, is the bill which the Senator is holding in his hand, namely, the one which the House had presented to it after a prolonged study, the same as the one which the Senator from Indiana is offering as an amendment in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. CAPEHART. The amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I hold in my hand, is, word for word, the bill that was reported to the House following a great number of hearings, as I have stated.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CAPEHART. The bill which I hold in my hand is the one which, after 2 years of study and hearings, was recommended by the committee to the House, but was not passed by the House.

Mr. DONNELL. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana in the nature of a substitute, which was presented on July 19 and ordered to be printed and lie on the table, was not passed by the House.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Is it not also correct that the version prepared by the House committee was rejected by the House by an overwhelming vote, after which the House itself returned to the version which the Senate has now before it?

Mr. CAPEHART. It is obvious that the House passed the version now before the Senate or it would not be before the Senate. But I rose solely to keep the RECORD straight, inasmuch as the able Senator from Kentucky tried to leave the impression that we are now considering a bill which had received approximately 2 years of study on the part of a House committee, that the House had passed it, and that it was the last word on legislation of this character. The facts are as I have described them. The committee which held hearings and studied the bill for a period of approximately 2 years or more reported to the House a bill entirely different from the one we are now considering.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I think the Members of the Senate should know that this question is not one concerning alone a change in the definition of coverage. The bill goes to the fundamentals of everything in the social security set-up and the social economic set-up in the United States.

Some time ago the Government made a horrible mistake under which officers received terminal leave. The other day the Senate passed a bill to give terminal leave pay to millions of enlisted men. Every other Senator to whom I talked said, and I agreed with him, that we had to vote this $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 more in order to do justice to the enlisted man.

I ask Senators if we have a right to pass a bill which would put a railroad man into a separate classification and place him on a separate and distinct unemployment compensation basis from all the other workers in the United States? If we make that mistake, we will be asked later to vote for a bill to adjust every single classification of workingmen and all other groups of workers in order to do justice. No member of this body has a greater respect for the railroad workers than do I. I also have respect for the other industrial workers throughout the United States. I assert that this bill has in it more to be cured than merely a definition of coverage.

There must be something done about the unemployment compensation fund of $790,000,000 already collected. Over the past 5 years, excluding this year, there has been used less than $10,000,000 a year. I understand that this year, because of the coal strikes, the railroad strikes, and so forth, resulting in the payment of unemployment compensation, the requirement will be somewhere between $18,000,000 and $20,000,000. As I say, there is in the fund approximately $790,000,000. The withdrawals from the fund over the past 5 years, excluding this year, have been less than $10,000,000 a year. The interest on the compensation fund of the railroads at the present time is more than $15,000,000 a year, or almost as much as the greatest expenditure of any year in connection with unemployment insurance.

Mr. President, I want the Senate to realize that before an amendment I have introduced is disposed of I shall bring certain facts to the attention of the Senate. I believe them to be facts which it will be the duty of the Senate to consider and carefully analyze before embarking this Nation straight on the road to socialism.

I wish to make another statement the truth of which all Senators well know. This bill was voted out of the Interstate Commerce Committee in a way which amazes me more than anything which I have before seen in the 3½ years I have been here. The bill was reported by the committee by a vote of 11 to 9. Three proxies were used in order to obtain the 11 votes in favor of reporting the bill. I am not saying that the action taken by the committee was not proper and not in accord with the practices of the Senate, but I do assert that no business institution in the United States which expected to live would follow a process of that kind. The merit of the bill was never considered in any way by the main committee. I asked every member of the Interstate Commerce Committee if he had read the report and knew what the bill contained, and whether he had read the House report, and most everyone answered in the negative. The chairman of the subcommittee, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who is a very dear friend of mine and whom I respect very highly, undoubtedly has read all the reports as well as the bill. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is also a friend of mine and whom I respect very highly, has undoubtedly read all the reports and the bill. But all the remaining members of the committee then present admitted to me that they knew nothing about what the bill contained. No hearing has ever been held on the bill in the Interstate Commerce Committee. The subcommittee reported to the main committee, but the main committee never gave the matter any consideration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWKES. I do not have the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I merely want to say that I read the bill.

Mr. HAWKES. But the Senator from Minnesota did not read the hearings, did he?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I read a great deal of them.

Mr. HAWKES. Very well; I will give the Senator credit. He was not at the meeting of the committee the other day, was he?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; I was not in Washington.

Mr. HAWKES. Therefore, the Senator was not present to vote. I am referring to the members who were at the meeting of the committee the other day. I did not mean to leave any implication with regard to the Senator from Minnesota, but he was not present, and his proxy was used to vote out the bill which had never been considered by the main committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me at this point for a brief statement?

Mr. CAPEHART. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from New Jersey referred to the fact that proxies were used in connection with the vote of the committee. I ask the Senator if there is any rule of the Senate which directly or indirectly authorizes the use of proxies for voting in committees?

Mr. HAWKES. I can only answer the distinguished Senator from Missouri by saying that I have been told, I believe by the majority leader, and by other Senators who have been in the Senate for a great many years, that it is a custom which is followed. Whether or not it is a rule of the Senate, I cannot answer.

Mr. DONNELL. Has the Senator ever seen a rule of the Senate that authorizes the use of proxies to vote in a committee?

Mr. HAWKES. I have not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield——

Mr. CAPEHART. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have been a Member of the Senate for 24 years, and through all those years I have seen proxies given for voting in committees when members were absent.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator from Missouri did not ask me that question. He asked me if I had ever seen a rule which authorized it. I have not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, that is different.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWKES. So that I may make this statement to the Senate a little consecutive, I should like to proceed, then I shall be glad to answer any question.

The question was raised in the committee as to whether we should not defer the consideration of the bill for just 2 days. Does the Senator from Indiana remember that?

Mr. CAPEHART. I do, distinctly.

Mr. HAWKES. A motion was made to vote the bill out, when every member of the committee, excepting possibly two or three, admitted that he knew little or nothing about it. The distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] offered a substitute motion that the bill be laid on the table until Monday, so that we could have a chance to understand it.

I am not a parliamentarian, but without any reflection on the majority leader, he refused to put the substitute motion of the Senator from Kansas to a vote. We debated the question, and discussed it, and he finally put the original motion to vote the bill out. The bill was voted out.

I have talked with parliamentarians around the Senate, and the best informed men in the Senate, and they tell me that the majority leader should not have done that, that the substitute motion should have had the right of way before the committee.

Now let me say one more thing, Mr. President, and then I shall be through, I assure the Senator from Indiana, but I want to get something in the RECORD which backs up what the Senator is saying.

When this bill was returned from the subcommittee to the main committee, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] knows, it contained 17 major changes in the existing railroad retirement and compensation laws, and it had in it 73 less important changes.

I ask, how can we expect to have the respect of the people of the Nation if we put a bill of this vast importance through a committee, and are willing to enact it into law as it is written, just because we are coming to the close of a session?

I have not seen anyone particularly interested in some of my bills because the session is coming to a close. No one was interested at the end of the last session, when there was on the calendar a very important bill, which had been before the Congress for 7 years, which had been passed four times by the House and three times by the Senate, with amendments. Nobody worried about that bill dying. We had to let it die, because it was considered necessary to give it careful thought and attention, because it affected the economy of the Nation.

Mr. President, with the kind indulgence of the Senator from Indiana, I wish to read just the first paragraph of the report of the subcommittee to the main committee, and if that does not show that this bill is important and needs attention and thought, and involves a great many things, I do not understand the English language. I read:

The subcommittee, consisting of Senators JOHNSON of Colorado, HOEY, BRIGGS, SHIPSTEAD, and HAWKES, to whom was referred the bill S. 293, a bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes, having held full and complete hearings, report back to the full committee the major controversial—items contained in the bill. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce also held extended hearings on a companion bill, H. R. 1362, extending over the period January 31, 1945, to April 26, 1945. Said hearings have been printed in three volumes and are available for study by the committee.

Mark that word "controversial"—

Mark right here, the committee admitted that outside of two or three, no member had ever had time or opportunity to read the hearings.

The questions of policy needing decision are of such great importance that the full committee will find, after study and deliberation, that it will of necessity have to make the decisions itself—

I ask right there, how could the full committee make any decision when they never studied the bill and never studied the hearings, and had but 1 hour and 20 minutes together, in which they debated only the question of voting out the bill?—

and the subcommittee therefore felt that no useful purpose would be served by deciding such questions and reporting them in the form of a finished bill to the full committee. A comprehensive and important report dealing with the over-all issues relating to national social security is pending before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the problems raised by S. 293—should be studied carefully in connection with the recommendations made in that report.

Mr. President, I submit to every Senator that the very first sentence of the report of the subcommittee shows conclusively that the bill is of vast importance, that it affects our whole structure of American life, and, regardless of the merits of this or that contention, that it needs consideration.

I for one take issue with some of my very good friends on the committee. I would not rather have an imperfect bill, that would wreck the whole United States, than to have nothing at all because we are reaching the end of the session.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question that the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 should be amended and overhauled and rewritten, and many inequities corrected. There is no question that the fund is insolvent for the purpose intended, there is no question that legislation is needed on this subject. But I certainly cannot understand why in the case of legislation so important and so far reaching as this the majority leader should tell the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and then rise on the floor and tell the Senate, that, if amended, the bill will die with this session of the Congress. I do not understand it. I wish the Senator from Kentucky were present and I wish he would give us the reasons why he thinks it is impossible for us to amend the bill, to correct the bill, as everyone agrees it should be corrected.

I have talked with a number of high ranking officials of the railway brotherhoods, and they do not want the ice companies and other companies included in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. CAPEHART. Just a moment. Why cannot we be told the reason why it is impossible for us to amend the bill and perfect it? What is the reason? Why can we not amend the bill and send it to conference? Why can we not hold a conference with the House, and agree on a decent piece of legislation which will protect the interests of all involved? What is the reason for it?

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am happy to yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought the Senator from Kentucky made it perfectly clear that, in the legislative situation in which we are at the present time, to amend the bill would mean to kill it, that we would not be able to get a conference. We are asking for a conference now with the House on another bill, and it is necessary to get a vote in the House in order to determine the question, because someone may rise and object, and so they have to have a vote on it. It would be physically impossible to have a conference on this bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Do physical conditions constitute the reason why it cannot be done?

Mr. WHEELER. Physical conditions. I am told that as a matter of fact there will not be a quorum in the House after Saturday.

I am sorry more Senators are not present, because I wish to present an interpretation of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the question we are discussing. I happen to have before me excerpts from some of their decisions, and I wish to read them, as follows:

Storage of property transported is a transportation service only to the extent that it is necessarily incidental to the transportation of such property, and the term has been used in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act in that limited sense. (Guaranty claim of Central Elevator & Warehouse Co. (72 I. C. C. 169); Storage Rules on Fruits and Vegetables (95 I. C. C. 871).)

Storage of commodities outside railroad cars for convenience of shippers while markets are being sought is not properly a rail carriers' function. (Reconsignment and storage of lumber and shingles (27 I. C. C. 451).)

Storage of grain beyond the 10-day elevation period is no part of elevation nor a transportation service. (Allowances to elevators by Union Pacific Railroad Co. (14 I. C. C. 315).)

Transportation ceases with unloading of railroad car at the warehouse. (Storage Rules on Fruits and Vegetables (95 I. C. C. 87).)

That, Mr. President, is exactly what I have called attention to. It is said, "This service is transportation." The Interstate Commerce Commission has passed on this question, and has said, "Transportation ceases with unloading of the railroad car at the warehouse."

Compression of cotton is not a transportation service for the shipper, and no obligation rests upon the carrier to perform the service or to pay for it if it is performed by shippers. (New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Georgia & Florida Railway Co. (146 I. C. C. 245).)

So the reason for the use of the language in this measure was because of the limited construction that has been placed upon 3 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. CAPEHART. May I say in closing that the individual Senators are asked to be rubber stamps and to put their seal of approval upon a bill which it is proposed to have passed, without having the right of amending it. If they do not put their stamp of approval on it, if there are some things they dislike about the bill, if they wish to amend the bill to take care of things they dislike in it, they will be placed in the position, in the eyes of the proponents of this legislation of being against them. I am not so certain, Mr. President—I dislike to say this—that there is not a certain amount of politics tied up in the handling of this bill.

AMENDMENT OF THE SENATE RULES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the other day when certain legislation was pending in the Senate a situation arose relative to the placing of an amendment on a bill, which was not germane to the subject matter of the bill. I believe the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] at that time probably performed a very useful service, because I am frank to say that, using the British expression, I took a rather dim view of his attempt to place a nongermane amendment upon a piece of legislation which I had advocated on the floor of the Senate. But I think that it forcefully brought home to this body the importance of having a rule relative to germaneness, because as the result of the move by the Senator from Oregon we were almost precipitated into an incipient filibuster at a time when the Senate was trying to transact the public's business.

For that reason, Mr. President, I am proposing today two amendments to the rules of the Senate, one relative to the question of germaneness, which is a short rule, and I wish to read it into the RECORD at this time:

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate are amended by adding at the end thereof the following new rule:

"RULE XLI

"GERMANENESS

"No amendment to any bill or resolution pending in the Senate which is not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in such bill or resolution shall be received or considered; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of any such bill or resolution be received or considered which does not directly relate thereto. All questions of germaneness or relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate."

I ask unanimous consent to submit this resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 312), submitted by Mr. KNOWLAND, was received and referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I have one other resolution relative to the cloture rule. The amendment provides, as does the present rule, that a petition shall be signed by 16 Senators. It provides that when any one of the 16 Senators moves that the cloture resolution be drawn up, it can be drawn up on such a motion. Then, as under the present rule, the matter may lie over with one intervening day. Then, as under the present rule, a quorum call is had prior to the vote on the cloture resolution. But instead of requiring a two-thirds vote, this amendment would require a majority vote of the full membership of the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit the resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 313), submitted by Mr. KNOWLAND, was received and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate are amended to read as follows:

"If at any time a motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure is signed by 16 Senators, any Senator signing such motion shall upon a request for recognition be recognized by the Chair for the purpose of presenting such motion to the Senate, and when such motion is so presented to the Senate the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by an aye-and-nay vote the question:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of the entire membership of the Senate, then said measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that it seems to me vitally important in this atomic age in which we are living that this legislative body should not permit itself to be tied up, and, using an Army expression, to be "snafu" in its legislative processes. All over the world people are questioning the ability of representative government to be able to meet the problems of this generation, and I feel that, as Members of the Senate of the United States, we have an obligation to take whatever reasonable steps may be necessary in order to prevent the Senate from becoming entangled, thus endangering the public business.

COMPILATION OF PRECEDENTS OF THE SENATE—AMENDMENT OF SENATE RULES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to take a minute or two to comment on the statement made by the Senator from California. First, I assure the Senator from California that I shall support the two proposed changes in the rules which he has suggested this afternoon. Publicly on more than one occasion I have supported the principles set forth in the Senator's proposals. I have gone further and suggested some other changes in the rules which I think should be adopted. However, I wish to make one comment in view of the fact that he raised the point concerning the procedure which I adopted the other day in offering a rider to the tidelands bill.

I think it was generally agreed, even by the opponents of my position in the matter, that I was well within my parliamentary rights, and that I was doing nothing more than has been done on the floor of the Senate a great many times during the past year and a half while I have been a Member of the Senate. I shall do likewise in the future so long as the archaic rules of the Senate permit of such procedure, if for no other reason than to continue to demonstrate the need for modification of the rules so that such procedure cannot be followed.

I wish the record to be very clear that I believe that in that particular instance the ruling of the Chair, which permitted the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to offer an amendment to the tidelands bill after 3 o'clock, was a ruling from which there should have been an appeal, because, having made some study of that particular ruling since the other day, I am inclined to believe that it is not in accordance with the precedents of the Senate. But in view of the fact that the majority leader saw fit to adopt that strategy in seeking to attain his ends in connection with the tidelands bill, I thought it my duty—and I use the word "duty" advisedly—to offer to the bill an amendment of the nature of that which I offered, because I think it makes crystal clear the importance of adopting just such a rule of germaneness as the Senator from California has suggested this afternoon, and which I shall most certainly support.

In closing, let me say that following the study of the whole problem of precedents which I have made since the other day, I have prepared, and submit at this time, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Parliamentarian of the Senate be authorized and directed to prepare a complete and annotated digest, with a full index, of the precedents and the decisions on points of order in the Senate down to the close of the Seventy-ninth Congress, and that 1,000 copies be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

I believe that such a study is of great importance, especially to the younger Members of the Senate, who have not had the opportunity to sit here and learn by observation, as have some of the older Members, the workings of the precedents of the Senate. We are at a great disadvantage if we do not have readily available to us a digest of the precedents of the Senate. We are constantly facing the type of criticism which my good friend from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] offered the other day when, within the proprieties of parliamentary forms of the Senate, he offered certain criticisms of the strategy used by the junior Senator from Oregon. I know of no one in the Senate better versed in parliamentary strategy than is the Senator from Georgia, nor one who uses strategy more frequently in connection with legislation in which he is interested. He does it so well that he has my highest admiration. The fact that I followed in his footsteps the other afternoon should not reflect against me. However, it illustrates the importance of making available to all of us the precedents of the Senate.

The Parliamentarian advises me that a few years ago a similar request was made, that it is on the books, and that he has been diligently working on the assignment, but that the long sessions of the Senate have not afforded him ample time to complete the assignment. However, he states that he intends to proceed to complete that assignment at the earliest opportunity. Not with the idea in mind of having my resolution adopted if another resolution has already been adopted by the Senate—which the Parliamentarian assures me to be the case—but as a matter of record, so that the RECORD may show that the issue was again raised in this session of Congress, I submit the resolution and ask that it be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 314) submitted by Mr. MORSE was received and referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MORSE. Let me say in closing that I hope that at the beginning of the next session of Congress we may proceed thoroughly to study the rules of the Senate, to the end of completely revising them. I think the word "completely" is the proper word to use in connection with the rules of the Senate. I think they must be completely revised if we are to function as a democratic parliamentary body charged with the responsibility of carrying out our obligations to 140,000,000 people.

Let me say to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] that I was very much interested in his remarks this afternoon with regard to the exercise of proxies. Although he did not say so specifically, I judged that he meant to imply by his remarks that he is opposed to the exercise of proxies. If that be true, I am sure that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and the junior Senator from Oregon will welcome him as a recruit into our fraternity, which is a fraternity which is seeking to abolish the exercise of proxies in Senate committees.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I should like to say to the Senator from Oregon that I am opposed to the use of proxies, not only in the Senate, but in directors' meetings and other places. It seems to me that a man who cannot be present to hear what is going on, so that he may vote intelligently, should lose his vote.

I also wish to say that if I had my way there would never be a vote in the Senate on an important and fundamental issue which would not be a yea-and-nay vote. Every Senator should be willing to stand before the public for exactly what he does and says in this body.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado obtained the floor.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I should like to address an inquiry to the Senator from Colorado, and possibly in his explanation of the bill and in his discussion of it, he can cover some of these points. I am not entirely unacquainted with this proposed legislation, because as a freshman Member of this body about 6 years ago I had quite an argument about the increased railroad rates which were being requested, as I recall in 1940. I am not now a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, so I do not know about this legislation in detail. As I remember, the measure we have before us covers two points, retirement and unemployment. With respect to retirement, we have an employer contribution of about 3½ percent of the pay roll, and an employee contribution for retirement of the same amount, 3½ percent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct, as of this year; yes.

Mr. GURNEY. Then for unemployment purposes, the employee does not contribute, but the employer, the railroad, contributes about 3 percent.

As I understand, under this bill, it is intended to leave the unemployment contribution as is, at 3 percent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. And for retirement purposes the contribution is practically doubled.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; it is increased 2½ percent on both employers and employees.

Mr. GURNEY. It is practically doubled. It is raised from 3½ percent to 6 percent for both employees and employers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In 1949 the 3½ percent automatically goes to 3¾ percent, and then there is an increase to 5 percent which becomes fully effective in 1952.

Mr. GURNEY. The net effect of it, though, is a large increase for retirement purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. And it is proposed to leave the unemployment contribution about the way it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. The question I want answered is this: If we are going to make these huge increases, almost double, do they not eventually fall on the user of the railroads, the shipper? Eventually rates will have to be raised, will they not, to cover these increases? I want to be sure that that question is answered. Because of the huge fund, $780,000,000 or $790,000,000, as it is at the moment, is it necessary to continue the employer contribution of 3 percent, merely to add to that fund? It seems to me that we ought to cut down on the unemployment contribution by the employer, always being sure, of course, to keep the fund of sufficient size to take care of any possible contingency or unemployment. But why could that not be transferred over to the retirement fund? That is, the employers' contribution now for unemployment should possibly go to build up the retirement reserve.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think it would be a sound solution to transfer it. The Senator will agree that in the case of social security there is a 3 percent tax levy altogether on the employer. What has happened in connection with social security is that there has been some relaxation in the payments. The employers do not pay the full 3 percent.

Mr. GURNEY. We are holding it at 1 percent all the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The payment varies throughout the States. Some States require a greater payment and some States a lesser payment. The payment varies also with the industries. An industry which has a record of low unemployment does not pay as much tax as an industry which has a high record of unemployment.

Mr. GURNEY. I understand that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the way the States regulate the payment. But all States have a maximum of 3 percent, and I think it is advisable and necessary to have such a maximum. The matter of having some relaxation could very well be considered.

Mr. GURNEY. I do not like to get the social security question mixed up with the railroad question. I simply want to make the point and see if the Senator is going to tell us whether or not increased charges are in prospect for the shipper and also for the passenger on the railroad.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Quite obviously the only source of railroad revenue is out of the shippers and the users of the railroads. All wages and all benefits of the employee must come out of the shippers eventually. I do not want to argue the question. I think that categorical answer perhaps is sufficient. But I would say to the Senator from South Dakota that the shipper is also interested in good service, and good service comes from having contented, interested employees on the railroad. So if the shipper is going to have to pay the costs one way or the other, he had better pay them for an excellent service than pay a smaller rate perhaps and receive very poor service.

Mr. GURNEY. Then, as I understand the Senator's answer, if we raise these contributions to the retirement fund or unemployment fund, then that does make for increased railroad service costs and the shippers can contemplate increased rates in order to bring about a balance in the future. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The shippers must pay the bill.

Mr. GURNEY. There is one further point to which I should like to invite the Senator's attention. I refer the Senator to pages 458 and 459 of the hearings on Senate bill 293. Evidently an effort was made to justify the request for higher rates by showing that there would be railroad unemployment in the postwar period. I notice that for the year after victory in Europe it was estimated that 75,000 men would be unemployed, because they would be displaced by servicemen. In the first postwar year it was expected that 100,000 would be unemployed; and 70,000 in the second postwar year. No figures on the subject are given for the third and fourth postwar years, so far as servicemen are concerned. In my judgment the justification shown by that table is now out the window, because the Supreme Court has held that servicemen may not displace nonveteran employees. That decision would apply to railroads. Also the railroads had a seniority contract of employment, and they never did let a nonveteran go in order to give a veteran a job. That testimony was given last week before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for his views on this subject.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take very much time. We have before us two reports from the committee. There is the original report, and also a supplementary report. Those reports deal with the provisions of the bill in great detail. I think they offer a full explanation of the bill. I do not think it is necessary for me to go through the bill section by section at this time and tell what the bill does or does not do.

The debate on the bill so far has been very disappointing to me. We have not seen the forest for the trees. As a matter of fact, we let one tree get in our way so that we could not see the forest at all. We have been quibbling over whether or not serving railroad equipment with ice brings certain employees under the provisions of the act. The answer is that there was no intention to bring them in. There was no such intention on the part of those who wrote the bill. The committee by unanimous vote—and I made the motion in committee—placed certain language in the report showing that the committee was of the opinion that the ice companies and certain other services somewhat connected with the railroads were not to be brought under the terms of the bill.

There are important matters in the bill which ought to recommend themselves very strongly to Members of the Senate. I agree with the majority leader that we are in a rather unfortunate parliamentary situation, with Congress getting ready to adjourn, the House having passed the bill at a very late date. Since it was a revenue bill we were estopped from considering the subject until the House sent us a bill. In the closing of the session perhaps every member of the committee will not have a full opportunity to satisfy himself as to all of the provisions of the bill. The bill is rather large, comprising 60 pages. It is a technical bill; it is not a bill which may be read in half an hour and be thoroughly understood in all its particulars.

The provision relating to coverage, to which I referred a moment ago, is a very difficult one to write into the bill. The proponents of the bill were trying to bring under the bill and into the retirement system only the men who are doing railroad work. Sometimes, as was stated by the Senator from Montana a few moments ago, the railroads contract for some of the work which formerly was done by railroad employees. In that way, of course, the railroad retirement system has lost certain employees, unless they are also brought within the system.

It was to take care of situations of that kind and to meet arguments made on that basis that the bill was introduced. There have been a number of suits in the courts on the point of whether certain employees were covered. The proponents of the bill and its authors were trying to correct that situation and to make it perfectly plain to everyone who was covered and who was not covered.

I agree with the majority leader that their efforts left something to be desired, and even today the matter of coverage is not clear. But all that can be corrected. If we wish to pass the bill, if we are in favor of the larger provisions of the bill, the matter of coverage can be corrected, if it is necessary to correct it. Frankly, I doubt whether it is necessary to do so. I think perhaps the report which came from the committee clears up the whole matter in a satisfactory way, and I do not believe anything will come from it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall not prolong the discussion on that point, because, as the Senator from Colorado has said, no doubt it has already been unduly magnified. However, I wish to say that I do not see anything in sections 2, 4, and 5, which I think are the pertinent sections on this point, which would prevent the carrying out of the declared intention of the committee, as stated in its report, which has been called to the attention of the Senate and has been put in the RECORD, namely, that ice plants and warehouse plants, unless they are owned and controlled directly or indirectly by the railroads, are not affected, nor are trucking companies or companies engaged in the trucking business, unless they are directly or indirectly controlled by a common carrier, as defined in the Interstate Commerce Act.

In addition to that, I do not find in those three sections or in any other section language as to coverage which in my opinion would be held by a court to outweigh the declarations of opinion which have been expressed on this floor or which are stated now by the Senator from Colorado, who is handling the measure, which previously has been handled in the Senate by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and by the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the majority leader.

So it seems to me that these expressions by the committee and by Senators who have debated and discussed this matter should make it preeminently clear that any possible ambiguity should be resolved in favor of limited coverage; and, as a matter of fact, it seems to me that the people who fear they would be covered unintentionally have no justification for such a fear, because we know that the courts in interpreting ambiguous language in a legislative enactment will always look at the legislative history of the enactment, to see what was the intention of Congress, and they will read the congressional debates in order to see what was the purpose and the intention. So the courts will read this debate in order to see what was the purpose and the intention of the Senate when it gave its assent to this measure, if it does do so.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. HAWKES. I simply wish to ask a question and to say a word to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Very well; I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Let me say that I agree with the Senator that the courts can look to the debates on the floor of the Senate, in order to obtain the proper interpretation of the language contained in the bill, unless the language in the bill is so clear that the courts think they do not need to refer to the debates. But let us always remember that the courts are not bound by the debates on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; we all know that, Mr. President.

But I wish to call attention to the fact that, taking the interpretation as it is intended here, and as we are now discussing it upon this floor—as being the meaning of the language—there is still a scope and a sphere in which all the other language of the pertinent sections will have meaning and force and effect. For example, the provision that people who have arrangements with a carrier or otherwise under section 2 are covered, can exclude the ice people and the warehouse people and the trucking people, and at the same time it can cover all the many other independent contractors who are rendering service for the railroads. So that language will have meaning and significance, even if we interpret it as not covering the ice people, the warehouse people and the trucking people whom we do not wish to have covered.

It appears to be clear that in the closing hours of this session of the Congress we are faced with the question whether we wish to pass a bill which will confer benefits on more than a million faithful railroad workers, a bill which will make provision for them in sickness, for their security in their old age, and for their support and sustenance when they are out of employment, and the like. I repeat, Mr. President, that the question is whether we wish to benefit more than a million faithful railroad workers by passing this bill, or whether the fear that a few people who are not intended to be included may possibly be included should keep us from passing this bill.

In the first place, I think it is without doubt that the courts cannot give to the words referred to a meaning contrary to that stated in the committee and in the debates on the floor of the Senate. I would not include one of these people; certainly not one of the truck people. If I thought they were going to be included, I would not vote for the bill, but I am confident they are not included. I do not wish, however, to deprive the faithful railroad workers of the beneficial provisions of this legislation. For that reason I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for the very fine statement he has made. It seems to me he has placed the issue squarely before us. The question is whether we are for the bill or whether we are against it. Of course, the matter of whether we shall cover into the system a few persons whom we do not wish to have included is not the issue at all.

In addition to what has already been said, I should like to state that when Mr. Robertson appeared at the House committee hearings—and the testimony I shall read will be found at page 956 of part 3 of the House hearings—the following occurred:

> Mr. HARRIS. * * * Now, Mr. Robertson, I would like to ask, merely for clarification in my own mind, about the intent with reference to coverage that is proposed in this legislation.
> Could you or would you state whether or not it was the intention to take in such industries as ice companies, the ice industry, cold-storage warehousing industry, cotton compresses, and so forth?

Mr. Robertson, we should remember, is president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and he is one of the proponents of the bill. In fact, he has taken the leadership in trying to have the bill enacted. This was Mr. Robertson's reply:

> Mr. ROBERTSON. Well, I can make a definite answer to that. No; it was not. We might just as well face the facts. We did not come here with any legislation designed to impose a railroad-retirement act on ice companies. We do not work for ice companies.

Of course, Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that the folk who are interested in this whole program, in this whole system of retirement, are not interested in covering a number of others who do not work for the railroads. They want all the railroad employees to be covered, but they do not want to include any others, because that would place an extra burden on the railroad employees. For that reason, if for no other, they are glad enough to stay within their own industry.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who were not present a few minutes ago, let me say that I called attention to the fact that section 2 of the bill, which was being construed as taking in ice-company employees and storage-company employees and other employees of that kind, should be considered in connection with the construction placed by the Interstate Commerce Commission on section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act. The construction the Interstate Commerce Commission has placed on that provision would absolutely eliminate entirely the ice companies and other companies from coverage.

At this point I should like to call attention to some decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I hope these will be sufficient to do away with the fears of those who are afraid that ice companies or independent contractors will be included.

The first decision to which I wish to call attention is as follows:

> Storage of property transported is a transportation service only to the extent that it is necessarily incidental to the transportation of such property, and the term has been used in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act in that limited sense.

It will be noted that reference is had to transportation as defined in section 1 (3). That case is the guaranty claim of Central Elevator & Warehouse Co. (72 I. C. C. 169), Storage Rules on Fruits and Vegetables (95 I. C. C. 87).

Here is another decision:

> Storage of commodities outside railroad cars for convenience of the shippers while markets are being sought is not properly a rail carriers' function.

That case concerns the reconsignment and storage of lumber and shingles (27 I. C. C. 451).

In the matter of allowances to elevators by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. (14 I. C. C. 315), it is said:

> Storage of grain beyond the 10-day elevation period is no part of elevation nor transportation service.

In Storage Rules on Fruits and Vegetables (95 I. C. C. 87), it is said:

> Transportation ceases with unloading of railroad car at the warehouse.

In New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. Georgia & Florida Railway Co. (146 I. C. C. 245), it is said:

> Compression of cotton is not a transportation service for the shipper, and no obligation rests upon the carrier to perform the service or to pay for it if it is performed by the shipper.

So a conclusive and absolute interpretation has been placed upon section 1 (3) by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This language was used in the bill solely because the interpretations which I have cited had been made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me while the chairman of the committee is on the floor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield in just a few minutes.

I thank the Senator for reading into the RECORD the evidence to which he has referred. It seems to me that it should clear up the entire matter. Of course, that is what the proponents of the bill were trying to do. Many decisions have been made with respect to the question. Whether the language of the bill could be improved or not, is beside the point.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to address a question to the able chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

As specifically mentioned, those decisions pertain to ice manufacturers. I wish the Senator would give his opinion with regard to the coverage of trucking companies, and let us see if the Senator is in accord with the language of the report which reads as follows:

The committee also unanimously understands that notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (2) and (4) of section 1, there is no purpose or intent to include warehouse or trucking companies or individuals carrying on either of such businesses—within the term "employment," if they are not owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by, or under common control with a carrier subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

That is the carrying on of a business by truck—

If the Senator is in accord with that statement in the report of the committee, is it his opinion that trucking companies, trucking workers, truck drivers, and so forth, would not be covered unless the trucking company were owned and controlled directly or indirectly by carriers subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act?

Mr. WHEELER. That is absolutely correct. Of course, if a trucking company or a bus company is owned by the railroad system it is, of necessity, a part of the railroad company and comes within its control.

I have in my hand a decision by Mr. Justice Murphy in which he states:

The motor trucks transport less-than-carload lots of freight in complete coordination with the railroad service. The railroad instituted this additional method of transportation in order to furnish an improved and more convenient freight service to the public in certain areas of light traffic and in order to curtail car mileage way-freight service. Motor vehicle transportation, in other words, is merely a new method of carrying on part of its all-rail freight business in which it had been engaged for many years.

Protestants, in contending that the application in this case must be denied unless it is found that the existing motor and rail facilities are physically inadequate to handle the freight in question, are guilty of a fundamental confusion. They have confused cases like the present one, which involve simply an attempt by a railroad to improve its own existing service through the substitution of motor for rail handling of certain freight and the use of its motor carrier subsidiary for that purpose, with the quite different type of case in which an independent motor carrier seeks to inaugurate a new service, as, for example, a general over-the-road service, in addition to and in competition with other existing motor carriers who provide the same type of services.

In other words, the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. itself contended in its application that what it was using was motors and trucks as a part of its all-rail service and, of course, as such they must be and should be included in this bill, just as they are included generally under the Transportation Act. But the independent companies do not come under the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. It is not intended to cover the men who act as independent contractors in hauling materials to and from the railroad within towns and cities, and so forth?

Mr. WHEELER. Definitely not.

Mr. PEPPER. The railroad must have a proprietary interest in the truck in order to be brought under the act?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, is anyone covered under this bill who is not already covered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; the trucking companies owned by the railroads are covered, and the freight-forwarding companies are covered. I do not know of anyone else who is covered.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding of the bill, that the two classes of persons the Senator has now designated are specifically set out in the bill as being covered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; they are specifically covered.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator read the language to which he refers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Paragraph (3) on page 2 of the bill reads in part, as follows:

Any freight forwarder: A "freight forwarder" is any person— •

And then the language describes him. He comes under the bill.

Then on page 3, in paragraph (5) the following language appears:

Any person which, through any form of property interest is directly or indirectly subject to control by or to common control with a carrier—

Then if we turn to page 4 of the bill, in line 2, we find the words:

is engaged in transportation by motor vehicles.

So they are pointed out and named. They are covered by the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, allow me to give the Senator an example and see whether or not the warehouseman whom I have in mind would be a freight forwarder under the construction of the terms as found in this bill.

Assume that I want to ship household goods from Washington to Chicago, and wish to place them in Chicago temporarily for a period of 2 weeks, not knowing whether I will want to ship them into Wisconsin or into southern Illinois. I place those goods in a warehouse for 2 weeks' time. Are the employees in the warehouse at Chicago, as the result of that storage, covered under this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the warehouse company belong to a railroad company?

Mr. LUCAS. No; it does not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is a privately owned warehouse?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Such a warehouse and its employees are not covered by the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. But they are a part of the transportation activity which is taking place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The freight forwarder who took the goods and shipped them to Chicago would be, if he issued a bill of lading, under the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. What is a freight forwarder under this bill? What does the term include?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The term "freight forwarder" is well known.

Mr. LUCAS. I know it is well known.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will read from page 2 of the bill what is said there about a freight forwarder.

A "freight forwarder" is any person, other than a carrier, which holds itself out to the general public to transport, or provide transportation of property for hire, and which in the ordinary and usual course of its undertaking assembles and consolidates, or provides for assembling and consolidating, shipments of such property, and performs, or provides for the performing of, break-bulk and distributing operations with respect to such consolidated shipments, and assumes responsibility for the transportation of such property from the point of receipt to point of destination, and regularly and substantially utilizes, for the transportation of such shipments, the service of one or more carriers.

That is what a freight forwarder is under the bill, and a freight forwarder and employees of a freight forwarder are covered in the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. And they are not covered under the present law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Some of them are covered and some of them are not. There have been court decisions on that point.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. First I want to read what the committee had to say about paragraph (3). I read from the supplemental report, page 2:

Paragraph (3): Freight forwarders, while they have the characteristics of shippers relative to the railroads, have most of the characteristics of carriers with respect to their own clientele. Regulatory policy with respect to them was controversial for many years, and was finally settled by the Transportation Act of 1940.

As the Senator from Kansas well knows.

They are now subjected to regulation of much the same character as that applicable to carriers, and the fact that the regulatory policy is expressed in a separate title of the Interstate Commerce Act so as to permit more precise adaptation to the particular aspect of transportation carried on by these companies affords no sound basis for differentiating the employees from railroad employees. In any realistic sense they are part of the railroad industry and are carrying on railroad transportation.

Two of the three largest freight forwarders have been held, administratively, to be railroad controlled and are consequently covered under present law as interpreted by the Railroad Retirement Board and the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The definition here used to describe freight forwarders is taken from the Interstate Commerce Act with only such adaptations as are necessary to confine it to companies regularly and substantially utilizing railroads as the means of transportation.

So under existing law some freight forwarders were covered and some freight forwarders were not, but if the pending bill is approved, then all freight forwarders will be covered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I promised to yield to the Senator from Kansas. I wish to finish up with the Senator from Illinois, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas would like to have the Senator from Illinois listen, if he will, to what he is going to say about the error made by the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Colorado, both of whom very earnestly desire that the facts be stated. But they have put themselves a little crosswise.

The Interstate Commerce Act gives the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to regulate common carriers by railroad. In performing railroad service there are various things included in the term "transportation." I read the provision before, and I shall read it again. This is what is included in the definition of the word "transportation":

The receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

Those all may be included and are inclued as incidental services under "transportation." But the Interstate Commerce Commission does not regulate the warehouseman. The icing man is not a carrier, but is performing an incidental service. If the railroad puts in its tariff a charge, as it does, for icing and other incidental services, it collects it, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has never undertaken to regulate these incidental services for carriers. That is the error into which the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Colorado have fallen.

The bill for the first time in my knowledge of interestate-commerce legislation and administration does include these people. The bill defines "employer," as follows:

The term "employer," except as otherwise provided in this subsection, shall mean—

(1) Any carrier: A "carrier" is any express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

(2) Any person, other than a carrier regulated under part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, which, pursuant to arrangements with a carrier or otherwise, performs, for hire, with respect to passengers or property transported, being transported, or to be transported by a carrier, any service included within the term "transportation" as defined in section 1 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act, whether or not such service is offered under railroad tariffs.

That is as plain as anything can be. These people for the first time, in my knowledge of interstate-commerce legislation and interstate-commerce administration, are brought within the terms of the act.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WHEELER. Since I have been referred to, the Senator will pardon me, I am sure.

I appreciate that the Senator from Kansas is a great lawyer and understands the law, but he entirely misconceives the purpose of the act. I read a portion of the act a moment ago which he read, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly interpreted and defined the word "transportation" as used in this bill. They have said that an elevator, for instance, and other activities, icing companies, and the like, are not included in the term "transportation." They have specifically said that when a carload of wheat, or of a similar commodity is in an elevator, it is not included under the term "transportation," and that the railroad cannot be held liable. They have held that an article that is waiting to be transported does not come within the term "transportation." There cannot be any question about it at all.

While I respect the view of the Senator from Kansas on transportation, I cannot say that his conclusions with reference to matters of law in reference to this question are at all sound. I challenge anyone who has read the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission to come to any other conclusion than that which I have suggested.

The reason why that language was used in the bill was because the Interstate Commerce Commission itself had interpreted the word "transportation" in a limited sense, as it said in the case which I read just a moment ago.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not underestimate the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and his interpretation of what the bill means. Candidly, I have had no opportunity to analyze it from a legal angle. I presume it would take some time for one to go into a careful analysis of the decisions which have been made from time to time. However, it is something which is new, as I understand, and what I cannot understand is why so many people have been worrying me if it is as clear as the Senator from Montana claims it is. I do not say that in any disrespect at all, but I do not think there has been any piece of legislation before us in connection with which as many different people who were involved, or at least thought they were covered by the bill, came to see me.

I have heard some insinuations on the floor of the Senate to the effect that some want us to believe that the railroads are responsible for stirring up this agitation. I hold no brief for the railroads whatsoever, but I wish to say that so far as railroad men are concerned, no railroad man has ever talked to me at any time about the bill. But the iceman has been to see me, the truckman has been to see me, the warehouseman has been in, the man who makes the cups which go on the trains for drinking purposes has been in to see me, and I have another list somewhere in my files, which I am not able to find at the moment. These people are all asking for exemption from the bill.

When I talk to the brotherhood men they tell me they do not want these men included, and others who are widely interested in the bill do not want them included. Because of a parliamentary situation, we cannot offer an amendment to exclude these men, and make it certain that they are not included. It seems to me to be a rather unfortunate situation in which we find ourselves. When I talk to the brotherhood men, they say "Of course we do not want these men included," and I tell the men, "Yes, I will vote for an amendment under those circumstances to eliminate them, and I pledge myself to vote for the amendment." Then when I come to the floor of the Senate I learn from the majority leader that because of the parliamentary situation in the House we have to take the bill as it is or we get no bill at all. That is a very unfortunate situation in which to place Members of the Senate.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, if there is any question about any of these people being included in the over-all provision which we find in the first section of the bill, I am going to vote for an amendment that will strike it out, because I do not think they should be included, and I do not think we should take any chance of a board or a court following what the committee says in its interpretation. I have seen how courts and boards function, and we have all observed it, and the one thing we have been contending about as much as anything on the floor of the Senate is the failure of the bureaus of the Government to follow the interpretations, and the records made in the Senate in the way of interpretations of certain bills. The only way we can be sure about a thing of this kind is to write what we want into the law. That is my position.

I regret that I am in this position. I want to make it clear that I am definitely in favor of the fundamental and basic principle of the Railroad Act. I say these men are entitled to what they are asking for. But in order to give them what they are entitled to, I do not think it is fair to include every Tom, Dick, and Harry all over the country whose work is incidental to the transportation system, and who feel, simply because they serve some part of it, that they are covered by the act. We must do something about that. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote to exclude them when the time comes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely want to ask a question. I do not disagree with the statement made by the able chairman of the committee as to how the Interstate Commerce Commission has interpreted the present Interstate Commerce Act. But we have before us a new measure. Is it not true that the measure contains greater coverage than the present law?

Mr. WHEELER. It does, and is meant to provide greater coverage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; it is meant to cover two different categories which were not included in the original act.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask a question about a freight forwarder. Suppose a freight forwarder forwards one-third his business by rail, another third by trucks, and the time is not far distant when he will forward one-third by air. Does he come under this act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He comes under the act in that case.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that practically all the clerks working in freight-forwarding organizations belong to the railroad brotherhoods. A great part of the business they do is absolutely incidental to railroad transportation. Consequently there is no reason in the world why they should not come under the act.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think that situation is changing considerably.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that the freight forwarders themselves have begged for legislation which would put them under the Interstate Commerce Act. I have sought to have that done, although there has been a tremendous amount of opposition to that suggestion. However, I thought it would be right to have them placed under the Interstate Commerce Act, because they render valuable service in connection with transportation. I think we have done the right thing to include them and to bring them under the act. But, Mr. President, they cannot come in and blow hot and cold on this question. They cannot blow hot one minute and cold the next minute. Yet that is what they are doing. One minute they say, "We are engaged in transportation and we want to be under the Interstate Commerce Act, and be regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission." The next minute they say, "We do not want to be included." I have no sympathy with them when they do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I want to finish my answer to the Senator from Washington. I was interrupted, and so, did not finish it. In paragraph (3) on page 2 of the bill, after describing what a freight forwarder is, the following language occurs:

> And regularly and substantially utilizes, for the transportation of such shipments, the services of one or more carriers.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is rail carriers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Then on page 6 there is a paragraph on segregation, that is assigning certain services here and there. The effect of that paragraph is to bring within the purview of the bill only that part of the freight-forwarder's activity which is in the service of the railroad. It does not bring into the bill the services the freight forwarder renders to air or to some other kind of transportation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. How can the employer I refer to be brought in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He can be brought in if he can separate his business.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is the thing that bothers me. At least 90 percent of the freight forwarders are freight forwarders for railroads. But I can see a condition in the very near future when a freight forwarder may use another means of transportation, and he would still be under the Railroad Retirement Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Not if he uses that other means of transportation exclusively.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But if he divides his business, what then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If he is unable to make a separation himself, that is something else.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Another thing that bothers me is this: Let me give my own experience. When I was in school I worked for an ice company. The railroads would ship truck and produce and lettuce out of the city of Seattle. They needed their cars iced only about 3 days a week. We would go down to the yards and ice the railroad cars. The other 2 or 3 days of the week we would go about our other business for private individuals. The railroads paid us for our service to them. That is, they paid the company, and the company turned the money over to us. That portion of the service would be included under the act, would it not? We were paid by the railroads for the time we iced the cars for the railroads.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No, it is not meant to bring such individuals under the act at all.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I mean for the time we were paid by the railroads?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If one is a railroad employee, and is paid by the railroad, that is a different thing.

Mr. MAGNUSON. For the 2 or 3 or 4 days we worked and iced the railroad cars, for the number of days of work we were paid by the railroads. But the rest of the week we worked for someone else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. For the part of the time the Senator and his associates were employed by the railroads and were paid by the railroads for the time they were on the pay roll of the railroads they would of course be included in the Railroad Retirement Acts. But for the time they got their pay from a private ice company they would not be included.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Then, as the Senator from Michigan pointed out, I would have social security 3 days a week and railroad-retirement benefits three other days of the week.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, most of the ice servicing is not handled in that way any more.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It is on the small sidings where the produce comes in perhaps only 2 or 3 days a week that it is necessary to re-ice the cars. It is still done in my State in the fruit and berry industry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Anyone who works for the railroad and receives pay from the railroad is brought under the act.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I take the same position as does the Senator from Illinois. I want to do what is sought to be done under the basic purposes of the bill. But I am somewhat confused by the added coverage. All of us want to vote for this measure, but we are all concerned about the coverage. There is no question that the bill goes further than the original act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It goes further with regard to freight forwarders and to truckers that are controlled and owned by the railroad company.

On the point of segregation, I want to read these words with respect to a person who works for more than one type of transportation. The language is found on page 6, line 15:

> If the Board finds that a person is principally engaged in activities other than employer activities and that its employer activities are conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which it is principally engaged, such person shall be an employer only with respect to such employer operation or operations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. As a matter of information, does the Senator then include motorbus operators? I have a number of telegrams from motorbus operators protesting very strenuously against the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If motorbus operations are owned and controlled by the railroads they are already covered in the act.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know for certain, but my impression is that the Pennsylvania Greyhound, for instance, one of the largest operations in the country, is owned 50–50 by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and that some other Greyhound operations are similarly owned half and half. Would they be covered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Railroad Retirement Board has never held that the Greyhound Lines are covered by the act.

Mr. TAFT. Is the new bill exactly the same on that subject or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; it is exactly the same on that subject. The bill extends coverage on truck lines that are controlled, whereas the present act does not include truck lines that are owned by the railroads.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that everyone who is not included under this system is included under the Social Security System?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think that is correct.

Mr. TAFT. What is the difference then? Why change the present coverage? Why transfer somebody from one system which we have set up as adequate for the people of the country generally, to some other system, and introduce this complication? What is the reason for it? I think it is somewhat doubtful whether we should have two systems, but what is the use of shifting people from one to the other? Why not leave them where they are?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In these two categories I think it was advantageous to put the individuals where they belonged. They should have been put there in the first instance.

Mr. TAFT. What differences does it make? Have any of the employees of these companies asked to be transferred?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. So far as I know they have not.

Mr. TAFT. Then, why should we transfer them? If they prefer the Social Security System, why not let them stay there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Because they are railway employees and ought to be included.

Mr. TAFT. There are many other circumstances that would determine the situation. If we do not want the railroads to farm out their work they can all come under the Interstate Commerce Act. But why is not one system just as adequate as the other? Why give special privilege to certain persons and exclude others?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They were inadvertently left out of the original act. I think it is very proper that they be brought in now under this measure. But no one wants to extend the coverage beyond that.

Mr. TAFT. Who wants them brought in? I know the trucking unions are violently opposed to being brought in. Why should we step in from a supreme height and suddenly transfer a great number of persons from one system to another, when no one wants them transferred?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The railroad brotherhoods and the employees of the railroads want them transferred because they belong in that category.

Mr. TAFT. I do not understand that they want most of those who are protesting transferred.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They want those in the two categories which I have mentioned transferred.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that the railroad brotherhoods put up one-half of whatever is put up under the Railroad Retirement Acts, and the railroads put up the other half. What is happening is that the railroads, in order to get around the provisions of the law, have started to farm out some of their work.

Mr. TAFT. Is there any evidence that that has been done?

Mr. WHEELER. Definitely.

Mr. TAFT. Was there any evidence before the committee that there had been any serious abuse in that connection?

Mr. WHEELER. Definitely. Reference has been made to the Santa Fe Railroad, and other railroads.

Mr. TAFT. What has been described here was done during the war, because of war conditions, and not because of any particular effect of this act. Is it not natural to suppose that at the end of the war the railroads will go back to normal methods of operation?

Mr. WHEELER. Unquestionably the Santa Fe Railroad will do so. However, a short time ago, I called attention to a case involving the Pennsylvania Railroad. The Pennsylvania Railroad wanted to use trucks as a part of its transportation system, and filed an application for a truck line. The Pennsylvania Railroad applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to operate a truck line or bus line—I believe it was a truck line. The Pennsylvania Railroad was called upon to make a showing that adequate transportation did not already exist. The railroad company took the position that it was not required to make such a showing, because it was in an entirely different category from that of an independent trucking company or bus line. It contended that the truck line or bus line was part and parcel of its railroad service as a whole.

All we are seeking to do in the bill is to place the employees of truck lines or bus lines which are part and parcel of the whole transportation system in the same category with other railroad workers. When truck lines and bus lines are owned by the railroad, there is no reason why the employees of such truck lines or bus lines should not be included under the provisions of the act.

Mr. TAFT. One truck line happens to be owned by a railroad. Another truck line, alongside, is not owned by a railroad. One pays 15 percent and the other pays 5 percent, or whatever the social-security tax is. Why should there be a difference? A man working on one truck line gets certain benefits, and a man working on the other truck line gets something else. What is the reason or justification for each system?

Mr. WHEELER. If we followed the line of argument of the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am perfectly willing to yield, but I cannot hear what the Senators are saying, and confusion seems to reign supreme.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield in a moment, but I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Does the Senator from Ohio believe that railroad employees who are under the retirement system should allow their work to be farmed out to contractors, simply because the social-security rates are lower than their own rates? Does the Senator think that is fair?

Mr. TAFT. The effect of the rates is a very incidental question. The question whether the railroads shall be permitted to escape the operation of certain railroad laws by operating truck lines is something which must be dealt with on a far broader basis. I believe that it is a great mistake to create two systems which will be as radically different as these two will be when we get through with the bill. It seems to me that the two systems should be gradually brought together so that they will be substantially the same—if we are to have two systems. If we make such a vast difference as is proposed in the bill, then we have problems arising as to someone on one side of the street paying three times as much as someone on the other side of the street. Such a situation gives rise to all the problems which have been presented here. Fundamentally, the difficulty is in having two systems, which we are now making even more radically different than they were before. I believe that that part of the bill which conforms the Railroad Retirement Act and the Social Security Act by providing payment for survivorship, and even providing further benefits, is all right. But it seems to me that the railroad retirement system goes far beyond the Social Security System. It provides infinitely greater benefits and involves infinitely larger taxes. There is no real justification for the distinction. I think that is the problem which we must face in considering a bill of this kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Railroad employees see their work getting away from them and being farmed out to contractors. Naturally they are not pleased with that kind of a condition. The question has been in the courts. One case was in the courts for 8 years before it was decided.

I should like to place in the RECORD at this point a description of four or five cases.

The first case involved the coaling, sanding, and cleaning of locomotives. That was one railroad service which was taken away from railroad employees and farmed out under contract. Another case involved maintenance-of-way work. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] mentioned that case. Maintenance-of-way work has always been done by railroad workers. It is being farmed out to contractors.

Another case involved the handling of locomotive coal and sand, unloading coal, removal of locomotive cinders, cleaning cars, and similar services. That work was let out to contractors. It is work which has always been done by railroad workers.

Another case involved freight-handling services. That work was farmed out under contract.

Still another case involved operations on railroad-owned ore docks, coal docks, sand houses, and cinder pits, and operations of railroad boarding camps—work which has always been done by railroad workers, and which is now farmed out under contract.

Another case involved railroad-controlled warehouses. In that case the warehouse was owned and controlled by the railroad.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator believe that the difficulty was perhaps as much due to the fact that the railroad workers received higher wages than other workers, as it was to the Social Security System?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to read a paragraph from a memorandum regarding railroad-controlled warehouses——

Mr. TAFT. The Social Security System is only incidental to the problem which the Senator is raising, as to whether or not railroads should farm out work. The railroads probably find that by doing so they can escape from the operation of the rules of railroad unions, and that it is cheaper to have the work done in that way. If we wish to stop the railroads from farming out work, we ought to enact a law directly on the subject, and prohibit them from doing so. But I do not see what bearing that question has on whether or not certain workers are to be included in the Social Security System or the railroad retirement system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think we ought to enact a law prohibiting the railroads from doing what is complained of. I thought the Senator was a great believer in the free enterprise system. But when a railroad takes work away from its own employees, certainly such employees ought to come under the same retirement system that covers railroad employees.

Let me read a paragraph from the memorandum with regard to railroad-controlled warehouses. The case referred to has been in the courts for 8 years.

One wholly-owned railroad subsidiary (Duquesne Warehouse Co.) operates two warehouses owned and leased to it by the parent railroad (Pennsylvania Railroad Co.). At one warehouse the railroad subsidiary handles and stores carload sugar (all of which comes in and goes out over the railroad) under a so-called storage-in-transit privilege covered by tariffs filed by the railroad with the Interstate Commerce Commission. At the other warehouse, the railroad subsidiary handles freight which has come in, or is destined to movement, over the parent railroad's lines. The Railroad Retirement Board and the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled that the railroad subsidiary was an "employer" under the Railroad Retirement and Carriers Taxing Acts because the unloading, storage in transit, and the subsequent loading of the sugar and other freight under the circumstances were services in connection with railroad transportation. The railroad subsidiary contested these rulings and after nearly 8 years of controversy the United States Supreme Court upheld the Railroad Retirement Board's decision.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point descriptions of the several examples of cases to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIVING EXAMPLES OF THE FARMING OUT OF RAILROAD WORK TO CONTRACTORS OR RAILROAD SUBSIDIARIES AND OF THE PERNICIOUS CONSEQUENCES THEREOF

COALING, SANDING, AND CLEANING LOCOMOTIVES

One contractor (Colianni & Dire Co.) undertook to provide for two railroad companies (Boston & Maine Railroad Co. and Chicago & North Western Railway Co.) certain services consisting of coaling and sanding of locomotives, knocking and cleaning of locomotive fires and the wiping of engines. On one of the railroad companies the contracts cover the work in question at only four of the company's engine houses, at 18 of its other engine houses the work is being conducted by the railroad through individuals who are admittedly its own employees. Moreover, prior to the inauguration of the contracts, the operations at the four engine houses covered by the contracts were also performed directly by the railroad through individuals admittedly its own employees, and after the contracts became effective no particular changes occurred in the nature or manner of the work. The Railroad Retirement Board, after holding a hearing, issued a decision holding that the men in question had been employees of the two railroad companies and as such were entitled to the benefits of the Railroad Retirement Act, because the work was of such a nature as to make it impossible for the railroads to relieve themselves of the right to supervise the work, for otherwise the railroads could not possibly maintain their railroad time schedules. And the evidence was to that effect. The Bureau of Internal Revenue made a similar ruling in both cases. One of these companies (Chicago & North Western) accepted these rulings so that the employees doing this work on this road experience no difficulties in having their claims adjudicated, but the other company (Boston & Maine) has not accepted these rulings so that the employees doing the same work on this road have the adjudication of their claims unduly delayed. This not only demonstrates the lack of uniformity among railroad carriers in this respect, but shows further that the rights of employees to benefits are gambled with by some carriers by the means of employing a contractor to intervene between themselves and their employees.

MAINTENANCE-OF-WAY WORK

A construction contractor (Morrison-Knudsen Co., Inc.), agreed to perform maintenance-of-way work for one railroad (Southern Pacific Co.). The railroad furnished all materials, supplies, and equipment used in the rendition of the work; the contractor was merely a supplier of labor and was brought into the picture only because under the stabilization program the railroad could not pay the men prevalent higher wages, while the contractor could. The Railroad Retirement Board held the services to be covered as "employees" services performed for the railroad. The Board's decision is, however, being contested and may be thrown into the courts.

HANDLING LOCOMOTIVE COAL AND SAND, UNLOADING COAL, REMOVAL OF LOCOMOTIVE CINDERS, CLEANING CARS, AND SIMILAR SERVICES

One contractor (Shipley Co.) entered into contracts with one railroad (Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co.) covering the performance of labor in connection with the handling of locomotive coal and sand, the unloading of coal and briquets, the removal and disposal of cinders, the cleaning of cars, and similar services. The Railroad Retirement Board found that the individuals engaged in the performance of such work were subject to the railroad's authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of their work, and that such individuals were, therefore, employees of the railroad and entitled to benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act. The Bureau of Internal Revenue made a similar ruling. The railroad paid taxes to the Bureau of Internal Revenue under protest and thereafter brought suit against the Bureau for a refund of taxes paid. On June 14, 1946, a Federal district court (United States District Court, District of Minnesota, Third Division, Civil No. 712) found against the Government. The Department of Justice is presently considering whether an appeal should be instituted in the higher courts.

FREIGHT-HANDLING SERVICES

One contractor (New England Handling Co.) performed freight-handling services for carrier lessees (New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Co., and the New York Central Railroad Co.) of a railroad (Boston & Albany Railroad). The Railroad Retirement Board found that the individuals performing the contract work were subject to the railroad lessees' supervision and direction, and that their services were, therefore, creditable for benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act. The Bureau of Internal Revenue, however, ruled the freight-handling company itself to be an "employer" under the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 as a carrier-controlled company performing services in connection with railroad transportation. Subsequently, the freight-handling company successfully contested the Bureau of Internal Revenue's ruling, the court finding that the company was not "directly or indirectly owned or controlled" by a carrier within the meaning of the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 and, therefore, not properly taxable itself as an "employer" under that act. The Railroad Retirement Board's ruling was not affected in any way by the court's decision since it was based on the theory that the individuals performing the contract work were the employees of the railroad lessees, and not on the theory that the freight-handling company itself was an employer under the Railroad Retirement Act.

This leaves the situation in a very undesirable state. The Board has to pay benefits but the Bureau of Internal Revenue is not collecting taxes.

OPERATIONS ON RAILROAD-OWNED ORE DOCKS, COAL DOCKS, SAND HOUSES, AND CINDER PITS; AND OPERATIONS OF RAILROAD BOARDING CAMPS

One contractor (Addison Miller Co.) undertook to perform for a railroad (Northern Pacific Railway Co.) the operation of the latter's ore docks, coal docks, sand houses, cinder pits, and car-cleaning facilities, all owned by the railroad. In loading the ore from railroad cars into shipside, and vice versa, the contractor is performing the work which the railroad is obligated to do under its tariffs.

The same contractor also performed boarding camp operations for a number of railroads (Northern Pacific Railway Co., the Soo Line, the Great Northern Railway Co., and the Spokane, Portland, & Seattle Railway Co). Such operations consisted of furnishing meals and lodging to road gangs of the railroad companies. Both the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Railroad Retirement Board ruled that the individuals performing such services worked subject to the railroads' control and were, therefore, employees of the railroad companies and entitled to benefits under the act. The railroads (Northern Pacific Railway Co. and Great Northern Railway Co.) brought suit against the Government for a refund of taxes paid the Bureau of Internal Revenue on the basis of such agency's ruling. A Federal district court found in favor of the railroads, and the Government is now considering whether an appeal should be taken from such adverse decision.

RAILROAD-CONTROLLED WAREHOUSES

One wholly-owned railroad subsidiary (Duquesne Warehouse Co.) operates two warehouses owned and leased to it by the parent railroad (Pennsylvania Railroad Co.). At one warehouse the railroad subsidiary handles and stores carload sugar (all of which comes in and goes out over the railroad) under a so-called storage-in-transit privilege covered by tariffs filed by the railroad with the Interstate Commerce Commission. At the other warehouse the railroad subsidiary handles freight which has come in, or is destined to movement, over the parent railroad's lines. The Railroad Retirement Board and the Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled that the railroad subsidiary was an "employer" under the Railroad Retirement and Carriers Taxing Acts because the unloading, storage in transit, and the subsequent loading of the sugar and other freight under the circumstances were services in connection with railroad transportation. The railroad subsidiary contested these rulings and after nearly 8 years of controversy the United States Supreme Court upheld the Railroad Retirement Board's decision.

RAILROAD-CONTROLLED REPAIR SHOPS

1. One railroad subsidiary (Despatch Shops, Inc.) whose stock is wholly owned by the parent railroad (New York Central Railroad Co.), owns and operates railroad freight-car repair shops at a point along the parent railroad's main line; and has regularly performed various kinds of freight-car repairs for this parent company. The Railroad Retirement Board and the Bureau of Internal Revenue found that the railroad subsidiary was an "employer" under the Railroad Retirement and Carriers Taxing Acts because these repair services were in connection with railroad transportation. After nearly 6 years of controversy, the Board's decision was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and for the District of Columbia.

2. A copper company (Utah Copper Co.) which owns a railroad (Bingham & Garfield Railway Co.) operates a repair shop for the railroad's equipment. The Board held the company to be an employer with respect to this repair shop only because the repairing of railroad equipment is a service in connection with railroad transportation. After nearly 4 years of controversy, the Board was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, and the United States Supreme Court refused certiorari.

3. One railroad subsidiary (Lenoir Car Works) wholly owned by its parent railroad (Southern Railway Co.) manufactured railroad cars, supplies, and parts, and made repairs to the railroad equipment of its parent railroad. The Railroad Retirement Board found that such railroad subsidiary was an employer under the Railroad Retirement Act because such services were in connection with railroad transportation. After nearly 2 years of controversy, the company accepted the Board's ruling without court litigation.

LOADING AND UNLOADING OF FREIGHT CARS

One contractor (Jersey Contracting Corp.) agreed to perform for one railroad (Pennsylvania Railroad Co.) the loading and unloading of freight to and from cars, vessels, and platforms, and the transfer between cars, vessels, and platforms of freight arriving by vessel or car at certain piers and docks. The piers and docks are all owned by the railroad company, which also owns the machinery used by the contractors in the handling of the freight. The Railroad Retirement Board, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and the Social Security Board all ruled the individuals performing the contract work to be the employees of the railroad company, since it was being performed subject to the railroad's supervision and direction. The railroad company's reply to all three rulings is a suit in the United States Court of Claims against the Bureau of Internal Revenue for a refund of taxes paid pursuant to that agency's ruling. To date that suit has not been decided by the court, and the rights of the employees in question to benefits under the act have changed from a reality intended by the act to a question mark.

FREIGHT-FORWARDING COMPANIES

Freight-forwarding companies assemble freight in less-than-carload lots from various shippers, and when they have accumulated enough to make a carload going to the same destination they ship it via the railroads under carload, rather than less-than-carload, rates, thus competing with trucks by taking away the business from them and giving it to the railroads.

The services they perform are clearly loading and unloading of railroad freight and should be covered under the act, regardless of whether they are railroad controlled. Whether or not freight forwarders are shippers as far as the railroads are concerned, they are clearly carriers of railroad freight as far as the public is concerned.

Of the three major freight-forwarding companies in existence, the Board ruled that two of them (National Carloading Corp. and Universal Carloading and Distributing Co., Inc.) are railroad controlled, and, therefore, are covered by the act. The third (Acme Freight Forwarding Co.) has not been found to be railroad controlled, and for this reason the Board, under the present law, could not rule it to be an employer under the act. The result is that the first two are being discriminated against because the third has a competitive advantage over them. Of those two, one (National) has complied with the Board's ruling for several years, but the other one (Universal) has questioned the Board's ruling all along. Because of this, the first (National) is now also questioning the Board's ruling.

Since all three of them perform the same railroad services, regardless of whether they are railroad controlled, the only sane solution to the problem (and in order not to give any of them unfair competitive advantages over the others) is to cover them all, regardless of railroad control over them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am sure the Senator from Ohio does not advocate that each of these border-line cases go through the courts and remain in the courts for perhaps 8 years before a decision can be obtained. It would be better for the employees of the companies, as well as for everyone else concerned, to have the matter settled by an act of the Congress. That is exactly what we are attempting to do at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator suspend long enough to permit a message from the President, addressed to the Congress, to be read?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, in making that request, I predicate it on the understanding that the Senator from Colorado will not thereby lose the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the message from the President of the United States to the Congress be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Chief Clerk and ordered to lie on the table.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 10107.)

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on today, July 25, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1132. An act for the relief of Aeronautical Training Center, Inc.; and

S. 1748. An act for the relief of Ivor E. Nicholas.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the Railroad Retirement Acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter D of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. In paragraph 4, beginning on page 2 and ending on page 3, it is proposed to cover any person engaged in rendering certain services. The language at the end of the paragraph is, in part, as follows:

With respect to passengers or property transported by railroad, at point of departure or shipment or at destination or between such points.

The words "or between such points" are what I should like to have cleared up.

As an illustration, suppose that a shipment of forest products, such as cross ties, timbers, piling, poles, or anything of that nature, is shipped from a point in the Gulf coast area under a through bill of lading to, let us say, Chicago. On that bill of lading there is a stop-over privilege for treatment of the shipment. The privilege is accorded to the shipment to stop at Cairo, Ill., for example, for creosoting. That shipment is handled by the railroad on a through bill of lading from the point of origin to final destination. But, as I have said, a stop is made at the plant at Cairo for treatment. The plant has an arrangement with the railroad to treat such articles in transit. Would the employees of that treating plant be covered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They would not. The same situation was suggested in regard to milling. Wheat, for example, is shipped on a railroad and goes to a mill. It is then ground into flour and the flour is shipped from the mill. Under those circumstances the employees of the mill would not come under the act.

The Senator referred to the words "or between such points." That language takes care of the cleaning of engines, the cleaning of cars, examining and treating hotboxes, or matters of that kind which would ordinarily be handled by employees of the railroad.

The Senator is talking about shipments. While, of course, shipments are closely related to transportation, a distinction must be made between the shipment itself and the equipment used in the transportation of the shipment.

Mr. SWIFT. The language first refers to services. Near the end of the paragraph at the top of page 3 the language reads:

Property transported by railroad, at point of departure or shipment or at destination or between such points.

Reference is there made to property transported by railroads between certain points.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator may read what is said in line 1, page 3. There the language is, in part:

Constitutes a part of or is necessary or incidental to the operation or maintenance of way, equipment or structures devoted to transportation use—

And so forth. I wanted to invite the attention of the Senator to that limitation.

On page 2 the language is, in part:

Is of such nature as to be susceptible of indefinitely continuous performance—

And so forth. That refers to services to cars and engines which are beginning to be farmed out to contractors.

Mr. SWIFT. The language near the end of the paragraph at top of page 3 contains the words "with respect to passengers or property transported by railroad."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes, or services rendered with respect to passengers. Passengers or property are hauled. That would be service which was rendered. But passengers are not covered under the bill, and neither is the freight.

Mr. SWIFT. I am receiving many requests from persons to tell them whether they come under the bill. I am really trying to clear up the matter in my own mind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I know the Senator is. I may say that I have been called out of bed many times during the past 10 days by persons who called me over the telephone and asked whether they came under this bill.

Mr. SWIFT. The difficulty is that some folks have a habit of calling us late at night and others have a habit of calling us early in the morning.

Mr. President, allow me to cite another illustration of the point which I have in mind. Let us take, for example, manufactured articles such as agricultural machinery, which is moving from a point on the Great Lakes or on the Ohio River from Pittsburgh, say, or Cincinnati, down to Tennessee over the TVA inland waterway system, under a through bill of lading from the factory, first by water transportation and then by rail transportation to a ship at some port, as, for example, Savannah.

Let us say that the shipment has moved from Chicago to Savannah. There are many points on the Tennessee River where commodities are taken from the barge line, reloaded into cars, transported by the railroad to the port, and the bill of lading is a through bill of lading from the point of origin to the ship. Do the stevedores or other persons handling that commodity, when it is taken off the barge, put on the car, and at the port taken off the car and delivered to the ship, come under the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The service rendered by the railroad would of course come under the bill and the employees taking part in that service would be covered. But all others would not be covered. I invite attention to page 5, line 5, where the following language appears:

> By reason of operations in the conduct of which such person holds itself out directly to the public as a common carrier by water, air, or motor- or animal-drawn vehicle, or as a contract carrier by any of such means, other than contract carrier service regularly offered to railroad passengers, shippers, or consignees pursuant to arrangements with an employer such as defined herein.

At the beginning of the paragraph it is stated that those are exceptions.

Mr. SWIFT. I thank the Senator for his explanation. The Senator has said there are only two categories which are not already included.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. SWIFT. But there are nine numbered sections of the bill describing the persons who are included.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That was for purposes of clarification. As I indicated once before, there are many cases in the courts in connection with the problem of coverage. The question is not exactly a new one. It has been a difficult one from the beginning. The reason for the language in the bill is to clarify the subject of coverage. As I have already said, the authors of the bill have left something to be desired in connection with the clarity of some of the statements which the bill contains, but the intention was to keep those cases out of the courts so that they could be determined by an act and not be drawn out through the courts year after year. We wanted to in this bill settle the question of coverage.

Mr. SWIFT. If the Senator will permit one more observation, did it not take a great many words to clear it up, and is not the use of too many words by those who draw an act a very good way of getting the matter into court?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not claim to be an expert at drafting laws, and I had nothing to do with drafting the pending bill. That is a very technical job. It requires technicians, and it seems to me that sometimes too much language is inserted in laws.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it has already been made clear, by the report of the committee, and by the statements previously made by the Senator from Colorado, and the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the majority leader, that operations carried on by trucking companies are not such as to bring the employees within the coverage of the law, unless the trucking companies are owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

To make the matter doubly sure, I wish to put to the able Senator in charge of the bill one additional hypothetical case. Suppose a trucking company does business in a city, and that a part of its business is under contract with a railroad company, under which they pick up and deliver certain property for the railroad company. Would the fact that an incidental part of the business of that generally operated trucking company is pick-up and delivery service for the railroad bring the trucking company within the coverage of the act, if the trucking company is not owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a railroad or carrier covered by part I the Interstate Commerce Act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not quite understand the contract the Senator mentions. He says it is delivery service that is contracted by the railroad company. Will he clarify that a little?

Mr. PEPPER. Does the very fact that a trucking company, engaged in the general trucking business about a city, under an agreement with a railroad company does some pick-up and delivery service for the railroad company, although it is not owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by the railroad company, bring it under the coverage of the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No. In that case the employees of the delivery service would not be covered. I call the Senator's attention to page 3 of the bill, paragraph (5), line 10, where he will find this provision:

> Any person which, through any form of property interest, is directly or indirectly subject to control by or to common control with a carrier and which—

Then, skipping over the intervening language, the sentence is finished with the words on page 4, line 2:

> is engaged in transportation by motor vehicles.

Mr. PEPPER. In other words, in the case I put, the employees of the trucking company would not be covered by the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct; they would not be covered.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. I wanted to make the point doubly clear.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. During the course of the debate the majority leader introduced into the RECORD a portion of the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce appearing on pages 6 and 7. In the course of the portion of the report that was introduced is this language:

> Many representations have been made to the committee indicating that persons (other than carriers subject to pt. I of the Interstate Commerce Act) engaged in manufacturing, harvesting, storing, distributing, selling, or delivering refrigeration or ice to or into equipment used for refrigeration purposes in connection with the transportation of passengers or property are included in the term "employer," and that therefore their employees will be considered to be railroad employees. The committee would like to state categorically that there is no purpose or intent to include such person as employers under the act and that it is the unanimous understanding of the committee that such persons are not so covered. The committee also unanimously understands that notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (2) and (4) of section 1, there is no purpose or intent to include warehouse or trucking companies, or individuals carrying on either of such businesses, within the term "employer," if they are not owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by, or under common control with, a carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Does the Senator regard the paragraph which I have read as of importance in determining the intent of the Senate in adopting the proposed legislation, if we do adopt it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think it is important to show the intent of Congress in enacting the legislation inasmuch as so many persons throughout the country have become concerned about the matter. Telegrams and telephone calls have come in from veterans and others inquiring whether they were covered and the committee thought it advantageous to make it clear to them that they were not covered by the proposed legislation. It is included as much as an assurance to the inquirers who have sent in the messages, indeed, more so, than for any other purpose, because we wanted to show the intent of Congress, and we wanted to assure people who were concerned, and industries concerned.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Senator agree that this paragraph could not do more than express the intent of the Senate, namely, one branch of the Congress, and could not directly or indirectly express the intent of the House of Representatives?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Oh, of course, we could not express the intent of the House of Representatives. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill could not pass without the action of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. But does not the Senator think this paragraph, directly or indirectly, indicates, or tends to indicate, what the House of Representatives felt and what it understood when it passed the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course we have no way of knowing, at least the Senator from Colorado has no way of knowing, what the intent of the House of Representatives is, other than from the hearings.

Mr. DONNELL. There is no statement the Senator knows of, is there, issued officially by any Member of the House of Representatives or by the House itself, as a declaration, which would define, in similar effect as does the quoted paragraph, what the conclusion of the House of Representatives is as to whether these various refrigeration, ice, and other companies are included?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. This is the only thing I know of on that point: A Representative whose name is HARRIS asked Mr. Robertson, the president of the Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the following question in the House hearings:

> Now, Mr. Robertson, I would like to ask, merely for clarification in my own mind, about the intent with reference to coverage that is proposed in this legislation.
> Could you or would you state whether or not it was the intention to take in such industries as ice companies, the ice industry, cold-storage warehousing industry, cotton compresses, and so forth?

Mr. Robertson, who was a witness before the House committee, replied——

Mr. DONNELL. He was a witness; he was not a Member of the House of Representatives?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He was a witness appearing before the committee of the House. Mr. HARRIS is a Member of the House, and propounded the question to Mr. Robertson. Mr. Robertson, who is the president of the Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, as I have said, made this reply:

> Mr. ROBERTSON. Well, I can make a definite answer to that. No; it was not. We might just as well face the facts. We did not come here with any legislation designed to impose a railroad-retirement act on ice companies. We do not work for ice companies.

That is the only evidence I have, other than the fact that certainly the House has received many letters and telegrams and inquiries, as the Senate has. Members of the House no doubt have received just as many inquiries as we have, or more. Yet they were satisfied with the bill as is, and passed the bill as is. So I take it for granted that the House must have given consideration to these points and satisfied itself with respect to the matter and passed the legislation with that knowledge.

Mr. DONNELL. But the Senator does not know of any declaration similar to the paragraph I have quoted from page 7 of the report of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce which was issued by the committee of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I do not.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator says that a company icing cars is not subject to the provisions of the act. Suppose the railroad itself in some cases were icing cars and proceeded to transfer that function to a private company.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is, farm it out by contract?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; farm it out by contract. Would the Senator say that the new company was subject to the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; if the railroad company owned the ice house and owned the ice and simply made a contract with someone to ice the cars out of the railroad's ice house.

Mr. TAFT. Suppose the railroad sold its ice house to someone and transferred the whole business to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think he would be covered by this measure.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator thinks he would not be covered. So it depends upon the character of service as to whether there is coverage or not. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It depends on the service rendered to the railroad. If men are working for the railroad company most of their time, they are employees of the railroad company, of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not this one of the tests? For instance, the railroads in many cases operate their own trucks as a part of their business. In such a case, of course, the employees on the trucks would be covered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. But on the other hand, if a trucking company simply brings the goods to the railroad and delivers them to the railroad, its employees would not be covered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. Because they are working for the trucking company, and it is only an incident of their employment that they haul the freight to the depot or put it on the cars. But if the men are in the employ of the railroad they would be covered. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct. That is my interpretation.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the Senator's theory at least. That is the contention of those who favor the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the contention of the proponents of the bill and the authors of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sympathetic with the Senator's attitude. If that be true, would there be any objection to an amendment making that absolutely clear? There is evidently some confusion, because some contend one way and some contend another way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The difficulty in amending the bill is this: The parliamentary situation is such that there is not likely to be a conference on this bill. If any amendment goes into it, there probably will not be a conference and the bill will not be enacted into law. That is the reason we are trying to get away from amendments to the bill. The bill contains 60 pages. It is unreasonable to expect that anyone can write a bill and have it perfect in all details and in all particulars, and have it satisfactory in every way. That simply cannot be done. It is a physical impossibility to do so, and every Senator knows it. I do not care how expert the author may be; he cannot write that kind of a bill. Of course, there are little things about the bill that perhaps should be corrected. But the major things in the bill are so much more important than the little matters which should be corrected and perhaps clarified by amendment, and since we are in the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves, I for one am willing to accept some of the small matters that are not of such great importance in order to get the larger things which I consider to be of great importance. Every Senator, of course, will have to make up his own mind and take his own position on that matter. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the bill as it is, because after going over it from one end to the other and studying it very carefully I find that it contains much merit. It contains many splendid provisions. We either have to take the bill, unsatisfactory as it is in some details, in order to get any bill at all, or have no bill. So far as that is concerned, another bill could be started through the House and through the Senate to correct any of these matters that need to be corrected and clarified before any great harm can be done. No harm will be done anyway.

Another bill can follow this bill which will correct such matters. I have no doubt it will do that. The sponsors of the bill have certain amendments which they are ready to offer to the bill, all amendments dealing with little details that need to be corrected. So the opponents and the proponents both are in favor of some amendments. No doubt a bill will come along which will correct all the things that will need to be corrected in this piece of legislation.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say to the Senator first of all that it seems to me to be very bad legislative practice to have legislation of this importance and of this magnitude and so far-reaching as this is, come to the Senate under the general theory, as propounded by the majority leader and by the able Senator from Colorado who is handling the bill, to the effect that due to the limitations of time under which we are laboring the Senate has either to take it or leave it, so to speak. I do not think we are performing our correct legislative function if we become jockeyed into such a position. It seems to me that if the facts are as the Senator presents them—and I have no doubt he feels they are—that certain ice companies and others are not expected to be included under the bill, it would be a very simple process to have an amendment put into the bill making is a sound piece of legislation, so that there could be no question of doubt in anyone's mind, and then have the House accept the Senate's amendment. If the facts are as presented in the report of the committee, there is no question of doubt on the part of any Member of the Senate, be he a proponent or an opponent of this legislation, that such amendments are sound and are reasonable. So I do not believe the argument that we are running up against a time limitation should prevent us from correcting the bill so that there could be no question of doubt in anyone's mind about it.

Now I call the able Senator's attention to this fact: He will notice in the committee report——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to comment on his observations on that point. This legislation has been pending for a long long time in the House. This is not the first bill dealing with the matter. Similar bills were pending even before this session of the Congress. This bill went to a committee in the House. I am not criticizing the House. They were acting as they thought they should act, and patriotically, and I do not quarrel with them. But the fact is that the bill did not come out of the committee that handled the matter on the House side until it was petitioned out, and then when it was petitioned out it was delayed, and House action was very slow on it, and it came to the Senate only in recent days. We completed our hearings on the measure in 1945, but the Senate could not proceed because this bill affects the revenue, so it must originate in the House. The Senate was helpless in the matter.

I am informed—I do not know whether the information is correct, but I believe it to be—that if we amend this bill in any particular, the committee which is handling it in the House is very likely to hold it and not take it to conference. So the bill will die.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the Senator, in response to his statement, that it seems to me that as Members of the Senate of the United States we have a responsibility to see to it that no bill is passed by the Senate which is not in as sound shape as it can possibly be put into, because to do otherwise is to avoid our responsibilities.

I might observe in passing that this seems to me to be a very great argument for some streamlining of Congress such as proposed by the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has worked in this body over a period of many months in order to streamline the legislative processes, so that in the closing hours of a congressional session we will not be presented with what in effect is an ultimatum that we have to take this without even crossing a "t" or dotting an "i." I sincerely believe that that is a most unsound legislative procedure.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator has—I do not know whether "complained" is the right word or not, but the Senator made reference to the fact that there has been an inadequacy of time to give consideration to this legislation. The truth of the matter is that this bill passed the House and came to the Senate on the 3d day of July. Today, I believe, is the 25th day of July. More than 3 weeks have passed since the bill came from the House to the Senate. The Committee on Interstate Commerce in that 3 weeks of time has held one meeting of approximately 1 hour, given to this bill, and that entire time was devoted, I think I am justified in saying, to making explanations as to why Senators knew nothing about the legislation, and why they regretted to vote upon the bill. The fault is not altogether with the calendar and with the clock. The fault lies with the Members of the Senate, and particularly with the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Let me say in reply to the Senator that according to the data we have here, the bill came from the House on July 5, and it came out of committee on July 12. That is a period of 7 days. We have had the bill on the calendar for 12 days, of course; but the Senator from Maine knows very well that our calendar has been full. We have been working all the time. We have had to handle many important matters as quickly as possible.

Mr. WHITE. I recognize all that. It is perfectly true that we have been working all the time. We have been overworking all the time. To me that is another reason why we should not attempt, in the closing days of a session of Congress, with no adequate consideration having been given to a measure 60 pages long, to pass it without even looking it over once.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator will have to reach his own determination on that point.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask a few questions of the distinguished Senator from Colorado with regard to the pending measure. I wish to clear up my own thinking. Possibly it may be helpful to have some of these questions answered in the RECORD.

As I understand, the bill involves two separate funds. The first is the so-called retirement fund, which is contributed to by both the employer and the employee—that is the railroads and their employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is the retirement system.

Mr. SMITH. I understand from my study of this matter that that fund is not adequately financed, and that there should be some strengthening of the financing of the fund. That is one of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is admitted to be not actuarially sound.

Mr. SMITH. That is what I understand. On the other hand, there is a fund known as the unemployment-insurance fund, which has an accumulation of approximately $790,000,000 in it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Seven hundred and thirty million dollars, according to the latest figures I have heard.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that the drain on that fund up to date has been not to exceed $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year, so far as it has been used to meet the unemployment requirements. Therefore, there is a larger amount in that fund than is immediately needed. The suggestion has been made to me by those who have studied the bill that an adjustment might be made—and this is a very fundamental part of the bill—between the money which comes into the retirement fund and the money which comes into the unemployment-insurance fund, to the end that the railroads may not be called upon to increase their contributions to the fund because of the fact that if they do increase their contribution, as called for in the bill, possibly $100,000,000 more a year will be required, which will inevitably mean an increase in freight and passenger rates and a tendency to boost prices—something that we are trying to avoid all along the line to prevent inflation.

I am raising the question as to whether those conclusions are correct, and what the Senator has to say with regard to them. Let me make one further observation before the Senator answers the question.

I understand that objection is raised to making a change in the amount which goes into the unemployment insurance reserve because of the desire to increase the benefits from that reserve. Yet if those benefits are increased such action will throw that reserve out of line with unemployment insurance benefits in other industries, thereby placing railroad employees in a preferred position as compared with other industrial workers.

I should like to have those points clarified in my own mind, because it seems to me that they have a great bearing on the soundness of legislating to prefer one group of our society over other groups. It seems to me that we should be thinking in terms of the general policy under the Social Security Act, as well as under this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The general Social Security Act may be all right; but the fact is that the railroads and the railroad employees pioneered in this field.

Mr. SMITH. I realize that, I give them great credit for it. I am for their fund. I think they are working on the right basis, and I think every group should try to improve its position. But it seems to me that if we are to legislate for one special group we should think of our national policy on the subject and consider whether we should give one group privileges which another group does not have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The railroad employees and the railroads are financing their own railroad retirement system. Both parties are trying to put it on a sound actuarial basis.

I do not know that I completely understand the Senator's question in regard to the unemployment insurance fund. I hope that he is not advocating taking money out of one fund and transferring it to the other.

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That ought not to be done. The unemployment insurance fund is contributed solely by the railroad companies, by the employers. I think, perhaps, one or two or three States have permitted employees to participate in social security unemployment insurance; but the railroad fund is contributed entirely by the railroads themselves. I think, perhaps, the reserve is larger than it needs to be, and that with the proper kind of legislation perhaps the railroads could be temporarily relieved of contributing to that fund, which, of course, would give them considerable relief without endangering the fund. Whenever the fund dropped below a certain point, of course, their contribution would have to be increased.

But that is not in this bill. I hope that before too long some legislation will come from the House on that subject, which will give the railroads some relief, which I think they could very safely have without jeopardizing the unemployment fund. So far as the Senator from Colorado is concerned, he would vote for that kind of a bill. I would vote for that kind of a provision in this bill if I thought that we could go to conference and come out of conference—as we usually can—with legislation. But we face a situation in which we almost know that if we amend this bill in any way we cannot come out of conference with a bill. Of course, that does not give us a fair opportunity to make the proper arrangement.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to make my position clear. I did not intend for a moment to be understood as advocating taking any of the unemployment insurance fund for the retirement fund. I did intend to suggest that inasmuch as the railroads are paying 3 percent a year, as I understand, into the unemployment insurance fund, so long as a large reserve exists they might pay a smaller percentage into the insurance fund and a larger percentage into the retirement fund; and, as the Senator suggested a moment ago, as the reserve became lower and lower they would pay a higher percentage into the reserve. I think the Senator's suggestion is sound. I understood that such an amendment was suggested in the House, and that the amendment was incorporated in the committee version in the House. I understood that both the brotherhoods and the railroads were willing to adopt that kind of a plan. Now a change is made, and the railroads are called upon to increase their participation, which it seems to me inevitably will call upon them to go to the Interstate Commerce Commission and request an increase in freight and passenger rates. If that is to be the result, I think we are legislating pretty fast in determining a policy of that kind overnight.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does not the Senator believe that another bill could follow? This is not the last Congress that will ever sit. That idea could be incorporated in a subsequent bill, and I am sure it would meet with favor in this body. It seems to me that the idea is perfectly logical. No one wishes to collect a great deal more money from the railroads than is needed to build up the reserve to its proper level. The reserve should not be built up far beyond the need. I am sure that we do not want to do that.

Mr. SMITH. If I may say so to the Senator, with all due respect to him, the fallacy in his suggestion is that this bill contemplates an increased tax on the railroads and increased benefits from the insurance fund, which no other social security group enjoys. I refer to health benefits and other benefits.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The increases in benefits do not amount to very much. I think they have been over emphasized.

Mr. SMITH. That is the point on which I am seeking information. What are the differences?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I know that the pending bill does not provide for spending all the accumulated reserves. The increases in benefits are very moderate. I am sure that if we pass this bill as it is, legislation will follow which will do what the Senator is suggesting. Some relief will be given to the railroads with respect to the payment of unemployment insurance, to as great an extent as it is safe to go.

Mr. SMITH. I do not want relief for the railroads. Let me make myself clear. I do not believe that the railroads are asking for relief. But they are asking not to be taxed more now if they are to be compelled to request rate increases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think the Senator must keep the two systems separate. We must not run them together, because they are two entirely different systems. I think it is unfortunate that the two of them are in this bill. I think they should be legislated on separately. That is my own private opinion. But we have legislation on both systems in the same bill. However, another bill could follow from the House if such is the desire of the House. I am sure that the railroads could be granted relief if it were properly safeguarded. It would have to be properly safeguarded so that whenever the reserve fell below a certain amount the rates would be increased.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with the Senator on that point. I think that is the real way to deal with a fund of that kind. When the reserve gets down to the danger point the rate should be increased, and it should be adjustable along that line.

I am simply suggesting now that with this large reserve the amount needed for the retirement fund could be taken care of by reducing the rate which the railroads pay for the other fund. If that were reduced to approximately 2½ percent, exactly what is needed for this fund could be obtained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, Mr. President, I do not think the railroads are entirely without blame in this matter. I think they did everything they possibly could do to obstruct the passage of the proposed legislation in the House and in the Senate. I do not think they tried to reach a basis of equity as between their employees and themselves. If they had made a different approach to this whole matter I think that today we would have a much better bill. But they have been obstructionists, so far as this proposed legislation is concerned, all the way along.

Mr. SMITH. Then, does not the Senator think that a matter of this kind should be adjusted on the basis of the collective-bargaining principle, as between the railroads and their employees, rather than to have us serve as arbiters between the employees and the railroads? That is what troubles me. I believe in the insurance fund. I wish to make the system as strong as possible. But I am seriously concerned about being required to vote in haste "yea" or "nay," when I think the proposal is fiscally unsound. I also think it will involve an increase in freight rates, and that will be another element in the picture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think that that position is sound. I do not think the Senate often has an opportunity to vote for perfect legislation. But this measure is a long step in the right direction, and it could be followed by other steps. Other corrections can come from the House and from the Senate, and we can fix up the matters that are troubling the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator. I feel a great sense of responsibility in a situation of this kind.

I feel that what the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] said a moment ago is very much to the point. I feel that we are abdicating our responsibilities as Members of this body if we say that we cannot make any changes or any amendments because it is too late in the session to do so. That position seems to me to be indefensible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I think it is a matter of taking two bites at it. I think two bites should be taken. That is my position.

Mr. SMITH. Is the Senator from Colorado willing to eliminate from this bill certain features which can be fitted into the next bill; and is the Senator willing to have this bill passed in that way, without having it contain those features?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to have this bill passed as it is, and I should like to see separate legislation enacted later. I think that is the only way we can handle the matter. We must take into consideration the long months of delay which this bill encountered in the other body. We cannot ignore that. I say to the Senator that this is not the first bill on this subject which has been in such a situation. At other sessions of Congress the railroad employees have tried to obtain legislation to correct the situation insofar as they were concerned, and such bills have been introduced early in the session; but they simply were placed in pigeonholes, and nothing came of them.

Now this bill has gotten this far. It had to be petitioned out of the House committee; and on the floor of the House amendments were offered to it both by the proponents and by the opponents. That indicates, of course, that the bill is not exactly perfect. But the only way we can secure the enactment of this measure—and we know it—is to pass the bill as it is, and then let the corrections come, as they will come.

If we pass this bill as it is, I think I can almost assure the Senator from New Jersey that the corrections which he has in mind will come about. They will follow. It will not be nearly so difficult to get those corrections as it has been to get this original bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Relative to the information which was obtained at the hearings before the House committee, let me inquire whether it is a fact that a bill substantially the same as the bill now before us was introduced in the House and was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee held on that bill extensive hearings, which lasted over a number of months? Witnesses were heard. Witnesses from labor, from management, and from other interested groups testified. The committee worked on the measure and finally rewrote it. The bill was reported from the committee. Then on the floor of the House an amendment was offered, and it completely did away with the bill as reported by the committee and returned the bill to substantially the same form as when it had been originally introduced, the form in which it was prior to the time when the hearings were held. It not that a substantially correct statement of the facts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; that is correct. The bill now before us was passed by the House of Representatives, without amendment, by a vote of 235 to 49. The hearings were held, as the Senator has stated; and I have procured for the benefit of the Senate the House hearings on the bill. I have kept them all these months. I got 100 copies of them from the House committee just as soon as the hearings were finished. The hearings before the House committee began on January 31 and ended on April 26. As soon as the hearings were concluded I asked the chairman of the House committee to give me 100 copies. So those hearings are now on the desks of all Senators. I have kept the copies for that very purpose.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is the very point I am raising. The hearings were held, and all of us have the several volumes on our desks now. As a result of those hearings, the members of the committee, who had listened to all the testimony contained in the three volumes, completely or substantially rewrote the bill, based on the testimony which had been presented to them. The committee submitted its report to the House of Representatives. Then, on the floor of the House, the recommendations of the committee were ignored, even though the committee had gone through such extensive hearings; and on the floor of the House there was offered as an amendment to the bill as reported by the committee, the original bill which had been introduced prior to the holdings of any hearings whatsoever.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The majority of the committee did rewrite the bill; there is no question about that. The committee was sharply divided, however.

But I desire to call the Senator's attention to this fact, which is very significant: They did not rewrite the bill and they did not prepare legislation, as I understand it, until the petition was filed and until sufficient signatures were secured to the petition to force the bill to the floor of the House. When that was done, I am informed, a majority of the committee hurriedly prepared the substitute and reported it from the committee. That substitute was rejected by the House. Then the original bill finally came before the Committee of the Whole of the House, and it was amended. It was amended by the opponents of the bill and by the proponents of the bill, until virtually the same language as that of the substitute proposal was placed in the bill. That was done by the House, sitting in Committee of the Whole. When the House came out of Committee of the Whole, the House voted out all of the amendments which had been put in by the proponents and the opponents, and that brought them back to the original bill, and the House finally passed the original bill and sent it to the Senate.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Again I call the Senator's attention to the section of the committee report dealing with the fact that it was not the intent of the Senate committee to cover refrigerating plants and warehouses and trucking companies. I understand that the Senator from Colorado has stated that there is no intent that they be covered by the bill, although there is grave doubt in the minds of many persons regarding that matter.

What concerns me at that point is that inasmuch as the committee report lists three or four specific cases, I wonder what the situation is in the case of a firm of a type which is not listed in the report. Is not the impression then given that anyone else, anyone except those that are mentioned in the report, would be covered under the act?

Specifically I wish to ask the able Senator from Colorado this question: In his opinion, are water carriers covered under the bill as now written?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; water carriers are not covered under the bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. So far as I can ascertain from the report, water carriers are not among the groups listed as being exempt, in the view of the committee or according to the intention of the committee. I may have missed the statement, and I wonder whether the Senator from Colorado can call my attention to a place in the report where such a statement appears.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There was no necessity for including such a statement. No one ever intended or considered that water carriers would be covered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Let us consider the situation of a water carrier on the Great Lakes, for instance, where the cargoes are unloaded from the railroads and are loaded onto barges or ships, and then move in transit, and finally are unloaded from the barges or the ships and are placed back on the railroads again. Is it the Senator's statement that in his opinion such a water carrier is not covered under the bill as now written and is not intended to be covered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; such a water carrier is not covered in the bill now pending before us.

Mr. KNOWLAND. And is it the Senator's opinion that no water carrier is covered under the bill, except one that might be owned by a railroad?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Ownership and control applies to trucks, and no one who was considered to be a water carrier would in any way be covered by the bill. Water carriers and their employees are not covered by the bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield. However, I have promised the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] that I will yield to him.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the minority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1698, Senate 2359.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator from Nevada withhold his request for a moment? I wish to complete my reply to the Senator from California.

Mr. MCCARRAN. I withhold my request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I invite the attention of the Senator from California to page 5 of the bill where a list of exclusions is set forth. He will notice the words: "by reason of operations in the conduct of which such person holds itself out directly to the public as a common carrier by water, air, or motor or animal-drawn vehicle, or as a contract carrier by any of such means, other than contract carrier service regularly offered to railroad passengers," and so forth.

That is the language which covers the point which the Senator from California has raised, and it excludes a water carrier from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is it the Senator's opinion that it is not the intention of House bill 1362 to extend coverage to maritime employees, seamen, longshoremen, dock clerks, warehousemen, and others who are not employed on a railroad?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. For the most part, the answer is that they are not included, but in some cases stevedores are included. However they are included already under the present act.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator said "in some cases." For the benefit of the record, in the event that a judicial determination is made later, will the Senator differentiate between some who might be included and some who might not be included?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Where freight is unloaded by a stevedore from a freight car directly onto a ship, and he is paid by the railroad company, of course he would be covered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes; if he is a railroad employee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If he is paid by the railroad company he would be covered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But if he is not paid by the railroad company, what then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the employment is railroad employment, of course the man would be covered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. We understand that railroad employees are covered. I do not believe there is any question in any Senator's mind on that point. But the question which we are now trying to determine is whether a person who is not a railroad employee, and is not on the pay roll of a railroad, is covered under this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He is covered under the bill if railroad employment is farmed out to him. If he contracts to do railroad work, he is covered under the act.

Mr. KNOWLAND. How does the Senator differentiate with reference to some other type of firm, such as an icing firm which, perhaps, is furnishing services and materials to railroads, and to others in connection with similar activities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. There are many borderline cases and when the bill is finally enacted into law it will be the purpose of the sponsors of the bill to offer a concurrent resolution correcting some of the typographical changes which need to be made in the bill. The concurrent resolution will also contain a provision attempting to clarify the coverage points which have been raised.

Mr. KNOWLAND. With all due respect to my able colleague from Colorado, I feel very strongly that the correct place to clarify these matters so that there can be no question about them later, is in the bill. If it is the intention of the proponents of the bill that such persons or such firms as those to which the Senator has referred are not included, I can see no objection to the Senate making the necessary correction by amendment on the floor, and sending the bill back to the House where the amendment can be accepted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will yield in a moment. I wish first to reply to the Senator from California.

Mr. WHERRY. There are other Senators who are very much interested in the points which the Senator from Colorado is attempting to clarify.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator allow me, please, to answer the question of the Senator from California?

Mr. WHERRY. I merely wished to ask the Senator from Colorado to yield in order that I might suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish first to complete my answer to the Senator from Colorado. He asked me what distinction could be made. When a railroad company holds itself out to deliver freight to a ship, for example, and the employment of a stevedore is a part of the fulfillment of the contract, of course the stevedore is covered by the bill.

If the railroad company holds itself out to deliver freight to a dock, the stevedore who takes the freight from the dock and puts it on the ship is not covered by the bill.

I know that these lines of demarcation are difficult, but I think there is no question about the point which I have just explained.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada, but it is perfectly all right with me to have a quorum call.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not want to take the Senator off his feet, but I knew that the point the Senator from Colorado was discussing with the Senator from California was of interest to many Senators who are not present at this time, and before a vote is taken on the bill they will probably be asking similar questions of the distinguished Senator. Many of the questions already asked will be asked all over again.

Mr. President, I feel that if we are to continue to hold night sessions there should be a quorum present in the Senate Chamber. At the present time there are present only a few Members of the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I shall not object to the Senate proceeding to consider the bill which the Senator from Nevada desires to have disposed of, but I know there are Senators who are interested in the pending bill and want to be present.

If the Senator from Colorado feels as I do, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator insist on suggesting the absence of a quorum before the Senator from Nevada succeeds in having the Senate dispose of the bill which he wishes the Senate to consider?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not insist on doing anything at all, but I think there should be a quorum present in the Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Let us first allow the Senator from Nevada to make his request. The bill to which he refers is a noncontroversial measure.

CLOSING OF OFFICE OF THE RECORDER OF DEEDS ON SATURDAYS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 2359, a bill to close the office of the Recorder of Deeds on Saturdays.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, does the bill apply only to the office of the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. It is the only office in the District which does not close on Saturdays.

Mr. WHITE. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2359) to close the office of the Recorder of Deeds on Saturdays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment, on page 1, after line 5, to insert a new section so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of any other act, the Office of the Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia shall be closed on every Saturday.

SEC. 2. Any writing, the time for recording of which expires on a Saturday, or on a Sunday, shall be deemed to have been recorded within the time prescribed if such writing be recorded on the first day thereafter other than Sunday or a legal holiday.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B and chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado does not object, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I should like to say also that we want a real quorum present if we are to have any at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The calling of a quorum will not take me off the floor, will it?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Colorado be allowed to resume the floor immediately after the quorum call has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Hawkes	Moore
Ball	Hayden	Morse
Barkley	Hill	Murdock
Brewster	Hoey	Radcliffe
Brooks	Huffman	Reed
Buck	Johnson, Colo.	Revercomb

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1426. An act to provide for the replanning and rebuilding of slum, blighted, and other areas of the District of Columbia and the assembly, by purchase or condemnation, of real property in such areas and the sale or lease thereof for the redevelopment of such area in accordance with said plans; and to provide for the organization of, procedure for, and the financing of such planning, acquisition, and sale or lease; and for other purposes;

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION ADVERTISING

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I was interested in one particular suggestion of the President. Now at long last he has come to the idea that we should cut expenses.

There was brought to my attention today a short column under the headline "Veterans' Affairs," by Tyrrell Krum, which is published in a Washington paper. In this article he brings to our attention that Congress was prevailed upon to hand the WAA, that is, the War Assets Administration, $20,000,000 for the purpose of advertising its sales. Instead of utilizing the WAA's own organization, those on its pay roll, certified by the Civil Service Commission to handle the agency's advertising, the War Assets Administration high command retains a New York advertising agency not only to write the ads, but to select the media in which they are to be placed.

Mr. Krum calls attention to the fact that that means a cool $3,000,000 for this agency. Bear in mind, Mr. President, that this $20,000,000 was given the War Assets Administration, which has on its own pay rolls employees certified by the Civil Service Commission to perform this function. So I think that we had better check up a little and see whether or not the President's long delayed suggestion that we reduce expenses is being followed by the administrative departments under his control.

I ask that the entire article by Mr. Krum be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS' AFFAIRS

(By Tyrrell Krum)

One of the most ridiculous of the many activities being carried on by the War Assets Administration is that of the so-called advertising section, charged with placing tax-paid advertisements in newspapers around the country designed to bring to the public information on surplus property sales coming along.

Congress was prevailed upon to hand the WAA advertising boys upward of $20,000,000 for this purpose. And what do you think happened?

Instead of utilizing the WAA's own organization of pay-rollers certified by Civil Service to handle the agency's advertising activities, the WAA high command goes out and retains a New York advertising agency—Fuller, Smith & Ross—to not only write the ads but to select the medium in which they are to be placed.

And, it is interesting to note, the agency collects the usual 15 percent retainer going to all advertising agencies for handling display advertising—which in this case should net $3,000,000—right nice chunk of the taxpayers' money!

With a New York advertising agency handling this big job we can't help but wonder what the WAA advertising division has to do.

And you should see the type of advertising on which they spend these millions.

For instance, in the latest batch of ads plastered all over the country, the WAA is asking for bids on the Valesco Texas magnesium plant, on an aluminum plant at Tacoma, Wash., and the ferrosilicon plant at Wenatchee, Wash. Each of these plants cost many millions of dollars to build and operate.

What earthly good could full-page advertisements in newspapers—big and small alike—possibly do? Only a few persons at the very most would be interested in such a huge financial operation.

On the other hand, the thing that Congress undoubtedly had in mind when it handed over the money for paid advertising was a rational and well-thought-out program of letting the little guy down along the line know when there was going to be something available in which he might be interested.

AMENDMENT TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS, ETC.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B and chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I wish to refer very briefly to some of the things the bill does. Certainly the Senate does not have freedom from fear, because we have been discussing provisions which appear in the bill of which the Senators seem to be afraid. I wish now to discuss some of the things which the pending measure really does.

First let me say that the railroads and the railroad employees were the pioneers in developing security. For more than 50 years they have had pension plans, which have been of great advantage to the railroad companies, to the employees, and to the shippers. The shipper is very directly interested in good service. He receives good service when the railroad employees are enthusiastic about their vocation and their industry. So everyone has been benefited by it.

But during the depression, in the early thirties, it was disclosed that the pension system which had been set up by the railroad companies had no reserves, and the men were being paid out of current receipts of the railroad companies. So when the hard times came, when the depression came, at the very time when the pension moneys were needed most, the railroad companies had to curtail the pensions from 10 to 40 percent. The late Joseph Eastman, who was one of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, was considerably troubled by the plans which the railroad companies had of paying the pensions out of current receipts instead of building up reserves. So the matter came to the Congress, and in 1934 a retirement plan was passed by the Congress. The Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional. Then another plan was worked out by the Congress, and passed, and immediately litigation ensued. I do not know that the second plan which was passed in 1935 was declared unconstitutional. I do not recall, but at least there was litigation in connection with it, so it never became operative.

About that same time the social security law was made effective, and the 1935 statute exempted railroads from the social-security law. Then finally the railroad companies and the railroad operatives sat around the table together and worked out a retirement plan and an unemployment-insurance plan, and both sides agreed at that time that no question would be carried to the courts in regard to the validity of the retirement plan. The companies and their operatives worked out a very good plan, but the plan which they worked out is not actuarially sound. The Railroad Retirement Board, which is made up of a representative of the railroads, a representative of the employees, and a representative appointed by the Treasury, representing the public interest, declared in 1941 that the plan which had been set up by the Congress for the railroad men was not actuarially sound, and that the rate would have to be increased. The employees themselves reached the decision that the rates would have to be increased. Congress passed the law, and Congress must assume responsibility for making the plans actuarially sound. Congress has a responsibility in this matter.

I know that social security is not actuarially sound—everyone knows that—yet Congress keeps postponing year after year the increased payment on the part of the employees and on the part of industry by way of contribution which each shall make to social security. Congress has been warned by Mr. Altmeyer time without number that if that shall be continued, and a reserve not be built up, sooner or later the Government will have to make a contribution to social security. But no one has offered the suggestion that the railroad-retirement plan is eventually going to be supported by the Federal Treasury. No one has that idea in mind. The railroads themselves and the railroad workers want to make the plan actuarially sound so it will stand on its own feet, and be contributed to solely by the railroad employees and by the railroads themselves.

So much for that, Mr. President. I think it also should be said that the railroads require as workers the most alert persons who can be secured. Railroading is a serious business. A few weeks ago an engineer on a train moving out of Chicago at 80 miles an hour, an old engineer of the road, a trusted and faithful and dependable man, for some reason or other had some sort of a mental lapse for a second or two. He did not observe that the signal was in "caution." In another split second he noticed a stop signal ahead of him, and, of course, he slapped on the brakes, but it was too late. He plowed into another passenger train and there was a tremendous loss of life, and a million dollars' worth of property was destroyed. Such things are apt to occur in railroading all the time. Railroad men have to be alert. They have to be enthusiastic about their work. There is no industry which depends so much upon alertness and efficiency—and I might say enthusiasm—on the part of the employees for success as does the railroad business. That is one of the reasons why the railroad companies were so anxious 50 years ago to establish pension systems, and that is why the railroad-pension systems have worked so well bcause mankind has always wanted security. That is instinctive in mankind. A man tries to get security. If he is working in an industry which furnishes him security, he is going to be more satisfied and do better work. At least that has been the experience of the railroad companies.

The plans which were worked out in 1937, through collective bargaining, between the employees and the employers, while they represented a great step forward, did not do a perfect job. The most glaring deficiency in the present law is in regard to disability benefits. This bill corrects that deficiency in respect to disability benefits. What do Senators think of a provision which requires a man, before he can draw annuities, to be totally disabled for employment in any capacity, of any kind, not simply railroad employment? He must be unable to do anything at all, to entitle him to draw annuities. He must be 65 years old, or he must have served 30 years for the railroad company. If he does not meet these qualifications he does not get his total disability payment.

Under the pending bill that situation is being corrected, as it ought to be corrected. The previous situation was disgraceful, if I may say so. Under the provisions of this bill a man who has served a railroad for 10 years, I think it is, and becomes totally disabled for railroad work, is entitled to disability benefits. What does that cost the railroad companies? It costs the companies $10,625,000 to make that change in respect to disability. Those figures are based on a pay roll of $2,500,000,000, and which is what the railroads contend the pay roll is going to be. So making that change in disability benefits will cost the railroads $10,625,000, and it will cost the men that much too. This is a 50–50 proposition. Whatever it costs the railroads it costs the men. The men are anxious and willing to meet that requirement.

About one-fourth of the 60-page bill which Senators have before them provides for survivor and death benefits. The survivor and death benefits, with a pay roll again of $2,500,000,000, are going to cost the railroads $29,375,000 and they are going to cost the men $29,375,000. But the survivor and death benefits which the railroad employees are going to receive are all contained in the social-security law. They are in the social-security plan. The only difference is that under the pending bill they are increased about 25 percent above the benefits under the social-security plan. But we must remember that railroad employees pay six times the amount of pay-roll taxes that a person pays under the social-security plan, and why should not they be entitled to a little more benefit when they pay six times as much? They are given a 25-percent better arrangement than is provided in connection with the social-security plan.

Another change which is made by the bill is that the minimum annuity payable to railroad men is increased from $40 to $50 for men who have had 17 years of experience. If a man has had 17 years of experience on a railroad, his minimum annuity is increased by the bill from $40 to $50. That increase will cost the railroads $375,000 and it will cost the men $375,000.

The provision that a maximum of $120, as the total amount, can be paid is not changed by this bill. The average annuity payment under the retirement plan is $67. Does not the Senator think that is moderate? Does he think there is anything extravagant or luxurious about such a payment? Of course, the answer is that there is not.

Something has been said about the great benefits that are to be given under the unemployment-insurance plan. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] asked some questions about that a while ago. He inquired about the great benefits that are now proposed by the bill, in connection with unemployment insurance. Let me state what the benefits will be. Under the provisions of the bill, unemployment due to sickness will be regarded the same as unemployment due to lack of a job. That may be an innovation, but is it not justice? The older railroad men are in no danger of losing their jobs, because they have seniority. If such a man has worked for a railroad company for 10, 15, or 20 years, he will not have any unemployment due to a shortage of jobs, because if there are any shortage of jobs in the division in which he works, the men without seniority will be laid off.

But the older men, in many instances the gray-haired men, will have sickness, and they are entitled to insurance to take care of their situation when they are sick.

Another change which the bill provides is in connection with unemployment insurance. The present law provides for the payment of $4, in the case of men whose salaries are $1,600 and over. Under the pending bill a ceiling is established. Under existing law, every man is paid $4 a day if he draws $1,600 or more a year. That is the top. Under the bill he will get $4 a day if his annual salary is between $1,600 and $2,000. If his salary is above $2,000 and under $2,500, he will get $4.50 a day; and if his salary is above $2,500, his unemployment-insurance payment will be $5 a day. Mr. President, there is nothing extravagant about that. These rates were deemed necessary in order to bring the unemployment-insurance plan within some range of the social-security benefits. We do not go way beyond the social-security benefits. We are simply attempting to bring the railroad unemployment-insurance benefits within the range of those benefits. The benefits I have enumerated are, in many instances, below the social-security rates in some of the States.

So there is nothing extravagant about this bill. There is nothing about it which should not be adopted by the Congress. We have a few fears about a few of the details of the bill. But the bigger things, the important things, are not extravagant. They should be adopted, and I am sure they will be adopted by the Senate.

I notice that the railroad companies claim that the bill will cost them $100,000,000. The part of the bill which makes the unemployment system or the retirement system actuarially sound takes up 60 percent of that amount. Sixty percent of the $100,000,000 is needed in order to make the system sound, as Congress promised the men it would be. If the figure of $100,000,000 is correct, 60 percent of that amount will go to make the system actuarially sound. When the law was first enacted, Congress pledged that the system would be actuarily sound; and 60 percent of the $100,000,000 will do that. Forty-three million dollars-plus will be for the so-called increased benefits and increased annuities. I cannot see why a piece of legislation should be hailed as completely devastating, when it provides for benefits of 40 percent of $100,000,000 for increased annuities and for increased benefits.

I am sure the bill is nothing of the kind. I am sure it is a very progressive piece of legislation. I think it should be passed by a very large vote in the Senate, just as it was passed by a large vote in the House of Representatives. In the House, the vote was 235 to 49. I believe that the Senate should pass the bill by at least a corresponding majority.

I realize that there are 60 pages of very technical language in the bill, and of course there will be a great many questions. I have tried to answer the questions which have been propounded up to now. As other questions occur to other Senators while the bill is under consideration, we shall try to supply the answers.

I do not think it is necessary for me to attempt to describe the bill any further. If there is any particular interest in any special part of the bill, we shall try to supply the answers to the questions which may be propounded.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Will the Chair state what the present parliamentary situation is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is pending before the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President——

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. CAPEHART. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Capper	Gurney
Andrews	Carville	Hart
Austin	Connally	Hawkes

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 1, and renumber the remaining sections of the bill; and on page 60, it is proposed to strike out lines 18 through 20.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is clearly indicated by the language of the amendment. It would strike out section 1 of the bill. This section is the one which increases the coverage of the law. If this section were stricken out the coverage of the bill would be exactly as it now is in the law.

I cannot subscribe to the view that we ought not to make any change in the bill. The House of Representatives did not have the opportunity to pass upon any of the several amendments which were offered in the House, because the vote was had upon the amendments en bloc. When the committee in the House of Representatives considered the bill it made more than 20 amendments. The Committee of the Whole in the House adopted almost all those amendments. Then when the matter came before the House of Representatives the vote was had upon the amendments en bloc. So no opportunity was given to the House to vote on any of those amendments. The House either had to kill all of them or adopt all of them, and therefore they were not adopted and the bill was passed as introduced.

The suggestion is made that the committee report will allay the fears of those who believe that the bill would cover them. I cannot subscribe to that position. The language of the bill is clear and unequivocal. It denotes just who is to be included. There is no means by which the statement of a committee in support of a bill can modify or change the plain written words of the bill.

If there is any ambiguity about this, the report of the committee might be useful in enabling the court properly to interpret the matter; but when the language is clear and unequivocal no purpose would be served because the court would construe the act according to its language.

Mr. President, let us see what is the purpose of section 1. The committee says that it is not the purpose to cover a large number of persons who apprehend they are covered. If the object is not to cover them, why is section 1 placed in the bill? It covers nearly 8 pages. There are 11 subsections under section 1. Why was it necessary to write in the bill 11 subsections?

In the committee report, on page 6, there is the following statement:

> The bill brings under the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts two new groups of employers, namely, railroad-controlled trucking companies and those freight forwarders that are not now covered. The railroad-controlled trucking companies are operated as part of the railroad plant for the performance of railroad transportation.

If the purpose of the bill is to include only those two classes, why does not the bill say so? Why was it necessary to write 11 subsections to section 1? If it is the purpose of those who are sponsoring the bill to cover only those two classes, why does the bill contain 8 pages in setting forth the first section?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish the Senator from Colorado would state what he stated earlier in the day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I stated this afternoon that the reason for all the language to which the Senator has referred is to enable the entire matter of coverage to be clarified. A great many cases with regard to the subject have been in the courts and some of them have been in the courts for a long time. It was necessary to have a clarification of the point which has been raised. Otherwise every little question which might be raised would have to go through the courts and finally to the Supreme Court. Of course, no one wants that to be made necessary. So it was essential in the bill to clarify the matter of coverage.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I cannot understand the argument of the Senator from Colorado. When a new statute has been enacted for the purpose of clarifying something, the courts then have to pass upon the matter. Therefore, we are no better off than before.

Mr. HOEY. The Senator is correct. Let us examine the statement of the Senator from Colorado. He is a good lawyer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I am not a lawyer at all.

Mr. HOEY. I submit that section 1, instead of clarifying, confuses the whole issue. That section not only confuses the question but leaves an absolute doubt as to who is covered. Under the present law it has been practically settled, and in recent years there have been practically no cases in the courts with regard to who was covered by the law. The Senator is as familiar with Supreme Court decisions in regard to this subject as I am, and he knows that in recent years there has been very little controversy with regard to who is covered, because the matter was previously settled. The language of this bill would open Pandora's box.

Let us consider a few passages of the bill.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I think that I may be in position to throw a little light on the reason for consuming so many pages in setting forth the section to which the Senator from North Carolina has referred, in an effort to define coverage. In the hearings before the subcommittee on Senate bill 293, I wish to read briefly from the testimony of Mr. Leo M. Nicolson, warehousing consultant. Mr. Nicolson said:

> Well, I would think, Senator, that you might just as well scrap the Social Security Act and let everybody come under the Railroad Retirement Act, and treat them uniformly, and then go along from there, because I can't think of any industry which manufactures any product—> which are subsidiaries, stores for hire its steel products in normal peacetime operations. Most everybody buys a quantity of a certain type and kind of bar or sheet or something else, and they want it stored for them until they call for it. The steel company, or through its warehouse, assesses a storage charge for this service. That is storage for hire of freight which has been transported or will be transported by a common carrier.

He then mentioned some of the products—

I am now coming to a portion of the testimony which I wish particularly to read:

> We can't get away from the wording of that section. If that subparagraph (2), gentlemen, is confined to transportation as that term is interpreted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, I think all of the private industry that is opposing this bill will walk out and say, "We are entirely satisfied. We have no complaint at all. We will be perfectly willing to rely upon the wisdom of the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining what is a transportation function and what is not a transportation function under the Transportation Act."
> Senator WHEELER. Well, wouldn't the thing to do be to write a definition in, not leave it to a changing definition? In other words, the Interstate Commerce Commission might at some future time change their definition of what was transportation, and so forth; whereas, if you wrote definitely into the act a definition, then you would have something that would be stable.

I now skip a portion of the hearings and come to Mr. Nicolson again.

The Senator from Colorado said to the Senator from Montana, "He is talking about the law." I continue reading from the testimony:

> Senator WHEELER. I am talking about the law.
> Mr. NICOLSON. Oh.
> Senator WHEELER. I am talking about the law; I am not talking about the agency. After all, when you leave it up to the agency to define it, your agency may change its views on it. The Interstate Commerce Commission sometimes change their views, and certainly the courts of the country have changed their views quite frequently.
> Senator JOHNSON of Colorado. The trouble is, somebody has to interpret the law.
> Senator WHEELER. Surely.

Senator HAWKES. Mr. Chairman, may I, for the benefit of Senator WHEELER, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, say that Mr. Schoene—

Mr. Schoene was the attorney for the labor group—who will appear in a few moments, has stated before this hearing that he recognized this problem and that it was a very difficult thing to define.

Is that right? Am I quoting you correctly, Mr. Schoene?

And I turned to Mr. Schoene and asked him that question.

Mr. SCHOENE. You are, Senator; yes.

Mr. President, I wish to bring that testimony to the attention of the Senate while we are discussing the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina because it was clearly shown at the time of the hearing that my good friend, the Senator from Montana, felt that the matter should be defined in the law.

Mr. HOEY. I thank the Senator. It is very evident that no one at the hearing maintained at any time that this bill contained a clear statement of who was covered. I maintain that under the coverage of the bill ice manufacturers who refrigerate cars of railroads are covered. I maintain that the bonded warehouses which store goods in transit, or goods which are to be transported on the railroad, are covered. I maintain that the truckers who haul any goods for a railroad company to be shipped by the railroad company, are covered. I maintain that any trucking company in which the railroad has an interest, is covered, and a trucking company in which the railroad has no interest would also be covered. I maintain that every commissary which furnishes anything to a railroad is covered. I maintain that stevedores are covered. Is it not beyond any question unwise for the Senate to pass a bill which contains matters about which many of the persons who are involved may be apprehensive, especially those who are engaged in business and who have any relations with railroads?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to propose some amendments to the bill for the purpose of having them printed. I think it is quite obvious that a final vote on the bill will not be taken tonight. These amendments relate to matters in which the Treasury is very much concerned. While they consist of 13 pages, they relate to the same subject, and I am asking that they be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in understanding that the Senator is a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Mr. HOEY. Yes; and I am also a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, the subcommittee heard testimony covering a period of many days. It submitted a report on March 15 to the full committee. In the report it was stated that this subject was so complicated that the members of the subcommittee wished the full committee to settle the matter of policy. We submitted the report, which had been written by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, and in which the controverted question was set forth. We said that before a matter of this importance should be passed on by the subcommittee, the full committee should decide on the question of policy.

I shall not discuss the entire bill tonight, but I assert that in its present condition it is a monstrosity. No legislative body should pass it. It does not meet any of the requirements. Those who are engaged in labor service, and are familiar with the bill, will not subscribe to it because it includes many persons to whom they do not wish it to be applied.

The railroads have mutually agreed about this legislation. They have agreed on former occasions. The pending bill ignores the possibility of any kind of conference being held between railroad unions and railroads in an attempt to agree about what must be done.

The railroads pay 3 percent on their entire pay roll for purposes of unemployment benefits. The employees themselves do not contribute a cent to that. That is 3 percent of the entire pay roll. Then they divide equally 3¼ percent each of the pay roll for purposes of maintaining the retirement fund. It is necessary, because of an approaching deficit in the fund, and because it is not sufficient to maintain the present retirement benefits on the present basis, on the levy which is now made. In this proposal they increase it by three-fourths of 1 percent on the entire pay roll, to make up for what would be a deficit, and actuaries say that is necessary, and certainly that should be done, because those who are now paying in should not be denied at some future date what may be due them from the retirement fund. Unless this fund is increased in the years to come it will be insufficient to meet the needs.

Furthermore, there will be this additional amount levied equally on employers, the railroads, and on the employees. It is a rather large sum, and if this proposal is enacted in this sort of fashion, it is going to dislodge, it is going to dissatisfy, it is going to change the attitude of all the people who are covered by social security, because it will mean to the railroad employees an amount far beyond anything that is granted to the others.

The railroad employees have been pretty well taken care of and I am glad they have been. They are a very fine body of men. I have much admiration for the railroad employees of the country. Some have described them as the aristocrats of labor. I am perfectly willing that they be so designated. I think they have a great spirit of loyalty to their work, and they render excellent service. I should like to see their retirement compensation increased. I think it should be done, but I believe it should be done after due consideration, and after we have weighed all the conditions, and after we see what effect it will have on the whole social-security fabric of our people. It should not be done in haste, it should not be done without consideration, it should not be done when the Senate does not know what it is doing.

There is not a single Senator, outside of those on the subcommittee, who had opportunity to hear the testimony in this case, and even those who heard it do not understand it. I place myself among that number, because it is a very complicated question; it involves a great many considerations, and is not the sort of matter which should be rushed through without giving it due consideration.

Mr. President, I am anxious to see everything done for the railroad employees which should be done, but I do not believe we should select one group and pass a bill benefiting them without giving it any consideration, and saying, "Here is a measure we are going to pass, and if there is anything wrong with it we will take care of that in the future." I do not believe that is sound legislative policy and I do not feel the Senate should do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HOEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. HOEY. Oh, no; I have a great deal more to say.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I have made it my business in the last 2 or 3 weeks to talk to a number of conductors and brakemen who are very dear friends of mine, and I wish to say to the Senator that they tell me almost precisely what he said a few minutes ago. They are interested in one thing more than anything else in the world, that is, to be certain that the retirement fund is actuarially sound, and is kept so. They are very deeply interested in that. Of course, like everycody else in the world, they want a little more here and a little more there. So far as I am concerned, I believe, with the Senator, that this question of making the retirement fund sound should have our attention. If we will take a little time we can attend to that. I believe everybody is in favor of it, but I must say that I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that this question involves matters which affect the entire structure of the economy of the United States, and certainly affect a very vital part of the social-security system.

Mr. HOEY. I thank the Senator. It is not my purpose to discuss the merits of the entire bill. I mentioned this one matter incidentally to meet the argument that it is so important to have the bill passed immediately.

Even if the bill does not become a law until next year, when we meet in January, we can take time enough to pass a bill which will meet the situation and which will take care of the employees, will increase proportionately and properly their retirement pay, and will make secure their status for the future. I think that would be better for the railroad employees. I know it would be better for the country.

What I want to address myself to particularly is the amendment I am offering, which relates to the method of coverage. Let us analyze for just a moment the fact that the bill does not cover all the people I mention. As I said, I shall not read it at all, because it begins on the first page and embraces several sections. So I go to section 5. After mentioning several other people who are included, it says this, and these are the people to be covered:

Is engaged in performing services necessary or incidental to the conduct of the transportation carried on by such carrier, or services in the manufacture of equipment or equipment parts or in the processing of materials for use in the operation, servicing, or maintenance of way, structures, or equipment devoted to use in transportation—

or services in connection with the storage—

That is, warehouses—

elevation—

Grain plants, or anything like that—or handling of property transported, being transported, or to be transported if such storage, elevation, or handling services are provided with respect to property accorded privileges of storage in transit.

It not only provides as I have read, but it takes in the other services. Let us consider the word "service" in transportation. What does it mean if it does not mean service by refrigeration plants, and all that? That language indicates just that.

Let us consider the definition given. It has been said in the argument tonight that the Interstate Commerce Commission would not interpret the bill in the way some contend, and that they do not deal with it. Let us read from the Interstate Commerce Act and see whether or not that is a proper interpretation of it. I come to section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, together with amendments, which defines the term "common carrier," and we find this language:

The term "transportation" as used in this part shall include locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services—in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

In connection with what?

That is the Interstate Commerce Act defining just what is meant.

When it is said that the Interstate Commerce Commission would not for 1 minute include this, I say it is already included, and it is included under the law creating the Interstate Commerce Commission. The very language that is used in the bill would cover icing, refrigerating plants, bonded warehouses, and any use in transportation. Then it reaches out to cover many other employees.

What sort of confusion would that cause in the minds of all these employees and employers? Let us take a bonded warehouse, for instance. Suppose it has 500 employees. If 50 of them are engaged in loading anything on cars, if they put in 50 percent of their time on such work, the warehouse has to separate them and take them out of social security—they are all covered by social security now—and put them under railroad retirement. They have to keep a record of the time they work, because if they work more than 40 percent of the time in the loading they have to come from under social security and be placed under this proposed law. What sort of confusion would that bring to ice manufacturers and trucking plants?

Let us consider a trucking concern—and such concerns operate all over the country—in which a railroad has no interest, direct or indirect, but let us suppose it has a contract to do hauling for a railroad. It would have to take all its employees who have to haul anything to be shipped under the contract, and put them under the law. The company would have to keep a record of their time, because if the hauling takes more than 40 percent of their time, they have to be included. If less than that, they are left out.

Does the Senate want to impose that sort of obligation on all those who are engaged in the trucking business? Does it want to impose that sort of obligation on those engaged in operating bonded warehouses or on ice manufacturers, and various other businesses?

It is no answer to tell us that it can be interpreted in some other way. Here is the law written plainly, and when it is written that way, how can anyone get around it? Does the Senate want to legislate with the idea that someone will come along and correct the mistakes we make?

Mr. President, I am offering the amendment in the utmost faith. If it is said that it would delay the passage of the bill, the Senate is not responsible. If the House of Representative desires, it can accept the bill when it goes over there with this amendment in it. All it does is change the coverage. The House would not even have to appoint a conference committee, if they were unwilling to accept it. The House has not had an opportunity to pass on this question separate and apart from the disposition of 21 amendments which were offered en bloc on the floor of the House.

I submit that in legislating about this matter it is the duty of the Senate to deal with the measure on the basis of what is right from the legislative standpoint, and let results take care of themselves. If it should result in the defeat of the measure I think it would be for the benefit of all concerned. If it is reviewed and dealt with in a common-sense manner, and these problems worked out so that when the bill is passed it will deal with the needs and administer to the necessities of the railroad employees, I believe they would be better satisfied.

They may be momentarily disappointed at not having the bill passed immediately. I know it has been in Congress in one form or another for some time; I heard it said this evening it has been here 3 years. If it has been here that long, is it not better to take a little longer and pass a bill concerning which we will know what it provides and what it will cost, rather than rush one through about which we are in doubt?

I am offering the amendment because I believe it would tend to relieve and would relieve the apprehensions—which I think are well founded—of those who think they are covered under the bill, and that they are going to be subjected to all the penalties and burdens imposed without either themselves or their employees desiring to be covered, against the protests of a great many railroad employees.

I have a number of telegrams from conductors and from engineers and from other railroad employees saying, "We do not want these other people taken into our organization." It is said that this bill would take in not more than 10,000. But it is not the number of individuals who are taken in that causes concern; it is the disruption and the confusion that will be caused every employer of labor who employs any of those who would be included in the law. It would disrupt the organization of the employer, for some men would be under the Railroad Retirement Act and others would be under the Social Security Act. Some would be getting the railroad retirement pay while others would be receiving other benefits, and they would be in different amounts.

I do not care to trespass longer on the time of the Senate, but I feel deeply that it would be a serious mistake to pass the bill in its present form.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my good friend the Senator from North Carolina, who, I am sure, is opposed to the legislation, aside from the amendment which he has offered.

I think it ought to be stated that there has never been any effort on the part of Congress nor any sentiment on the part of the people, so far as I know, to merge the Railroad Retirement Act and the benefits derived from it by railroad employees with the general social-security law of the United States.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOEY. I understood the Senator to say that I was opposed to the bill without regard to my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the Senator to be in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOEY. I said I was opposed to it in its present form. I am in favor of increases in pay from the retirement fund. I am in favor of increased disability benefits. But I am not in favor of the bill in its present form.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the Senator to say that, even if his amendment to the bill were adopted and the bill were not changed otherwise, he would still not support it.

Mr. HOEY. I would not be in favor of it. I did not say that I would not support it. But I think there are other changes necessary to be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. There may be a technical difference between not being in favor of a measure and not supporting it.

Mr. HOEY. I want to say distinctly that I am not opposed to increase in payments to these employees. I should like to have it done. But I think it ought to be done with fair regard for all the circumstances.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator, and I thank him for the correction.

As I was saying, Mr. President, there has never been any sentiment in Congress or any effort made to merge the railroad retirement benefit laws with the general social-security laws of the country. The same is true of labor legislation. When we enacted the National Labor Relations Act and set up the National Labor Relations Board we exempted the railroad employees from its operations, because we had long before that passed a Railway Labor Act applicable to railway labor, because Congress recognized that, engaged as they were in interstate transportation, being the employees of our great transportation system, they occupied a situation which entitled them to special treatment and prior treatment before any other similar legislation was enacted in the history of the United States.

The first labor laws we passed dealt only with railroad labor. In the Adamson law away back yonder in 1916, the Transportation Act of 1920, the Railway Labor Act of 1926, and the amendments that have been added thereto, covering a period of more than 30 years, we always dealt with railroad labor separate and apart from the dealing by Congress with other labor in regard to labor relations or benefits conferred upon labor by any legislation that we might enact.

So we passed the Railway Labor Retirement Act before we passed to social-security law, and in that legislation we still kept railway labor separate and apart from the general run of employees in the United States with respect to the benefits. It would be a very difficult thing, and in my judgment an unwise thing, to try to level off and scramble the situation as between railway labor all over the United States and other classes of labor with which Congress has attempted to deal.

So that it seems to me that the argument that we ought not to deal with amendments of this law because it is not a part of the social-security system are not well founded. The coverage in the law as it now exists has not been changed by legislation since 1937—9 years.

All of section 1, which the Senator from North Carolina seeks to strike out, is nothing more than a rewriting, nothing more than a spelling out of the coverage of the present law in such a way as to clarify it and not leave it up to individual interpretation, which it has been for the last 9 years, plus the coverage of two other classes not now covered. One is the freight forwarder. The freight forwarder is engaged in interstate commerce. He is not under the act to regulate commerce. We passed a special law through the Congress of the United States dealing with freight forwarders because they are a part of our transportation system, and it is impossible to distinguish in their ordinary operations between their employees and the employees of the railroads. Therefore, in section 1 we have included this new class of freight forwarders under the coverage of the law.

The other class is the railroad-owned or controlled truck lines. The reason that they were not included when the original coverage was enacted into law was because they were under the NRA and were operating a code which was adopted in the NRA while it was in existence, and, therefore, railroad-owned trucks were not included in the coverage which we are seeking now to provide.

There is nothing complicated about it. Section 1 does take up several pages, but it is a mere rewriting of the present law, spelling out the coverage, clarifying it, so as not to leave it to individual cases for the Retirement Board to interpret whether they are covered or are not covered. We are trying to write out whether they are covered or are not covered.

The only important respect in which the legislation, as interpreted and applied by the Railroad Retirement Board, is broadened with respect to coverage is by the inclusion of freight-forwarding companies not railroad-owned or controlled and by the inclusion of railroad-connected trucking services.

In paragraph (1) of the long section 1 the definition of carrier covers the employers of the great bulk of the employees affected. That is merely a rewriting of the present law.

Paragraph (2) is directed to the inclusion of companies which are performing railroad transportation as defined in the Interstate Commerce Act and, therefore, are under the Interstate Commerce Act.

Paragraph (3) refers to freight forwarders who are not now included.

Paragraph (4) is addressed to the coverage of work which is not itself transportation, but is a part of the regular operations which a railroad must carry on in order to perform transportation.

Paragraph (5) is an effort to spell out in more detail the provisions of the present law making the legislation applicable to carrier-controlled companies engaged in performing services in connection with railroad transportation. The specific services spelled out by this paragraph are all services which the Railroad Retirement Board and the Bureau of Internal Revenue have held to be covered by present law when performed by carrier-controlled companies, except that the present law omitted trucking services. Obviously freight forwarders ought to be included. They are a part of the transportation system of the country. The work they do in and around the railroads is interchangeable and indistinguishable as far as railroad services are concerned. Obviously a trucking company engaged in transportation as a part of the railroad system, ought to be covered, because there has been an effort made to make individual contracts in order to avoid the present law, instead of having a continuous service rendered by a railroad-owned or controlled trucking company.

Paragraph (6) of this section makes no change at all in the present law.

Paragraph (7) makes no change in the present law.

Paragraph (8) covers railroad-controlled hospital and recreational associations which have uniformly been held to be covered under existing law as railroad-controlled companies performing services in connection with railroad transportation.

Paragraph (9) makes no change at all in the present law.

Paragraph (10) places certain limitations upon the preceding paragraph in part to express limitations now in the law, and in part to avoid possibilities of too broad an interpretation of the preceding paragraphs.

So that all that this long section, which is denounced as a monstrosity, attempts to do is to rewrite and clarify the present law so that it cannot be subject to misinterpretation and misunderstanding, and to add two categories, railroad-owned and railroad-controlled trucking companies, and freight forwarders, which have been heretofore dealt with by Congress and taken under the act to regulate commerce.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will my good friend the Senator from Kentucky explain to me how a subcommittee considered this bill for days, and then one of its prominent members comes in on the Senate floor and tells the Senate that he does not know what it means, that no member of the subcommittee could understand what it means, while now we hear the distinguished leader state that the bill is a measure which spells out the provisions of the present law, and clarifies them, and presents them in understandable terms? I must say that I am in doubt as to what course to follow when I hear my distinguished leader on the one hand say that, and my distinguished friend, the Senator from North Carolina say that he does not know what it means.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am afraid that the Senator from North Carolina did himself a great injustice when he said he did not understand this legislation. The Senator from North Carolina is one of the ablest lawyers and best legislators ever to sit in the Congress of the United States. I served with him years ago in the House of Representatives, and I have enjoyed his service in the Senate. I think he does his intellect a grave injustice when he says that he does not understand the bill.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOEY. I appreciate the Senator's compliments; but if this section is clear why is it necessary for the committee to write a page or two to explain how it ought to be construed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because a great deal of dust has been thrown into the eyes of many persons with respect to the meaning of this section, and the committee felt that it was its duty to try to clarify it.

Mr. HOEY. Did not the committee write this explanation immediately before the bill was reported from the committee, and before any dust had been thrown?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. A great deal of dust had been thrown in the other branch of Congress, and a great deal of dust had been thrown over here. The committee could not write the explanation until it was ready to report the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Taking the argument of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, if the language of the bill itself is ambiguous and is not clear, and he does not understand it, if it has been clarified in the report, as I understand the law, if the courts or the Commission should find ambiguity in the bill itself they would have the right to look at the history of the legislation and the report in order to clarify it. I do not think that is a proper way to legislate; but if the language is really as bad as the Senator from North Carolina says it is, then certainly the court would have a right to refer to the report to clarify it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is undoubtedly true as a matter of legislative interpretation.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOEY. The distinguished Senator from Utah misapprehended my statement if he thought I said that the whole bill was ambiguous. I said that it was clear from a reading of the bill that ice manufacturers, warehousemen, and truckers were covered, but that there was a great deal of ambiguity in the section, and that it lacked clearness. I do not think there is any doubt about the fact that the classes to which reference has been made are covered, because they are named. If the bill is not intended to cover warehousemen why does it refer to storage, and goods in transit? If it is not intended to cover those engaged in furnishing ice, why does it make reference to servicing refrigerator cars? I stated that in that respect the bill was clear beyond question. I emphasized the fact that the report of the committee would be helpful only in case of ambiguity. There are many ambiguities in this particular section; but it is clear that the various classes which have been mentioned are covered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina should be adopted it would nullify the effort which the committee has made in collaboration with the Railroad Retirement Board. The bill was not written under a tree by some individual. It was studied long and carefully. In writing it the committee consulted with the Railroad Retirement Board, and considered the fact that for 9 years the Board has been compelled, by reason of the ambiguity in the present law, to make interpretations in individual cases as to whether or not certain persons were covered. Acting upon that information and that experience of the Railroad Retirement Board, and in cooperation with the Railroad Retirement Board, this effort to clarify the coverage in the existing law was written into the bill, plus two additional categories.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. Is it not a fact that if this amendment were adopted and the section were stricken, by virtue of the provisions of the present law there would be greater ambiguity facing the administrative agency than possibly could exist if the amendment were defeated and section 1 were to remain in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely, because the ambiguities and individual interpretations which have been necessary under the law as it has been on the statute books for the past 9 months would be multiplied and perpetuated. So if the Senator's amendment were adopted and section 1 were eliminated, the ambiguity of the law as it now exists would be perpetuated. Also, there would be eliminated the coverage of the two categories which everyone admits ought to be covered. One category includes freight forwarders, who are an integral part of the transportation system of our country, and have been so recognized by the Congress. The other category includes workers on railroad-owned or controlled trucks engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Earlier in the evening I asked the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] a question. Ordinarily when we speak of freight forwarders we are speaking in terms of railroads; but there are many freight forwarders who forward by other means of transportation. In the future freight will be forwarded probably to a greater extent by other means than railroads; and freight forwarders would be permanently placed under the terms of the Railroad Retirement Act. Is not that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not so interpret the bill. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado in this connection. I do not believe that every company which gathers and forwards freight by a means wholly disconnected from railroads would necessarily be covered by the statute.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask a hypothetical question——

Mr. BARKLEY. The freight forwarders referred to are the freight forwarders covered by the act to regulate commerce which Congress enacted several years ago.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose that half of the business were forwarded by air or by truck.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Colorado has called my attention to subsection 11, on page 6, which is what is called the segregation clause. It reads as follows:

(11) Segregation: Any person who is an employer as defined in this subsection shall be an employer with respect to all activities carried on by it, except that (i) any person who is an employer by reason of paragraph (9) shall be an employer only in the capacity described in that paragraph; (ii) if the Board finds that a person is principally engaged in activities other than employer activities and that its employer activities are conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which it is principally engaged, such person shall be an employer only with respect to such employer operation or operations; and (iii) if the Board finds that a person who is an employer solely by reason of paragraph (2) or (4) of this subsection, is principally engaged in activities other than employer activities but does not, pursuant to clause (ii) find that the employer activities of such person are conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which it is principally engaged, such person shall be an employer only with respect to all work performed in its employ by individuals who regularly and substantially perform work on property structures or equipment devoted to transportation use.

Under that clause I believe that anyone who forwarded freight by air would not be covered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose the business were a combination of truck, railroad, and air transportation.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it were a combination, that part of it which would be covered by the Act to Regulate Commerce would be included.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I invite attention to the fact that carriers by air are expressly exempted from the act, as are those by water, even though they are railroad-owned.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. MAGNUSON. My point was that a freight forwarder might forward freight by several other means of transportation, although at the present time I presume most of them forward by rail. My question was this: Under the proposed legislation, if a freight forwarder forwarded, say, 70 percent of its business by rail, another 10 percent by air, and 20 percent by truck, would such a freight forwarder come under the terms of the bill? The answer is that it would. Suppose that half the freight were forwarded by rail and half by air. The freight forwarder would come under the terms of the Railroad Retirement Act. So other forms of transportation would be brought under the terms of the act.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. After all, the business of a freight forwarder is done largely by clerical help.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Practically all the workers belong to the railroad brotherhoods.

Mr. BARKLEY. The railroad clerks' organization.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Moreover, as I pointed out today, the freight forwarders themselves have begged the Congress to place them under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. So far as the freight forwarders are concerned, they have no complaint. However, this bill would not take them all in. It would include only those owned or controlled by the railroads. They ought to be covered because they are a part of the railroad transportation system.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If they are owned or controlled by the railroads——

Mr. WHEELER. If they are owned or controlled by the railroads they would come under the terms of the act, as would a bus company or truck company which was owned or controlled by a railroad. So far as the freight forwarders are concerned all the bill does, and all anyone contends it does, is to take in about 10,000 employees who are not now under the terms of the act. Let us be frank. There is nothing to the bugaboo about the great number of persons who would be taken in. The bill was drawn up in collaboration with the Railroad Retirement Board itself. The Board went over every provision of it. The bill was drawn up with the idea of clarifying many of the ambiguities now in the law. The idea that every ice company and every other company is to be taken in is perfectly preposterous, as will be seen from a study of the language of the bill and the interpretation placed upon it. I am perfectly willing to concede that if I had been drafting that provision I would have clarified it a little further. But to say that everyone is to be taken in is pure, unadulterated poppycock. No lawyer who has studied the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the decisions of the Supreme Court would contend that the bill would include ice companies and all the other companies which have been mentioned. The bill simply does not include them. I know that word has gone out from the National Association of Manufacturers and other organizations for the purpose of defeating the bill.

If Senators wish to defeat the bill, let them defeat it. But they should not predicate their action on the ground that the bill will take in ice companies and other companies because that simply is not the fact under the interpretations which have been made.

In the hearings I did say that I felt it would have been better if certain matters had been specifically clarified in the bill because of the fear in the minds of some people. I also said that because the Interstate Commerce Commission has defined what is meant by "transportation" and has limited the definition in the decision to which I called attention we should bear in mind that sometimes the Interstate Commerce Commission and other commissions change their minds.

But that language was used because when the bill was drafted it was felt that the Interstate Commerce Commission had time and time again passed upon a limitation of the meaning of section 3 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act. That is the reason that provision was included; namely, to take care of certain matters, but to limit the provision to the companies which are engaged in railroad transportation, and to eliminate those that are not. The matter probably could have been handled in a better way. I think probably it could have been.

But when it is claimed that various other companies are included, to my mind that is merely an attempt to draw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I am seeking information.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand.

Mr. MAGNUSON. No National Association of Manufacturers ever talked to me about this. I am seeking information, because the bill goes much further than the present Railroad Retirement Act goes.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it does. It takes in approximately 10,000 additional employees.

Not only is it the testimony of the railroad brotherhoods and their lawyers, but it is my recollection that it was also the testimony of the members of the board—at least, that is the interpretation which they themselves have placed upon it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I sincerely believe that if this bill did not extend further coverage, as it does, regardless of whether the interpretation is right or wrong, the bill would be passed by the Senate by a unanimous vote.

But the bill goes further than that. If the bill had been before the Senate on May 1, I am sure the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Kentucky would have agreed to accept amendments. The legislative procedure provided for is a complicated one.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. So the friends of railway labor and the friends of some other groups who have some doubts and fears about this matter are placed in an embarrassing position.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. But everyone knows that as a practical matter if we adopt amendments to the bill, we shall kill the bill. If Senators wish to kill the bill, that is the way to kill it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say that the legislative procedure is that if the bill is amended and subsequently goes back to the House, then unanimous consent will be required in order to have the House concur in the amendments of the Senate or in order to have the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and request a conference with the Senate on the matters in disagreement. We assume that objection would be made to either proposal.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Then the bill would lie on the Speaker's desk. It could be taken from the Speaker's desk only by a petition or by having the Rules Committee grant a rule.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the bill is passed by the Senate with amendments and if a concurrent resolution is adopted, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, that will go to the House of Representatives and will be in the Rules Committee.

So the friends of the measure on both sides are in the following dilemma: Either the amended bill will be in the Rules Committee, under its jurisdiction, or the concurrent resolution will be in that committee. The Rules Committee will have to act on one or the other.

Objection has been made on the ground that the amended bill would "cover the whole water front," and that many persons would object to that, whereas the concurrent resolution will be limited.

So that is the situation confronting us.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Assuming that the concurrent resolution could not be adopted at the present time, in view of the sentiments of the leaders and everyone else, everyone knows that if it were not adopted at this particular time, it would be adopted at the next session of Congress. There can be no question about that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the Senator might pick up some votes for the bill if the concurrent resolution were acted upon first.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is a parliamentary impossibility.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say in conclusion, in reference to the pending amendment, that the Board has been administering this law for 9 years. The Board has felt for some time that the coverage clause needs clarification. We are dealing now with the increase in the tax.

As I have said, the Board has administered this law for 9 years, and during that time the Board has discovered certain defects in the coverage. The Board has been required to make individual interpretations.

As a result of that experience the Board, in collaboration with the authors of the bill, including the Senator from Montana, who in 1944, in conjunction with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], introduced a bill which did not secure passage in either House, although hearings were held on it, the Board, the committee, and others interested in such legislation have felt that there should be a new statement of the law so as to clarify it, so that it would be spelled out. That is all that section 1 tries to do and that is all it does, except to include the two categories of freight forwarders and railroad-owned or railroad-controlled trucks.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. We have not been able to hear the Senator very distinctly thus far, over at this side of the Chamber; but I should like to ask this question: From time to time during the debate, some mention has been made of a concurrent resolution to be submitted to the Senate in the event the bill is passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Would it be proper to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky, so that we might know in advance, what the contents of the concurrent resolution will be?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I have it prepared for submission, and I shall have it printed, so that every Senator may know what it will entail.

Mr. DONNELL. May we learn that in advance, so that if we pass the bill we shall know?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes. It will be printed tonight, and it will be available tomorrow morning to every Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to make a further statement with respect to the concurrent resolution. In the first place, I should like to ask the Senator, without having him read the concurrent resolution, unless he prefers to do so, what the general nature of the proposed concurrent resolution is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I intend to refer to it after discussing the amendment now before the Senate, and I shall do so before I take my seat. I should prefer to wait until I get to it. It is very simple, and it will not take long to discuss.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well. When the Senator gets to it, I should like to ask one or two questions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CORDON. I would not interrupt at this point except for the fact that the Senator from Missouri has been calling attention to the point that the present Board has been faced with the necessity of determining which of the employees of the various employers connected with transportation might be subject to the Railroad Retirement Act. I note on page 409 of the Senate committee hearings a statement by the Board that—

> As of June 30, 1944, the Board has formulated about 5,600 rules and practices affecting 764 different employers.

In an attempt to set up some kind of policy and basis upon which it might administer the present law. The Board takes the position that section 1 does, in fact, carry into legislative effect its own practices, which it has been compelled to adopt by reason of the construction and interpretation of the present law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I thank the Senator for that reference. It confirms what I have said about what has been the experience of the Board in the 9 years in which it has been administering this law.

Mr. President, without in any way casting any reflection on the good faith of the Senator from North Carolina, which I would not attempt to intimate in any way whatever, under any circumstances, let me say that the amendment will not help in any way in the administration of the law. So I hope the amendment will be rejected, because, as I said earlier in the day, under the present circumstances the adoption of any amendment whatever will result in the failure to enact any legislation at all.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator's reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina will apply, as I understand the situation, to any amendment which might be offered on the floor of the Senate. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

This morning I said I was preparing a concurrent resolution, and I have now prepared it. Much of it deals with changes in the dates stated in the bill, simply because the bill was introduced early in 1945, and it provided dates which were appropriate for 1945. So the concurrent resolution deals in part with changing the dates which are stated in the bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry at this point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Will not the Senator be kind enough to let us have the body of the concurrent resolution read so that we will know what it is?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will be patient enough for me to get to the reading of the concurrent resolution, that is what I propose to do.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say that the first part of the concurrent resolution deals with a change in dates. The bill was introduced in 1945 and those dates are not appropriate because this is 1946. The substance of the concurrent resolution deals with three things. If Senators will examine the bill on pages 5 and 6, under subsection 10, beginning near the top of page 5, they will see that the subsection deals with exclusions from the operations of the bill. On page 5 there are excluded four categories. On page 6, in the second line, the exclusions end with the words "motive power." I propose to strike out the period and insert a semicolon.

Mr. DONNELL. On what page and in what line?

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 6, in the second line, after the words "motive power." I propose to strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and the following:

> Or (v) other than a carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, by reason of its being engaged in manufacturing, harvesting, storing, distributing, selling, or delivering refrigeration or ice to or into equipment used for refrigeration purposes in connection with the transportation of passengers or property—

That language would certainly exclude from the operations of the act all ice companies or refrigeration activities in connection with railroad systems—> or (vi) engaged in the warehouse business if such person is not owned or controlled by a carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act; or (vii) engaged in the transportation of property by motor vehicle if such person is not owned or controlled by a carrier subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Therefore, in this concurrent resolution all ice companies, all refrigeration companies, and all refrigeration activities not owned by a railroad company itself, would be excluded. All warehouse activities not owned by a railroad company itself would be excluded. All trucking, all hauling by motor vehicles not owned or controlled by carriers, would be excluded. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that that covers the entire situation. I realize that after the bill is passed in its present form it will go to the President for his signature. If the concurrent resolution were not agreed to the bill would be left in its present form. But later the law could be changed by an amendment, and I have no doubt that the overwhelming sentiment of both Houses would be to declare some clarification of the coverage provision of the bill if, in the meantime, it had been enacted into law. But if the concurrent resolution is adopted by both Houses, following the adoption of the pending bill by the Senate, it will become immediately a part of the bill, and will be in the bill when it is transmitted to the President for his signature. So that seems to be a logical move by which we can do what we all want to do, without endangering the enactment of the bill into law.

Mr. President, I present the concurrent resolution and——

Mr. TAFT, Mr. DONNELL, and other Senators objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it in order for me to move that I be permitted to present the concurrent resolution at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only by unanimous consent may the Senator present the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. I am glad to know that the Senator from Ohio and other Senators object to the clarification of this bill by the method which I have proposed.

Mr. TAFT, Mr. DONNELL, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall seek some other method.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I decline to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate the Senator from Kentucky yielding to me, but in view of the fact that he has refused to yield to the Senator from Ohio, I will not make any extensive remarks but will merely ask the Senator from Kentucky if he has completed his argument.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have completed my argument on the amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. Then I wish to ask a few questions.

First, I think it is proper to object to the concurrent resolution because, as I see it, the concurrent resolution would be void even if adopted. In other words, concurrent resolutions, as a general proposition, and as I understand the situation, are offered for the purpose of correcting minor clerical details of one kind or another. But the concurrent resolution which the Senator from Kentucky has sought to present, and which he has described, obviously goes far beyond the purpose which I have in mind for concurrent resolutions, and undertakes, in effect, to amend the bill which we are asked to pass. In other words, the concurrent resolution, if passed by both Houses of Congress, would not be signed by the President, but would undertake to amend a bill to be passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator needs some clarification on that subject, I will read him the first part of the concurrent resolution. It reads as follows:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes; is authorized and directed to make the following changes in the bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the language which the Senator has read confirms exactly what I have already said. If we pass this bill in the form in which it is now before the Senate, and the enrolling clerks of the two Houses are authorized to change the bill, I undertake to say that what the Senator is trying to do by a concurrent resolution, not to be signed by the President of the United States, is to enact legislation, and to amend the bill which we are asked to pass.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, allow me to say——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I wish to complete the remainder of what I was about to say.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator is so mistaken in the first part of his statement that it seems to me unnecessary for him to complete what he was about to say.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, there may be some difference of opinion on that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this concurrent resolution is agreed to by both Houses and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is instructed to make these correctional changes, the changes will be in the bill when the President receives it just as though they had been made by an amendment on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. The fact still remains, Mr. President, that the bill will have been passed in the language in which we pass it. Then we will have adopted a concurrent resolution, not a joint resolution, which would go to the President, to amend the bill which, in the first instance, was passed. By adopting the concurrent resolution we will have adopted a measure which will simply direct the enrolling clerks of the two Houses to change what we ourselves have passed. That would be a clear effort to amend the bill without first having it enacted into law.

Mr. President, in the case of F. H. E. Oil Co. against Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, the court, in speaking on August 21, 1945——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's desire to discuss the legal question, but I did not yield to him for that purpose. However, if it will not take the Senator too long I will yield to him.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not believe that it will take very long, Mr. President.

The court passed on a resolution which the Members of the Senate will well remember was adopted by this body last year. It was House Concurrent Resolution No. 50, which was agreed to by the Senate on July 21, 1945. I read only a few sentences from the opinion of the court which may be found in 150 Federal, second series, at page 858:

> Resolution No. 50 adopted by the House of Representatives June 22, and agreed to by the Senate July 21, 1945, is urged as requiring a reconsideration. The resolution is not an act of Congress approved by the President or passed over his veto. It does not make law, or change the law made by a previous Congress and President. It does not alter the statutes as they existed when the taxes in controversy accrued. As an expression of opinion on a point of law it would of course be entitled to most respectful consideration by the courts, which under the Constitution exercise the judicial power, that is, the power to decide cases.

Mr. President, I will trespass only a minute longer on the Senator's time.

If we adopt the proposed plan of passing House bill 1362 we will then have passed a bill in the language of the bill which I now hold in my hand. When signed by the President it would become law, but in the interim if we adopt the concurrent resolution to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred, and it is then sent to the other House of Congress, the resolution will never go to the President for his signature. Thus, if we undertake in that manner to amend the law which we pass tonight, we will undertake to amend it through a document which will never receive the signature of the President of the United States. I believe that no attempt should be made to correct more than mere clerical errors. The adoption of the proposal which was submitted a few minutes ago by the Senator from Kentucky, and which is clearly invalid and void, would have one of two effects, namely, either the incorporation into the final bill of the concurrent resolution and thus make invalid by a species of spoliation the whole bill, or the adoption of the concurrent resolution would itself be void, and the bill would stand as passed tonight. So my objection to the concurrent resolution is based on law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not yield any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say, in regard to the expostulation of the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I object to the word "expostulation." I have a right to express myself on the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is talking——

Mr. DONNELL. I object to the word "expostulation."

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, go on and object.

Mr. DONNELL. I am objecting now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not yielding any further to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator does not like the word "expostulation," which is a perfectly good English word, he has a right to object to it.

Mr. DONNELL. I object to any slighting language.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is expostulating, and when anybody expostulates he is indulging in expostulation.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senator from Missouri entirely misconceives the object of the concurrent resolution. I am not so inexperienced as to think that Congress by concurrent resolution can enact a law that is a law that would require the signature of the President of the United States. Frequently we pass concurrent resolutions which have to be adopted by both Houses, directing the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of a bill, to make certain corrections in the bill, and those corrections are embodied in the bill. If the President approves it they are just as much a part of it as if they had been originally written into it.

In this case, if the bill has passed both Houses, and the concurrent resolution should not pass the two Houses, and the President signed the bill, the concurrent resolution would be dead, and it would not be part of the bill signed by the President. That is perfectly simple, and there is no argument about it.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. MURDOCK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going to yield until I read this concurrent resolution into the RECORD. Inasmuch as objection is made to its presentation, I shall read it:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the railroad retirement acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, is authorized and directed to make the following changes in the bill:

On page 34, in lines 7, 10, and 16, change "Social Security Board" to "Federal Security Administrator"; and in line 23, strike out "either board" and substitute therefor "the Board or the Federal Security Administrator."

On page 25, in line 2, strike out "board which" and substitute therefor "Board or the Federal Security Administrator, whichever"; and in line 25, change "1946" to "1947."

On page 38, line 11, change "1947" to "1948."

On page 51, line 3, after "Sec. 318." insert "(a)."

On page 51, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following:

"'(h) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to any tax imposed by section 1800 or 2700 of the Internal Revenue Code, and the provisions of section 3661 of such code, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be applicable with respect to the contributions required by this act: Provided, That all authority and functions conferred by or pursuant to such provisions upon any officer or employee of the United States, except the authority to institute and prosecute, and the function of instituting and prosecuting, criminal proceedings, shall, with respect to such contributions, be vested in and exercised by the Board or such officers and employees of the Board as it may designate therefor.'"

On page 57, lines 7, 10, 11, 16 and 20, change "1946" to "1947"; in line 15, strike out "sections" and substitute therefor the following: "Section 806 shall become effective on July 1, 1946, and sections"; in line 16, strike out "306"; and in lines 18 and 19, strike out "July 1, 1945" and insert in lieu therof "on the date of enactment of this act."

On page 58, lines 11 and 19, change "1946" to "1947"; and in line 20, "1947" to "1948."

On page 59, lines 2, 4, and 20, change "1946" to "1947."

On page 60, line 15, change "1945" to "1946"; and "1946" to "1947."

On page 60, after line 20, insert the following new section:

"'(9) Service performed by an individual as an employee or employee representative as defined in section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937.'"

On page 6, line 2, after "power", insert a semicolon and the following: "or (v) other than a carrier subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, by reason of its being engaged in manufacturing, harvesting, storing, distributing, selling, or delivering refrigeration or ice to or into equipment used for refrigeration purposes in connection with the transportation of passengers or property; or (vi) engaged in the warehouse business if such person is not owned or controlled by a carrier subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act; or (vii) engaged in the transportation of property by motor vehicle if such person is not owned or controlled by a carrier subject to part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act."

Mr. President, that is the end of the concurrent resolution.

I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, first may I compliment the Senator on his reading of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. I am sorry I had to do it.

Mr. WHITE. Then may I call attention to the fact that yesterday we sat for more than 12 hours——

Mr. BARKLEY. I am just getting ready to move a recess.

Mr. WHITE. We have already been in session today more than 10 hours.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I hope that it will suit the Senator to take a recess now.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I had not been compelled to read this concurrent resolution, we would have been on our way home now.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In presenting this curious method of legislation, which I never heard of before, does the Senator claim that a concurrent resolution of this character can be passed by a majority of the Senate, or does it require unanimous consent?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it can be passed by a majority of both Houses. It is an instruction to the Clerk of the House, where the bill originated, that in the enrollment of the bill these changes shall be made. We have done it frequently, not so extensively, perhaps.

Mr. TAFT. I never heard of it being done except by unanimous consent. Certainly I should object to this method of legislation. It seems to me to set a very strange precedent.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have done it by majority vote, during the time I have been in the Senate. Frequently it is done by unanimous consent. No one ever objected before that I ever heard of, but any Senator has a right to object to anything.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and printed and lie on the table.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I send to the desk a second amendment to be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that when we had under consideration the Export-Import Bank bill, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Philippine Islands should be included in the bill. They were not included. A concurrent resolution was submitted and adopted by the Senate and sent to the House. I do not remember whether it was agreed to by the House. But I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri, if the Senator from Kentucky will indulge me, to the fact that, as he will remember, I objected very strenuously, and argued, or expostulated, whichever is the right term, to the effect that the Congress could not by concurrent resolution amend a law nor could it, as was attempted by Concurrent Resolution 50, amend or modify a decision of the court. But here we have a concurrent resolution being used for a purpose which in my opinion is a very appropriate and proper purpose, and I think that I have studied the concurrent resolution and its functions about as thoroughly as any Senator I know of. I know that I have expostulated on the floor of the Senate about it more than almost any other Senator has. Now all we do here, as I see it, is to instruct the enrolling clerk of the House to do what both Houses of the Congress want to have done. It will be placed in the bill before it ever goes to the President, so we do not, as the Senator from Missouri has endeavored to point out, attempt to legislate by concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the reference of the Senator from Utah to the situation which existed when the Senator from Maryland submitted the concurrent resolution instructing the enrolling clerk to include in the bill the Philippine Islands, which had not been included in either House. I do not recall whether it was done, but I think it was. And when the bill went to the President it carried in it the Philippine Islands just as though it had been in the bill when it was introduced.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator sees any difference in what is now being attempted to do by employment of a concurrent resolution, and what was done in the case the Senator from Utah speaks of?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no difference in principle, of course.

Mr. DONNELL. With respect to the matter of the Philippine Islands, does the Senator recall whether it was obviously the intention that the Philippine Islands should be included?

Mr. BARKLEY. It had not been thought of.

Mr. DONNELL. It had not been thought of?

Mr. BARKLEY. It had not been thought of by either House, and the Senator from Maryland called attention to it after the bill had passed the Senate, and it was agreed that it ought to have been included, and was included by concurrent resolution, and by direction to the enrolling clerk to include it in the bill.

Mr. DONNELL. And was it not on the theory that it was an obvious error ever to have left it out; or was that the theory?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the inclusion of the Philippine Islands was in the nature of an afterthought, and it was thought wise to include them, and it was done by concurrent resolution.

The object of this concurrent resolution is to clarify, so far as these dates are concerned, what is an obvious clerical mistake, because the bill was introduced early in 1945, and carried dates which were then appropriate, but when the bill was passed by the House all amendments were rejected, so it carried these original dates. Obviously, they ought to be corrected.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator be kind enough to state whether he thinks correction is necessary with respect to other portions of the bill which the Senator mentioned, provisions which go beyond the matter of mere correction of an oversight or the mere inclusion of an afterthought or the mere correction of an inadvertent omission?

Mr. BARKLEY. No, I do not think that these corrections are necessary so far as the law itself is concerned, but in view of the fact that the scarecrow has been erected in the watermelon patch which would shoo some people away, it seems obvious that the corrections might well be made in order to assure them that the law is not intended to cover them. That is all it is intended to do.

Mr. DONNELL. If it is contemplated to submit a concurrent resolution which would require the assent of the other House of Congress, why cannot the same identical material be offered to the bill itself and included in the regular order, in the regular way, rather than to have the Senate pass a bill and then rely on the possibility of the other House of Congress agreeing to something that many of us would like to have in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have explained that so often that I am sure the Senator from Missouri understands it. It can be offered in the regular way. Every one of these amendments or suggestions contained in the concurrent resolution, can be offered as amendments to the bill and the Senate can adopt them. There is no doubt about that if a majority of the Senate see fit to do so. But in doing so we render it impossible to complete the legislation at this session, in my judgment; and in this manner, by concurrent resolution, we escape that danger.

Mr. DONNELL. Of course if the Senator please, if we adopt the plan which the Senator proposes we will pass a statute and be bound by it and take our chances as to whether the House of Representatives shall agree to what many of us would like to have in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are not bound by it unless it becomes a part of the statute, and it would not become a part of the statute unless both Houses agreed to it, and in the enrollment of the bill it would be included in the bill before it ever left the Congress to go to the President of the United States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator stated that the correction of the dates is obviously a correction of a clerical mistake. How can we correct a clerical mistake before a mistake is made? If we pass a bill there is no clerical mistake involved in what we pass.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would expect that sort of an argument to be made by a pettyfogging lawyer before a justice of the peace, but I would not expect it from the great Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. When the Senator says that we must correct a clerical error before the error is made, it seems perfectly obvious that that is talking nonsense.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not proposed to adopt this concurrent resolution until we pass the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Before we arrange to make the mistake.

Mr. DONNELL. Then it is proposed to correct the mistake which we shall make subsequently.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan and then I am not going to yield to any other Senator.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely want to ask a question in relation to the concurrent resolution. Do I correctly understand that if we pass the bill as it is, and agree to the concurrent resolution, the House will not have to concur in the bill itself, because they have already passed it? But if the House should fail to agree to the concurrent resolution will the bill go to the President just as it is without the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the bill is passed by the Senate in the form in which it has come to it from the House, and in the form in which it is presented here now, and no concurrent resolution making these corrections is agreed to by both Houses, the bill would go to the President in exactly the form in which it is now.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, but if the House agrees to the concurrent resolution, then it would become part of the bill, and the bill would go to the President with the corrections that are proposed in the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely, and they would become a part of the bill, just as if they had been included in the bill originally without any concurrent resolution.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have already disposed of the Executive Calendar. It is obvious that we cannot conclude the bill this evening.

NOMINATION OF MAJ. GEN. ROBERT S. BEIGHTLER TO BE BRIGADIER GENERAL OF THE LINE IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. HUFFMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HUFFMAN. I should like to address the Senate for a few moments on a subject apart from the pending legislation.

Mr. President, the Senate has today received from the President of the United States the nomination of Maj. Gen. Robert S. Beightler to become a brigadier general of the line in the Regular Army.

This nomination requires special legislation because Maj. Gen. Robert S. Beightler is not a Regular Army officer. In fact, he is the only National Guard officer who commanded a division throughout World War II.

It gives me distinct pleasure to rise to pay tribute to General Beightler for his outstanding service in two world wars, and especially for his distinguished service as commander of the Thirty-seventh Infantry Division in the Pacific. This is the Buckeye Division and all Ohioans are proud of its heroic accomplishments — accomplishments which were made possible through the leadership that the division enjoyed, as well as through the courage and patriotic devotion of the men he led.

Mr. President, it has been my privilege to know General Beightler for more than a quarter of a century. Many years ago when I was executive secretary to the Governor of Ohio, Bob Beightler was an efficient engineer in the State highway department. He later served as director of highways for the State of Ohio. He has always been an outstanding figure whether serving in civil or military affairs. He has grown in stature with the years and I am glad to see him receive this recognition. On October 18, 1945, Gen. Jacob L. Devers, commanding general of the Army Ground Forces in the Pacific, said of his division:

> Soldiers of the Thirty-seventh Infantry Division—and there are none more heroic—are deserving of the hearty congratulations of a grateful Nation. Their valor, combined with sacrifice and a strong devotion to duty, did much to break a fanatical enemy's stranglehold on peace-loving nations in the Asiatic-Pacific area and stamp out the threat to our cherished American way of life. The distinguished role played by the Buckeye Division in carving our glorious victory is already history.

Indeed, words are inadequate to express the tributes and praises which are due to General Beightler and his division. America is grateful. It will not forget.

Under the command of General Beightler, the Thirty-seventh Division, in 592 days of combat, killed 33,590 Japanese and took 2,161 prisoners of war. This was a remarkable feat, considering the fact that the Japanese were taught never to surrender. In fact, they did not know the term "surrender." The glorious victories of the Thirty-seventh were won on New Georgia, Bougainville, and Luzon, where, beneath the palms of those far-away islands, sleep hundreds of the heroes of the division in soil hallowed by their patriotic efforts.

The spirit, confidence, and determination of the leader of the Thirty-seventh Division were reflected throughout its ranks. The steadfast loyalty of the men of the Thirty-seventh reflected their belief in the general they followed. This was a combination that did not know the meaning of defeat. It pressed ever forward to victory.

So, Mr. President, it is with pardonable pride and pleasure that I recommend to the Senate the speedy enactment of special legislation which will make General Beightler a brigadier general of the line in the Regular Army. I know of no more fitting recognition for the unusual and brilliant record of an outstanding soldier.

I send to the desk a bill which I ask to have appropriately referred.

There being no objection the bill (S. 2480) authorizing the appointment of Robert Sprague Beightler as permanent brigadier general of the line of the Regular Army, introduced by Mr. HUFFMAN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1946

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Lord and Master of us all, grant that in the midst of the strain and stress of our days we may have a vivid assurance of Thy sovereignty, not as an arbitrary power, but as the guiding intelligence whose wisdom never errs and the overruling Father whose thoughts concerning us are those of love and peace.

We humbly confess that we try to plan wisely and labor conscientiously, and yet how feeble our human wisdom and how fruitless all our efforts! May we respond more earnestly and eagerly to the leading of Thy spirit as Thou dost seek to instill within us a sense of what Thou wouldst have us do.

Emancipate us from weakness and weariness, from doubt and despair, from impatience and timidity as we are challenged to give life and all its experiences a more valiant reading.

Help us enter into a deeper and more joyous fellowship with Thee and with all mankind by making a daring trial of those cardinal virtues of trust, obedience, and fidelity, and those lofty principles of justice, righteousness, and good will which Thou hast ordained.

Make us one with Thee and our fellow men in the spirit of the Christ in whose name we offer our prayers. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Gatling, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1253) entitled "An act to enable debtor railroad corporations expeditiously to effectuate reorganizations of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WHEELER, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. REED, and Mr. MOORE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Res. 371) entitled "An act extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4051) entitled "An act to grant to enlisted personnel of the armed forces certain benefits in lieu of accumulated leave," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. HILL, Mr. GUFFEY, and Mr. REVERCOMB to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

KARL E. BOND

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 783) for the relief of Karl E. Bond, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two newspaper items.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a brief article by Mr. Horace Fisher Fuller, Jr.

[Mr. BALDWIN of New York addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION WILL REDUCE FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a Republican-controlled House of Representatives next year will reduce Federal expenditures below $32,000,000,000 for the fiscal year following its election, will balance the budget, and provide a surplus to be applied on the reduction of the national debt.

Total expenditures during the current fiscal year have been estimated at $42,000,000,000 by Government economists and at $47,400,000,000 by Senator TAFT. This means a deficit of $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000.

It is futile for the Democratic Party, which has become the pliant servant of Federal bureaucrats, to promise much-needed reductions in Government spending. A Republican controlled House would be under no obligation to the personnel in Federal departments and bureaus and would consider all appropriation bills with the interest of the country as a whole in mind. It will be the definite purpose of Republicans on the appropriation committee and in charge of the legislative machinery of the House to dismantle this vast Government machine built up by the New Deal in the thirties and overexpanded during the war years.

It will be history repeating itself. After the First World War, the country turned from the Democratic Party to the Republicans. The Republicans dismantled the war government, balanced the budget, reduced taxes three times, and had surpluses of $10,000,000,000 to apply on the national debt. The pattern of what is ahead of us in 1947 and 1948 is identical. Governor Dewey's famous slogan "Time for a change" is most appropriate.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide benefits for the injury, disability, death, or enemy detention of employees of contractors with the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 2, 1942 (42 U. "SEC. 4B. Any civilian member of the teaching staffs to whom this act applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 5 years, and who, before becoming eligible for retirement under the conditions defined in the preceding sections hereof, becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service in his position, by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the civilian member of the teaching staffs, shall upon his own application or upon the request or order of the Secretary of the Navy be retired on an annuity computed in accordance with provisions of section 4A of this act. The annuity which the Government pays to a civilian teacher who is forced to retire under this section shall be the difference between his total annuity as computed under section 4A of this act and the immediate life annuity to which he is entitled at the time of such retirement under the annuity policy provided by the act. Every annuitant retired under the provisions of this section, unless the disability for which he was retired be permanent in character, shall at the expiration of 1 year from the date of such retirement and annually thereafter, until reaching retirement age as defined in section 3 hereof, be examined by a board of medical officers appointed by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy. If the annuitant is found to be sufficiently recovered for useful and efficient service in his position and if he is offered reemployment by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, the annuity being paid him by the Government shall cease immediately. If an annuitant who has been retired under the provisions of this section is subsequently reemployed by the Government, the annuity being paid to him by the Government shall be terminated. If the annuitant is reemployed as a civilian teacher at the Naval Academy, the annuity which the Government will pay him at the time of subsequent retirement shall be the difference between the total annuity, computed under section 4A of this act, and the immediate life annuity which the total premiums, paid on his annuity contracts provided by this act, would purchase. No person shall be entitled to receive an annuity under the provisions of this act, and compensation under the provisions of the act of September 7, 1916, entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes,' covering the same period of time; but this provision shall not bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either act for any part of the same period.

"SEC. 4C. Any civilian member of the teaching staffs retiring under the provisions of this act, as amended, may at the time of his retirement elect to receive in lieu of the life annuity to be paid by the Secretary of the Navy under the provisions of this act a reduced annuity payable to him during his life, and an annuity after his death payable to his beneficiary, duly designated in writing and filed with the Secretary of the Navy at the time of retirement, during the life of such beneficiary (a) equal to or (b) 50 percent of such reduced annuity and upon the death of such surviving beneficiary all payments shall cease and no further annuities shall be due or payable. The amounts of these two annuities shall be such that their combined actuarial value on the date of retirement as determined under the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act shall be the same as the actuarial value of the single life annuity provided by this act."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where work, supplies, or services have been furnished between December 7, 1941, and August 14, 1945, under a contract or subcontract, for any department or agency of the Government which prior to the latter date was authorized to enter into contracts and amendments or modifications of contracts under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941 (50 U. S. C., Supp. IV, app., sec. 611), such departments and agencies are hereby authorized, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President within 60 days after the date of approval of this act, to consider, adjust, and settle equitable claims of contractors, including subcontractors and materialmen performing work or furnishing supplies or services to the contractor or another subcontractor, for losses (not including diminution of anticipated profits) incurred between December 7, 1941, and August 14, 1945, without fault or negligence on their part in the performance of such contracts or subcontracts. Settlement of such claims shall be made or approved in each case by the head of the department or agency concerned or by a central authority therein designated by such head.

SEC. 2. (a) In arriving at a fair and equitable settlement of claims under this act, the respective departments and agencies shall not allow any amount in excess of the amount of the net loss (less the amount of any relief granted subsequent to the establishment of such loss) on all contracts and subcontracts held by the claimant under which work, supplies, or services were furnished for the Government between December 7, 1941, and August 14, 1945, and shall consider with respect to such contracts and subcontracts (1) action taken under the Renegotiation Act (50 U. S. C., Supp. IV, app., sec. 1191), the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 (41 U. S. C., Supp. IV, sec. 101–125), or similar legislation; (2) relief granted under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941, or otherwise; and (3) relief proposed to be granted by any other department or agency under this act. Wherever a department or agency considering a claim under this act finds that losses under any such contract or subcontract affected the computation of the amount of excessive profits determined in a renegotiation agreement or order, and to the extent that the department or agency finds such amount was thereby reduced, claims for such losses shall not be allowed under this act.

(b) Every claimant under this act shall furnish to the department or agency concerned any evidence within the possession of such claimant bearing upon the matters referred to in subsection (a) of this section.

SEC. 3. Claims for losses shall not be considered unless filed with the department or agency concerned within 6 months after the date of approval of this act, and shall be limited to losses with respect to which a written request for relief was filed with such department or agency on or before August 14, 1945, but a previous settlement under the First War Powers Act, 1941, or the Contract Settlement Act of 1944 shall not operate to preclude further relief otherwise allowable under this act.

SEC. 4. Appropriations or funds available for work, supplies, or services of the character involved in the respective claims at the time of settlement thereof shall be available for payment of the settlements: Provided, That where no such appropriations are available, appropriations for payment of such settlements are hereby authorized.

SEC. 5. Each department and agency shall report to the Congress quarterly the name of each claimant to whom relief has been granted under this act, together with the amount of such relief and a brief statement of the facts and the administrative decision.

SEC. 6. Whenever any claimant under this act is dissatisfied with the action of a department or agency of the Government in either granting or denying his claim, such claimant shall have the right within 6 months to file a petition with any Federal district court of competent jurisdiction, asking a determination by the court of the equities involved in such claim, and upon the filing of such a petition, the court, sitting as a court of equity, shall have jurisdiction to determine the amount, if any, to which such claimant and petitioner may be equitably entitled (not exceeding the amount which might have been allowed by the department or agency concerned under the terms of this act) and to enter an order directing such department or agency to settle the claim in accordance with the finding of the court; and thereafter either party may appeal from the decision of the court as in other equity cases.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR USE AND BENEFIT OF STATE PUBLIC EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7038) to provide for the sale of certain public lands in the States for the use and benefit of the State public educational institutions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Land Management, shall, as soon as possible, advertise for sale all of the lands presently leased under section 15 of the Taylor Grazing Act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1275), as amended (49 Stat. 1978; 43 U. S. C., sec. 315m), which the Secretary finds are in isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of 2,560 acres or less, and are unsuitable or undesirable for settlement under the homestead law or for any present or future Federal use or project. In the event that a tract or parcel subject to sale under this act is not sold pursuant to such offer, it shall be reoffered for sale at any subsequent time upon the application of any person. The word "person" as used in this act includes corporations, partnerships, and associations.

SEC. 2. Such land shall be sold to the highest bidder, but at not less than its appraised value, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, after at least 30 days' notice of the sale published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which such land is located. For a period of not less than 30 days after the time for presenting bids has expired, however, a preference right to purchase the offered land at the highest price bid or at twice the appraised value, whichever is lower, shall be given: First, to the person who is then the grazing lessee of the offered tract or tracts and who is also the owner of lands contiguous to or near said tract or tracts; and second, to the owners of contiguous land who do not qualify for a first preference. Where two or more persons apply to exercise the highest preference right claimed in a sale the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make an equitable division of the land among such applicants. In addition to the sales price the purchaser shall pay to the United States the cost of advertising for sale the tract or tracts purchased by him.

SEC. 3. In any case where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that the land to be offered for sale under this act in and by itself forms an economic unit, it shall be first offered for sale only to persons who have served in the military or naval forces of the United States for a period of at least 90 days during World War II and who have been honorably discharged. The land shall be sold to the highest bidder among such persons, but at not less than its appraised value as determined by the Secretary of the Interior. In addition to the sales price, the purchaser shall pay to the United States the cost of advertising for sale the tract or tracts purchased by him. The preferences stated in section 2 of this act shall not apply to sales under this section. If land offered for sale under this section is not sold, it shall thereafter be subject to sale under sections 1 and 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. Sales under this act may be made upon such terms of deferred payment as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and upon completion of payment the Secretary shall cause a patent to issue for the land sold.

SEC. 5. Any sale under this act shall be made subject to leases, easements, or other rights existing in or to the land at the date the land is offered for sale, but any rentals or other charges except those relating to the mineral rights retained by the United States, accruing after the patent has been issued, shall be paid to the purchaser or to his successors in interest. No sale shall defeat any valid right which has already attached to the land under any pending entry or location.

SEC. 6. Patents for any land purchased under this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of oil, gas, coal, and all other mineral deposits in the land, together with the right to prospect for, mine, remove, or lease the same.

SEC. 7. All moneys received for the sale of lands under this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and at the end of each fiscal year 90 percent of all such moneys except the amounts paid to cover the cost of advertising shall be remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which the lands for which such moneys were received are situated, to be expended for the use and benefit of the public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That the funds remitted to the State of Wyoming shall be used for the benefit of the University of Wyoming for either or both of the following purposes: Construction of permanent buildings for the university or for the retirement of indebtedness on existing permanent buildings.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 9, after the word "discharge", delete the period and insert a comma; also insert the following language: "and who will personally use the land or will use it to establish and maintain their own grazing enterprise."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION, SURVEY AND REVIEW REPORTS OF THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS

The Clerk called House Resolution 716, directing that the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors prepare a revised edition of a compilation of all preliminary examination and survey and review reports transmitted to Congress prior to July 31, 1946.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, according to the report it has been customary to make a survey every 15 years. Under this bill it is to be made 10 years from the last report. I should like to know from some member of the committee why they want a change from the usual practice.

Mr. RANKIN. What bill is that?

Mr. KEAN. For the compilation of a preliminary examination, survey, and review reports for the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that the letter from the War Department, which is in the report, explains the situation fairly well. General Wheeler states in that letter the following:

Since this compilation was published, a considerable number of additional reports has been transmitted to Congress, and, therefore, the listing in this document is now largely incomplete.

The publication of an up-to-date compilation of all such reports similar in general form to that printed on pages 1–369 of the above-mentioned document would be valuable for reference purposes and convenient for Members of Congress and others concerned with studies of rivers and harbors for navigation and flood control as authorized by Congress. Accordingly, it is recommended that an up-to-date listing of all preliminary examination and survey and review reports be printed as a House document at this time.

Mr. KEAN. In the past it has been done only every 15 years. Why do they want to change the practice to 10 years?

Mr. RANKIN. Simply because a great deal of this activity has been carried on in the last 10 years.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman mean that the Army engineers have been so busy during the war that they have done more work of this sort than they did before the war?

Mr. RANKIN. We did not get into the war until 1941.

Mr. KEAN. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. That was 5 years after the last report was made, and during that time a large number of these investigations were authorized and carried on. A great many of them are being carried on at the present time. I believe the gentleman from New Jersey will find that General Wheeler is right in asking for this compilation at this time, and I hope he will not object.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman know approximately how much it will cost the Government to make this compilation? Is it a large sum of money?

Mr. RANKIN. I doubt if it costs very much.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman think it would be establishing a precedent to provide for the publication every 10 years instead of 15?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know about that.

Mr. KEAN. In other words, in the past it has been done only once in 15 years.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know whether it would establish a precedent; it would depend upon conditions in the future, as to whether the practical thing in the situation might be to publish them more frequently.

Mr. KEAN. It certainly would be a convenience to the Members of Congress; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with that statement.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, created under section 3 of the River and Harbor Act, approved June 13, 1902, be, and is hereby, requested to prepare a revised edition of pages 1 to 369 of House Document No. 106, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, being a compilation of all preliminary examination and survey and review reports transmitted to Congress prior to July 31, 1946.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, only to point out that the committee report does not comply with the rules of the House by showing wherein this bill amends existing law. It is only because of the urgency of the law and the imminence of adjournment that we waive the requirement that they comply with the rules, and I bring this up now so that the committee staff may take notice of it and realize their oversight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment. It is repetition and is simply a typographical error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1946

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 717 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2177) to provide for increased efficiency in the legislative branch of the Government, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MONRONEY, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MICHENER, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order as a substitute for the bill the provisions contained in the committee print of July 20, 1946, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 19, 1946, page 9496, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the five-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order S. 2177, commonly known as the congressional reorganization bill. The time for general debate is 2 hours. Under the rule the time is to be equally divided between the majority and minority members of the select committee who, for over a year, have been working so arduously on this subject. It waives points of order.

We had to have a rather unusual rule on this matter. It makes in order as a substitute for the Senate bill the bill which has been devised by the House members of the select committee. There is also a provision in this resolution that the substitute bill may be treated as an original bill in order that after it is substituted it will be in order in the House to obtain a separate vote on any amendment which may be adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The rules waives all points of order, due to the fact that the bill deals with a number of subjects, and so might be considered subject to a point of order unless that were done.

I may say to the House that I do not expect to consume much time on this side and I understand that it is not desired on the other side to consume very much time under the rule, in order that we may get down to general debate and try to dispose of this bill today. I do want to say while I have the floor, however, that I am supporting the rule and I am supporting the bill. I think this is a bill of tremendous importance to the Members and to the country at large. We have been operating here under machinery that has long since outgrown its usefulness and is outmoded. While all the provisions of this bill will not suit anybody, if you take the bill as a whole the good in it so much outweighs the bad, and the improvement of the machinery of Congress is so very important, that the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as has been explained to you by the gentleman from Virginia, this resolution, House Resolution 717, makes in order this special bill, to provide for increased efficiency in the legislative branch of the Government. The measure contains a number of amendments to the original bill which have been worked out by the committee to especially apply to the House of Representatives. The committee has eliminated, for instance, the provision that each House Member shall be furnished an $8,000 executive assistant, but has left the same provision in the Senate portion of the bill.

This bill which comes before us is a very much needed piece of legislation if we are to make the legislative branch of the Government more efficient and more effective.

At the proper time, as I stated in the Committee on Rules, I expect to offer an amendment to section 601 which you will find on page 93 of the bill. My amendment will provide for a reduction of the congressional rate of pay from $15,000 to $12,000 per year, and will contain an additional paragraph which will provide for the payment of an expense allowance of $3,000 per annum to assist each legislator in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall incur or accounting be made, and that such sum is to be paid in equal monthly installments. This amendment is a very simple one. Yet I think it is one that should prevail in connection with this important legislation. The amendment fixes the annual salary $12,000 instead of $15,000, and makes absolutely legal, without question, the authority needed for the payment of $3,000 a year to each Member to assist in the defraying of his expenses in connection with his official duties. We debated and argued on this floor, some time ago, the whole problem or question of whether a Member of Congress should be the only public official anywhere in America who is required to pay his own official expenses out of his salary. The Congress, by its action some time ago on an appropriation bill, did come to the proper conclusion that, after all, a Member of Congress is just as much entitled to be reimbursed for his expenditures in connection with his official work as any public official, or as any individual engaged in private business or professional activities. I do not want to see this bill enacted as it is presented because the American people will believe we have raised our salaries by 50 percent. Actually, we would not be doing so, for under this original bill we would be required to take care of our expenses out of the $15,000 salary. In any event I doubt we can justify such a salary increase. Instead, I think we can justify an increase of 20 percent. I think we are entitled to that, and probably more. We can justify the 20 percent increase because it is in line with the present wage policy of the administration, a similar pay increase has been granted in industry everywhere. We have also allowed the same sort of an increase for Federal employees. Certainly we can justify, without question, that we are entitled to reimbursement for the money which we pay out of our own pockets for expenses incurred in connection with our official work.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. We all will recall that when the $2,500 expense item was enacted into law some Members were apprehensive about public reaction. There has been no public reaction about it except a favorable reaction.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. May I say to the gentleman, of course, my amendment eliminates that $2,500 expense payment and substitutes a $3,000 payment, or $250 a month, to take care of our official expenses. If you pass the bill with a $15,000 salary provision and no expense allowance, in actuality you will be receiving no more money than you are now. But the people will believe, that is, the average citizen will believe, you are getting a huge increase in salary, and that you are also receiving your expenses. They know it is the usual thing for all workers, including public officials, to be reimbursed for official expenses, and would rightfully presume Members of Congress were being reimbursed for their expenses.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MASON. In fact, if you have a little outside income in addition to your salary, you would be getting less than you are getting now.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes. If you figure out the amounts one would have to pay under our tax laws, you will find that is true.

This amendment I suggest will eliminate all question as to the legality of such an expense account. I believe the American people generally appreciate that any person employed in any business or public position is entitled to receive his expenses before there is any talk about what salary he shall be paid. That is just common sense. However, if this bill becomes law as introduced I know my constituents will think I am increasing my own salary by 50 percent, while increasing the pay of others only 20 percent, when, in fact, we will not actually be increasing our salary at all. However, we will receive all the blame for doing so, just the same.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman plans to offer an amendment to increase the expense allowance by $500, making it a total of $3,000?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Does that in any way affect the mileage allowance?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. The mileage allowance does not mean anything to most Members anyway. The fact is the mileage allowance does not cover one-tenth of the expense most of us have in connection with our travel.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Does your amendment have anything to do with fixing the situs of residence of Member of Congress?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No. Nothing at all.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Would the gentleman have any objection to including such an amendment?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think that could be done, but I would not want my amendment confused by that issue, because the issue as to whether a Member of Congress is to be recompensed for his official expenses is fundamental, according to my view.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2177) to provide for increased efficiency in the legislative branch of the Government.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2177, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] is recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is recognized for 1 hour.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes to the House of Representatives as the end result of more than 18 months' work of the joint committee of the House and the Senate on the reorganization of Congress.

The bill represents no individual views and no individual authorship. It is a combination, a compilation, of the very best testimony, the very best evidence that your Special Committee on Reorganization of the Congress could acquire in more than 5 months of hearings in which over 102 witnesses were heard.

SIXTY MEMBERS TESTIFIED

More than 60 Members of Congress appeared to testify on various phases to inform your Committee on what in their considered judgment based on experience were the defects of our legislative system and things which needed improvement.

Senate bill 2177 is being amended by substitution of a committee print agreed to by the House Members of the Committee on the Reorganization of Congress.

There is only one primary purpose considered in this bill. It is nonpolitical in its approach. It deals not with any ideologies or anything except the functional reorganization of the Congress.

ONE TEST ALONE

One test and one test alone has been applied to every suggestion that has been incorporated in the bill in the committee's recommendation and that is simply this question: "Will it help the Congress to do a better job?"

Every Member sitting before me knows that the work load of the Congress has increased by geometric proportions through the several years just passed.

This is the trend: In the last few months we have had legislation on the atomic bomb, we have had legislation on OPA dealing with the economy of $140,000,000,000 annual business, with the draft extension, with the problems of the United Nations organization, with UNRRA, with the disposal of many billions of surplus property, of finding housing for 15,000,000 veterans, dealing with the problems of the veterans in the postwar period, and also the grave problems of how to handle a $265,000,000,000 public debt and keep this Nation afloat with that debt load, the greatest any nation has ever carried.

MUST EQUIP OURSELVES

I believe anyone will say that we simply cannot struggle along under this type of work load unless we equip ourselves to answer the challenge that the Constitution framers intended the Congress to carry. They talk of the giants of the past, the men who once walked these Halls back in the 1850's and 1870's; but, Mr. Chairman, they were not dealing with the complex problems that we are dealing with in this Congress.

Most of the Congresses in those past years had three important bills before them. Usually they would meet and decide which cities and towns needed new post offices, which rivers and harbors had to be deepened and improved, and then if the Republicans were in power they might tinker with the tariff a little bit. That in general was much of the work load of the Congresses that once sat in this Hall.

TOOLS HOPELESSLY OBSOLETE

Today we are confronted and confounded by the problems of a $35,000,000,000 government trying to do the job with tools so absolutely obsolete and antiquated that 435 saints could not possibly do with our present equipment and organization.

Yes; reform is long overdue, it is overdue in many ways. We are using the tools of the gay nineties and, Mr. Chairman, you might as well try to repair a B–29 airplane with a monkey wrench as to try to work on the problems that confront the Congress today with the obsolete tools we have to work with.

Mr. Chairman, we are sitting before this country today serving as the board of directors of the world's largest enterprise. It is a hundred times larger than General Motors, Ford Motor Co., A. T. & T., the Pennsylvania Railroad System, and General Electric all rolled into one. Yet we are trying to do this work sitting on an old-fashioned high bookkeeper's stool with a slant-top desk, a Civil War ledger, and a quill pen. Unless we get new techniques, the tools, the organization, we simply cannot handle the work load that the country expects us to carry.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think that a reactionary provision which requires a legislative budget to be put through which could not be put through under the machinery set up here before the 1st of April and would not allow the Appropriations Committee to function is a forward-moving step or is it one that really should be thrown out? I am wondering if the gentleman believes that a step forward is the way to progress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In the first place, the gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken in his dates; secondly, it can come within the flexibility of the provisions that have been written herein, and third, it has the endorsement of men like the former Secretary of the Treasury, the present Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, Dr. Fairchild of Yale University, fiscal adviser to the United States Chamber of Commerce, and a great many others. I would not say that it is reactionary or that it is particularly difficult or insuperable.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for that contribution.

LAST BASTION OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. Chairman, we in America and we in Congress are the last firm bastions of democracy. All around the rest of the world, with the exception of England, the parliamentary system of representative government has disintegrated and disappeared. If we fail here, we fail the world which looks to us to make democracy work.

The framers of our Constitution intended the Congress to be coequal. In the small agricultural economy that we had for over a century, the Congress was able without improved staffs, without increasing our facilities, to rely only on the judgment that the Members of the Congress had themselves, without research or without data and careful investigation and analysis, to largely answer the questions that then came up.

CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY

We cannot be coequal; we cannot do this fundamental task of supervision that the framers of the Constitution had in mind unless the Congress is virile, strong enough and well equipped enough to handle this magnitude of work that is dumped on us.

Five hundred and thirty-one men that compose the membership of the House and Senate are going to have a pretty hard time in handling, in supervising, in surveying the work of over 3,000,000 men scattered throughout the executive department. It is like trying to move a battleship with a jeep or a model T Ford.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I want to ask a question about the disposition of court claims as provided in title IV. As I understand it, the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims are abolished and provision is made that all claims accruing after January 1, 1945, may be settled by the administrative agencies if they are less than $1,000 or may be the subject of court action if they are more than $1,000. My question is, What happens to those claims accruing before January 1, 1945, under this procedure?

Mr. MONRONEY. Under this procedure those bills would still be admissible in the Congress. There is provision in the Senate bill which will be adjusted in conference, making it possible to consider bills only for permitting court action on arising from 1939 to 1945.

That is a difference we will have to adjust; but in this claims section every time we have closed the door of admittance of a claim on the floor of Congress we have opened up another door in the administrative departments or in the courts of the land so that those claims can be adequately adjudicated. Therefore, there will be no claims blocked.

Either they have a right to come up on the floor of the House or to come before the Congress or they can go into the courts.

Mr. HOPE. Well, under the legislation then what committee would have jurisdiction of the residue claims?

Mr. MONRONEY. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would direct the attention of my friend from Kansas to section 123 on page 46, which has a residuary clause. In the case of claims of a foreign nature they go to the Foreign Affairs Committee and all other claims would go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman. That answers the question.

CORNERSTONE OF PLAN

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, the cornerstone and keystone of this reorganization is in the recognition of the fact that the committee structure of this Congress has so grown in importance that the committees actually comprise little congresses of the Congress.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would like to have the matter clarified with reference to tort claims. I understand if it is less than $1,000 the percentage for attorney fees does not apply.

Mr. MONRONEY. On tort claims?

Mr. HENDRICKS. But suppose you had a case involving $1,500. As I understand, the attorneys' fees amount to 10 percent.

Mr. MONRONEY. I think the attorneys' fees are 20 percent if suit is filed and 10 percent if adjudication is made by the department.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On $1,500, that would be $300. Does the gentleman think that a person with such a small claim is going to be able to get competent counsel to go into the Federal Court to represent him?

Mr. MONRONEY. This does not provide for a jury trial. It is heard before the judge sitting without a jury. I understand there will be some discussion later on changing the amount of attorneys' fees.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When a Member of Congress handles a case there are no attorneys' fees.

Mr. MONRONEY. Here 10 percent is allowed for attorneys' fees, for the claimants' attorney.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But we handle it quite adequately without attorneys' fees.

Mr. MONRONEY. But a general attorney has to dig up the facts and obtain affidavits for his clients, much as he would have to dig up evidence if the matter was heard before a Federal court.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My interest is in the client, in that he is not able to get an able attorney for that amount.

COMMITTEE SYSTEM IMPORTANT

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The first point I would like to particularly stress to the membership of the House is that in our operation of the Congress the committee system has become of paramount importance. Ninety-five percent of all the legislation that becomes law passes the Congress in the shape that it came from our committees. Therefore, if our committee work is sloppy, if it is bad, if it is inadequate, our legislation in 95 percent of the cases will be bad and inadequate as well.

It is on this vital and important point on which the keystone of reorganization rests. If you are not willing to reorganize this overlapping crazyquilt pattern of committee structure, then just do not try to do any reorganizing, because it is the basis and the keystone of this reorganization bill.

You cannot continue to operate in the year 1945 with committees that just grew like Topsy from the beginning of this Nation. We have got to reorganize their functions and realine them, so that the members of the committees will have a chance to specialize on one major committee and have the time to devote to it.

We have now 970 committee seats filled by the Members of this House. That is 2.2 seats per Member on an average. Many men have five, six, and seven committees. It is impossible for them to specialize and do the kind of a job that is necessary. Fortunately, in the House we have a large number of major committees that are of great importance in handling the major part of the legislation.

REDUCES FROM 48 TO 19

So the committee has recommended and in the bill we provide that basically our committee structure shall all be composed of major committees. We are indebted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] for the contribution of the committee reorganization; a man who has served both in the Senate and the House, who thoroughly understands from a practical standpoint the importance of this thing, and I believe whose judgment can be greatly relied on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. I should like to have the gentleman point out what advantages there are in the consolidation which will result in a large committee having quite extensive jurisdiction and which, in order to function, must inevitably break down into subcommittees. I would like to have the gentleman elaborate on that.

Mr. MONRONEY. I do not quite agree with the gentleman that they should all be broken down in subcommittees. Some committees will undoubtedly operate either temporarily or permanently through subcommittees; others will operate through full committees.

But you get away from the tremendous overload of one committee and the complete absence of any work on the part of many other committees. You will give a Member a chance to specialize on the line of work that he is interested in. He can become familiar in all respects with the legislation that he handles.

SURVEILLANCE BY COMMITTEES

Another very important reason for this consolidation is that we intend in this bill to provide for legislative surveys of the Government departments which operate under these reorganized committees. We want to try to keep them in line with the intent of Congress, to keep a continuing review, if you please, of these departments and agencies downtown over which the reorganized committees have jurisdiction.

We think that only half the job of a standing committee is finished when it passes the legislation. We feel that the other half should be in seeing how that legislation is carried out and seeing if the agencies are living up to the mandates of the Congress and living within the restrictions which we provide.

STAFFS FOR NEW COMMITTEES

I want to hurry on to touch on two or three other points. You could not possibly justify the staffing of all of our 48 committees with expert staffs for each.

We propose in this bill to provide for all of the 19 reorganized major committees to have 4 experts to be paid up to $8,000 a year. If the committees were not reorganized the cost of providing 4 experts each for 48 standing committees would be tremendous.

We provide for reducing these to 19 standing committees. We feel you will save more money for the country by properly staffing these reorganized committees, particularly the Subcommittees on Appropriations, with experts than by almost anything else in the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. The Constitution provides that each House will make its own rules of procedure. I wonder if there is any question as to the constitutionality of this legislation.

Mr. MONRONEY. That is a very important question. It was raised in the Senate, may I say to my distinguished chairman. The provisions of the Constitution are that each House shall be the judge of its own rules. It does not prohibit us from acting in concert with the Senate in the exercise of our rule-making powers. We are not touching the Senate rules, we are changing our rules. The Senate changes its rules at the same time.

At points where the two rules come together we must provide by joint legislation for their assimilation. The most distinguished lawyers on the other side proved conclusively in the debate that this is well within the constitutional limitation on the two Houses as to changing the rules. When we meet in January the House can wipe out everything we are doing today if it so desires.

Mr. SPENCE. In other words, you do not derogate any power from the House? The House still has the power to change its rules?

Mr. MONRONEY. The House has the power to change at any minute the authority it has.

LEGISLATIVE BUDGET PROVISIONS

Another subject of tremendous importance is the legislative budget provision. I feel that the adoption of this section will for the first time since the Civil War give the Congress an over-all viewpoint on its fiscal policy.

For years we have been operating our revenue-raising committees and our revenue-spending committees completely and apart from any relationship one with the other. You simply cannot have adequate budgetary control by such an inadequate procedure.

This section provides that these two committees of the House, and the two committees of the Senate, must consider the entire fiscal situation at the start of each session. They will then report to the Congress on a legislative budget. If the expenditures exceed the income, the Congress must authorize the creation of additional public debt for that year. If we are going to run into debt, I think we should be businessmen enough and have courage enough to do it for a certain amount and do it before we start to appropriate.

Today we start out without any idea of how much we will spend, or where the money is to come from. We wind up the year wondering how many billions we are in the red or in the black. Surely it is not asking too much to consider these two important things, income and outgo, together.

I am certain if the Congress adopts this budget section we will save many many times over the cost of this congressional reform.

COST IS $4,601,735

Careful studies have been made on the entire cost of this project, including all necessary expenses to the Government. While it is a considerable amount of money, I am certain that it will save many hundred times the annual cost in increased efficiency and in decreased expenditure of government. Often good auditors save many businesses far more than their salaries.

The total cost of the entire reorganization of Congress, including improvements in staff help, improved research in the Library of Congress, doubling of the Legislative Drafting Service, and all expenses, totals $4,601,735. This includes, I might add, the entire cost for the increase in Members salary at $15,000 a year as well as the full annual contribution of the Government to the congressional retirement plan.

A total of $4,601,735 is the complete annual cost of the reorganization. Does it run the cost of the Congress too high? As one of the three great divisions of government, I think we should put a yardstick against it and measure it against one of the smallest of all the governmental bureaus.

Take the Office of Indian Affairs, which supervises the business of the Nation's Indians. Their annual operating cost in 1945 was a total of $29,100,591. Under present operation, without reorganization, the Congress, including both House and Senate, salaries of all Members, their clerks, staffs, investigators, mileage—all legislative expense of both bodies totaled $16,325,790.

In other words, the Congress today is spending just under 52 percent of what it costs to operate the Office of Indian Affairs—just a little more than half as much for the entire Government job that Congress does.

With this new additional expense, we will run 72 percent of the cost of the Office of Indian Affairs. I think the country will feel we were wise in making this improvement, even if we do cost 72 percent of what it costs to manage the affairs of the Nation's Indians.

SYSTEM ON TRIAL IN WORLD

Gentlemen, representative democracy is on trial. We must make it work and make it work well. Around the world the lights of democracy have gone out. They burn here alone, bright enough to rekindle the fires of freedom and democracy. If we fail, we fail the world which looks to us for leadership in this perilous hour.

Remember, gentlemen, that in other countries overseas, where dictators have taken over, they took over when the legislative branches of those nations disintegrated and failed. Then, when their representative system proved incapable of properly handling the problems which faced them, the road to total power was easy.

The representative system is the best guardian of the people's liberty in the world. It can only be able to guard liberty where it is strong enough and well organized enough to carry the load that present day problems place upon them.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY], a member of the joint committee.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, the joint special committee of which I have the honor to be a member, which was created by your act has discharged its duty under your command and has brought to you a report now in the nature of a substitute bill. I think it should be understood by the Members that each and every member of this joint special committee does not necessarily endorse every recommendation which is included in the report or incorporated in this bill.

We have had a difficult task to perform. We worked over a year before we submitted our report. I suppose there were at least 50 Members of Congress who came before the committee with 50 different ideas as to what ought to be done. We sifted and we sorted and we finally got into the picture a composite of such ideas and recommendation as we thought under your command we should submit to you.

That is what is now before you in the nature of a bill. It is in your lap. It is your responsibility from now on. Congress should act. The time for talking has passed.

There is one thing which has been suggested which is so very true that we should bear it in mind. If we are going to make progress we must go ahead. Nothing we do is irreparable. It is true all progress is change, but not all change is progress. Everything we may do today is subject to change next January. We should not feel that the end of the world is coming when we adjourn. We should take our responsibilities seriously.

There are necessary changes to be made in order to enable the Congress of the United States to function properly, wisely, and expeditiously. Some of the methods which should be employed are incorporated in this bill.

The responsibility of handling the bill on the floor has been delegated by the House membership of the joint special committee to Representatives MONRONEY and DIRKSEN, who are well advised and competent to assume the responsibility we have placed upon them. Let me say as I conclude, for time is the essence today, it was made very clear to us throughout the tedious and lengthy hearings held that there are defects which should be corrected in order to organize Congress to meet modern situations and to equip it to perform adequately its main functions. This substitute bill for the one which passed the Senate meets some objections made to the Senate bill, and, generally speaking, it satisfies the leadership on both sides of the aisle.

It may be that when the bill becomes a law some of its features will work out to be impracticable and unworkable, nevertheless it certainly is a chart we may well follow till we strike any hidden reefs which do not appear thereon.

We certainly should have the courage of our convictions and pass this bill. The people demand it. The Congress should assume and discharge its responsibility.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to ask for any time to speak on the pending bill but recent events in connection with an extremely important phase of our legislative process—the codification of the laws—have impelled me to seek this opportunity to inform the Members about a serious aspect of those functions. When, as chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, I appeared before the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of Congress, I said that I was not there to plead for the continuation of that committee as a separate standing committee so long as the reorganization would insure the carrying on of the important functions of revision of the laws.

During the 8 years that I have been chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws we have engaged in the preparation of two editions of the United States Code, one edition of the District of Columbia Code and a total of 12 cumulative supplements to those codes. As the Members well know those codes contain all the general and permanent laws enacted by Congress and constitute prima facie evidence of the law. Without them the public would be at a complete loss readily to determine the present status of any of our laws. It has been our policy that making the laws understandable is as important as making the laws, and I feel very strongly that the Federal laws should attain the standard set by the majority of the 48 States and that we should have a code which would be legal evidence of the laws. It is not to the credit of the greatest lawmaking body in the world that it is far behind every State in the Union in this regard.

With this in mind we have prepared seven separate bills and are still engaged in the preparation of two others to enact into law certain titles of the United States Code, which will be legal evidence of all the laws in the respective titles. Five of these bills have been passed by the House of Representatives on three separate occasions, in 1941, 1943, and 1945. Last week this body also passed our bill (H. R. 2200) revising the criminal laws of the United States for the first time since 1909. Unfortunately, these bills have never been reported out of the standing committee of the other body to which they were referred. As a result, the laborious and important work of codification and revision has been nullified because the standing committee of the other body to which the bills were referred has been too busy with its regular matters to give adequate consideration to these bills. I intend no reflection on either the ability or the industry of the members of that committee. They are just too busy with their regular assignments to permit them to consider these bills, and I can understand and sympathize with their situation.

However, the fact that five codification bills, which were reported from the House Committee on the Revision of the Laws and which passed the House in the Seventy-seventh, Seventy-eighth, and Seventy-ninth Congresses, have never been reported out of the Senate standing committee even though the bills make absolutely no change, seems to me complete and conclusive proof that our present system of this phase of our functions is inadequate. The pending bill, in my opinion, would do nothing to improve the situation.

There seems to me to be only one solution of the problem. That is the creation of a Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Many of the benefits of the establishment of such a joint committee are obvious. For example, only by speedy action in both Houses can codification bills be kept up to date and such speedy action would be insured by having the work done by a joint committee. A splendid example of the working of a joint committee was the enactment of the Internal Revenue Code as Public Law No. 1 of the Seventy-sixth Congress. The period of time between the passage of the bill in the House and in the Senate was so short that no additional legislation affecting internal revenue was enacted which would require an amendment of the bill in the Senate after it had passed the House.

It is inconceivable to me that the Congress should permit such a serious defect in our legislative process to continue. It is not necessary to take the time of the Members now in explaining the great need for codification of our laws. That is a well-established fact. We have made some progress, but there is still much to be decided, and it is my sincere hope that some provision will be made for continuing the work in the most efficient manner possible.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I cannot pretend to possess the knowledge of these intricate problems that is possessed by the members of the special committee because I was not a member of it. My principal concern from the beginning of all this discussion has been in the committee organization of the House. I would like to say a few words about that.

Cold machinery does not necessarily work efficiently. We might set up something that is apparently agreeable in the way of organizing the legislative body, but unless it appeals to the Members and gives each Member an opportunity to be useful in the line of work which appeals to him, the machinery itself is not effective. It is from the human standpoint—perhaps I may use that expression—that I have approached this question of the consolidation of committees.

It so happens I have served on the Committee on Committees of the Republican minority for some time. I came into contact with the ambitions and desires of individual Members with respect to assignments to committees. I noticed especially how difficult it is, under the committee system as we now have it, to take a new Member who is anxious to serve and who is equipped with intelligence, and give him a job that is worthwhile. In a large number of instances, we are compelled, under the present setup, to put that Member upon a committee which seldom meets, or perhaps on two or three committees, no one of which meets frequently, in an endeavor to make it appear to outsiders that he is being accorded recognition. As a matter of fact, for many years I have had a deep sympathy with newly elected Members of the House on both sides of the aisle, in that it takes so long for them to reach a committee which appeals to them, holds their attention, and gives them a chance to serve the country to the best advantage.

Therefore, I was very much in favor of the rearrangement or consolidation of the committees of the House in such fashion that every committee of the House shall be important, and that every Member of the House, be he a newcomer or an oldster, shall be on an important committee. With this provision as proposed by the special committee, we are to have 19 committees instead of 48, and, as I understand it, the members of the special committee have made distribution of the membership to those 19 committees in such fashion that every Member of the House will be on one important committee, whose work will hold his attention, and the performance of which will give him satisfaction and pride. I think there is a morale program here and I have thought so for years. A newcomer should be given a better chance than he is given today under this curious old conglomeration of 48 committees.

You will note that 3 of the committees out of the 19 as proposed by the special committee are not regarded as "exclusive." They are the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Un-American Activities, and the Committee on House Administration. It is specifically provided that a Member assigned to one of those committees, which are obviously of less importance than the other 16, may serve on one of the others. That is so that every Member of the House in accordance with the numerical distribution committee by committee will have a chance to serve to the best of his ability; and I think that will do more for the spirit and morale of this House than any other change that could occur.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I fully agree with what the gentleman is saying but I should like to have his suggestions and interpretation of how the theory is to be applied to the present standing committees of the House on which men are now serving who next year we might not think were peculiarly fitted for service on that particular committee. Will their seniority prevail and they stay there, or will there be a new deal all the way around?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A new Congress will be elected this coming autumn and that Congress will organize itself. We have got to trust the next Congress to put this machinery to work. I cannot stand here at this time and say exactly what is going to happen to every Member of this Congress when he comes back upon being reelected to the next Congress. We will all be treated alike, at least.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I believe we all know it to be a fact that oftentimes a man on an important committee, one of our exclusive committees, under the present set-up will find some man running against him and allege that John Jones over here is a member of five committees or seven committees and for that reason this man is not rendering any service to Congress and ought to be defeated; and many have been defeated on that very argument.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Quite frequently the public misunderstands the committee system here and the method by which Members of the House are placed on committees.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Is not this proposal that the House shall elect the chairman of the standing committees the same as the present procedure? Is there any change over present procedure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be no change at all because the House today elects all the chairmen.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JARMAN. I imagine the gentleman had in mind exactly what I had in mind when he propounded that question. According to the press, there was a sentiment on the part of this committee in its inception to change the method of selecting committee chairmanships from the old-established seniority rule, and in that, as the gentleman just said a moment ago, we have to trust the next Congress. But I am wondering if the gentleman knows whether there is any disposition on the part of this committee at this time to change the method of selecting committee chairmen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I remind the gentleman that I am not a member of the special committee and consequently have not been able to read their minds. I have not heard of any such disposition.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to my friend from Alabama that there was no disposition on the part of the joint committee to go into that party machinery as distinguished from the machinery under the rules of the House. On this side the committee on the committees and on the other side the Committee on Ways and Means will function just as they do now. There is no change there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say a word—very briefly it must be—with respect to what I believe will be increased efficiency of the legislative body as a whole. It must be admitted that we scatter out amongst too many committees the work of legislation. There are instances where two or three committees now existing under the present organization actually pass upon very similar things. The proposal here is that when there is a group of functions to be performed by the Federal Government, functions similar one with the other, then a committee of the House as well as a committee of the Senate shall be so constituted as to get an over-all view of the whole problem involved in those particular functions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, we know perfectly well, of course, that we have three pension committees. It is obvious that the pension policy of the United States should be standardized under one statute or one series of statutes and that the best way to have those policies formulated in the way of legislation is to have the Senate and the House study the whole question of military pensions and benefits and be in position to bring to us better conceived programs. Then, too, the Federal Government in recent years has embarked upon a large number of public works involving authorization of literally hundreds of millions of dollars; indeed, they go up into the billions of dollars.

There is Rivers and Harbors, there is Flood Control, there is Roads, citing three, all of them involving construction. We have three different committees to handle the problem of public works generally and each committee works in its own compartment with seldom an opportunity of ascertaining what another committee is doing in a similar field and what the effect of the other committee's action will be on the Federal finances. Would not our legislation be sounder and better considered if a strong central committee of the House screened these public works, measured their effect down into the future, not only upon the progress of the country but upon the fiscal position of the Federal Government, and be in a position to present to the House an over-all view of the public works program of the United States? That, in my opinion, would be a more effective way of doing it for the long view than having it done by three or four separate committees, no two of which consult each other.

Very much the same thing can be said with respect to the support of the military forces. I have myself encountered instances in which one particular committee, we will say the Committee on Military Affairs, reports a recommendation to the House as to the size of the Army and its composition, including the Air Corps, yet no member of the Military Affairs Committee has ever heard what the Navy is proposing. And vice versa. May I cite one instance on the floor here. When the Naval Affairs Committee, exercising its functions perfectly correctly under our custom, under our system, brought in a resolution fixing the size of the Navy—that was only last year—at so many ships, I think 1,079 and 550,000 enlisted men, at an estimated cost of so many billion dollars, I asked the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee on the floor whether or not his committee had any knowledge of what the War Department was going to propose with respect to the size of the Army, its composition, and its cost. The answer was in the negative. I pursued the inquiry further. I went to the War Department and asked the officers of the General Staff whether or not the War Department or the General Staff had ever been consulted by the Navy as to the size of the Navy. No. Now, the same thing will happen in the opposite direction. The Military Affairs Committee of the House may bring in a bill fixing the size of the peacetime Army. We have only an interim Army now. If it does so, under the present system there will be no consultation between the members of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs with respect to an over-all military policy. My hope has been for years dating back to the time when I was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, that the Congress would seize control of the military policy of the United States, and my belief is that it can do so by having the admirals and the generals come before the same committee in the presence of each other to tell their stories.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN].

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, although it has not been my privilege to become as familiar with these matters as the distinguished gentleman who just preceded me, and as many Members of this committee, I cannot refrain from confessing my inability to agree with the pessimism which seems to prevail about Congress. I do not agree, for instance, with this sentence on the first page of the report accompanying this bill. After referring to legislative machinery and procedure, the report says:

> They must be modernized if we are to avoid an imminent break-down of the legislative branch of the National Government.

My colleagues, I cannot bring myself to agree with that. I do not believe that the legislative branch of this Government is going to break down if this bill does not pass as it is written, or if it does not pass at all, and I am not sure that we are performing any great service either to ourselves—witness Georgia and Oklahoma in the past week—to this Congress, or to this country in publicizing statements of that kind. Some reorganization, of course, is justified and necessary.

However, I am not at all sure that I can get my consent to vote for this bill as introduced. There are several provisions of which I am doubtful. I am not at all sure that time will be saved and business expedited by requiring the actual presence of a majority of a committee to report a bill. I am equally doubtful about the requirement that the testimony of witnesses before committees be in writing. Nor do I think that a majority vote of a committee should be necessary to an executive session except those for marking up bills or voting. On the other hand, I think that the chairman of a committee who wishes to call an executive session for the purpose of securing confidential testimony, for instance during war, should be authorized to do so without any vote by the members of the committee. Under this bill he cannot do so because of the requirement of a majority vote of the members. I am very doubtful whether the statute of limitation which would bar claims after a year allows sufficient time to always prove equitable.

While I consider these objections worth while, and could mention others, they really fade into insignificance in comparison with one which to me stands out. The fact has been published throughout the Nation that this bill would raise our salaries to $15,000 or 50 percent, as it ostensibly does; in fact, on page 41 of the report we find the statement: "It increases the compensation of Members of Congress to $15,000 per annum." While this is technically true, we all know that the fact is no such actual increase occurs. This results from the fact that this bill, while raising the actual salaries from $10,000 to $15,000, repeals the $2,500 nontaxable expense allowance we have received for 2 years. Consequently, the raise is actually from $12,500 to $15,000, or 20 percent. If this bill becomes law, I do not wish it to go out to the country that we have raised our salaries 50 percent, whereas the actual raise is 20 percent.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I wish to propound to you a question or two. The distinguished gentleman heard the references made a while ago to committee chairmanships. The gentleman will recall that in the press—I do not know whether it was the attitude of the members of his committee, but it was so publicized—it was stated that there was an attitude on the part of some members of the committee to change the established seniority custom regarding existing chairmen. I recognize that is a prerogative of the House, and it was publicized that the gentleman's committee was going to take it up. I would like to know if there is any disposition on the part of the gentleman's committee to change that custom.

Mr. MONRONEY. I would like to assure the gentleman from Alabama that under the rule by which the committee was established, our committee was denied the right to recommend any change in either practice, precedent, custom, or tradition of either House, and under that rule we felt we were bound by the rule not to go into the matter of seniority, although we had witnesses to testify regarding it. We had testimony to that effect. I think the gentleman is concerned with whether any attempt will be made to change, as this new committee goes into gear after the first of the year, the established practice regarding the assignment of Members to committees and the positions on the committees upon which they sit, and the time-honored custom of the Congress that the chairman of the committees shall be elected by the House. I am able to say to the gentleman that we did not change the rule in any regard concerning the election of committees by the House. We did feel that we had no jurisdiction or right, for instance, to recommend any changes regarding committees on the Republican side, who must assign Members to committees and determine their positions on the committees, and I assure the gentleman, with my respect for the strength of the Committee on Ways and Means and its influence in the House, that we did not intend to say to the Committee on Ways and Means what they should do in this instance.

So as the House meets the first of next year the machinery of the House will be exactly the same regarding the assignment of Members to committees and their positions thereon.

Mr. JARMAN. I thank the gentleman very much. In view of the remark a while ago of the gentleman from New York about trusting the next Congress, and in view of the publicity which occurred, I was naturally interested.

One more question: There appears on page 33 of the bill, line 13, a provision which I am certain the gentleman does not mean, and if it has not been corrected I propose to offer an amendment to correct it. That is the provision that the Committee on House Administration shall have jurisdiction over the employment of persons by the House, including clerks for Members and committees.

Mr. MONRONEY. That has nothing to do with the appointment of clerks of Members. However, the Accounts Committee is charged with determining the allocation of the $9,500 clerical hire and seeing that it does not run over that. This has no relationship whatever to the employment of the clerks, but they do have to administer the appropriations which are made for clerk hire.

Mr. JARMAN. It has nothing to do with the selection of the personnel?

Mr. MONRONEY. No, indeed.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I regret I cannot go along with what appears to be a majority of the House in support of this bill described as a measure "to provide increased efficiency in government." Of course I am for efficiency. I have legislation pending to do that very thing. I have spoken on that subject many times. There are some provisions in this bill I should be glad to support. There are others to which I am opposed.

I am opposed to the increase of $5,000 to Members of Congress, in this bill. This is 50 percent. No one knows better than I that expenses have increased for Members of this body, since they were fixed 20 years ago. Living costs in Washington are higher than anywhere in the country. But, Mr. Speaker, times are unsettled. Members of Congress should not establish these increases when we are expected to hold the line in other places. This is not the first time I have expressed opposition to this sort of thing.

Mr. Chairman, I am also opposed to the next section in the bill that allows Members of Congress to come under the retirement system similar to that afforded civil-service employees. They are a different group. They are appointed career people. We are elected and serve at the will of the electors. If Members were required to pay full contribution during the entire period of service, it would not be quite so inequitable, but this section contains a provision that would allow a Member to retire after 6 years' service after paying about $3,000 and get about $2,000 per year the remainder of his life. As I have said, if he drew according to his contribution, it would not be quite so inequitable. This is certainly asking too much, even if you favor the policy of allowing retirement pay to elective officials. At the proper time I shall expect to offer to strike the retirement section from the bill. If offered by another Member, I shall support such amendment.

Mr. Chairman, unless the bill is amended in line with my proposal to strike both these sections from the bill, I shall vote against it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, this proposal for reorganizing Congress has some meritorious features. Those things relating to committee changes and the like, which will add to the efficiency of Congress, are commendable.

I do not approve, nor will I support, those provisions raising the pay for Members of Congress and providing for their retirement benefits. The Federal budget has not been balanced, we are still going into debt, and in view of my opposition to excessive spending in other fields, I cannot support this proposal.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this general plan of reorganization. I think we can improve our product, that is, wise legislation, by improvement in congressional organization. I hope we will not lay so much stress upon organization that we overlook the need for the better product, wise legislation. I was impressed with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] that he intended to offer an amendment at a certain page in the bill. I, too, have had difficulty in bringing myself to approve a 50 percent increase in salary for Members. On the other hand, I have no difficulty whatever bringing myself to approve a sane retirement provision for Members of Congress. In fact I heartily approve—not of pensions for Congressmen—but a proper, self contributory retirement plan for Members of Congress. This is not only for individual security but for the general benefit. Without a retirement plan Congress may tend to become a rich man's club. I have spoken in favor of congressional retirement on at least one or two earlier occasions.

I think I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio when it is offered, for I believe we will be unable to face our constituents and say to them, "We have increased our own pay all out of proportion to that which we have provided for employees of the Government and permitted in the case of employees generally throughout the country." I recall we have not been generous with our elderly citizens, nor other groups which could be mentioned.

I want to ask the chairman a question. I notice on page 38, lines 20, 21, and 22, there is set out part of the former jurisdiction of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation which would be included in the jurisdiction of the proposed Committee on Public Lands. At present the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation deals with acquired private lands as well as public lands. Does the gentleman feel this language covers the entire ground?

Mr. MONRONEY. No; may I say to the gentleman that in the matter of these jurisdictional specifications we could not attempt without reporting a bill which would probably be several hundred pages long to cover every specific matter that would come under a committee's jurisdiction.

Where not otherwise specified, the precedents of the House will apply. I believe the gentleman's committee now has the jurisdiction to acquire the lands of which he speaks. There is no effort to take that away from the committee. We just felt that we did not have space enough to cover everything that could possibly arise on the question of committee jurisdiction.

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the gentleman. It may be that on further thought I shall want to offer an amendment here to make the matter clear. As chairman of that Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation today, I have no particular pride in chairmanship on my own part, but I do have a pride in committeeship—I have a pride in this committee. I have an obligation to the committee and to the great cause of reclamation not to be taken lightly. I do not want the functions of the present committee to be impaired or to be reduced if it should be merged with another committee.

The Bureau of Reclamation was established in 1902. It has built about a billion dollars worth of projects, adding greatly to the new wealth of the Nation. Yet, I feel its task is only beginning. We must center in any future committee the full authority and functions now exercised by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. That is the point that I have in mind which prompts me to ask the question. Unless I can be positively assured of the sufficiency of this authority, I shall want to offer an amendment at the end of line 22, page 38, when we read the bill for amendment.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, as we consider the structure of the Congress of the United States and the practices and procedures of our national legislature, we find there are many questions involved as we read carefully, as I am sure most of the Members have, the provisions presented in S. 2177. Perhaps it would be interesting and informative to the committee for me to discuss, although presumably it will be developed by Mr. DIRKSEN and others, the retirement plan which is contemplated if this legislation becomes law. I do so on the premise that the House Committee on Civil Service gave many weeks of study to this problem. As you recall, we attempted to report a retirement measure to the floor for action. I recall at that time the very able gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] said to me in private conversation off the floor of the House—and I think he said it publicly at the time the rule was considered—that he believed we should hold all of these reorganization features together in the legislation and bring them here in one comprehensive legislative proposal for action of our colleagues.

I differed with him at that time. I thought we were presented with a proper challenge; yet I have come to feel that perhaps he was correct. For that reason I made no serious attempt at that time to impress on my colleagues the necessity for voting on the retirement subject matter.

Mr. Chairman, I now discuss and analyze the retirement provisions contained in the measure.

Subsection (a) of section 602: This subsection excludes from retirement the elective officers who are "in the executive branch of the Government" and thus permits retirement coverage for elective officers in the legislative branch of the Government under conditions mentioned in the next subsection. The President and Vice President are accordingly excluded from retirement coverage.

Subsection (b) of section 602—new provisions: This entire subsection adds a new section to the Civil Service Retirement Act, setting up special provisions relating to retirement obligations of and benefits for Members of Congress.

Paragraph (1)—coverage: Provides that the Retirement Act shall not apply to any Member of Congress until he exercises an option to come within the purview thereof and gives notice in writing to the disbursing officer by whom paid of his desire to make contributions to the retirement fund and otherwise participate as a member of that fund.

The required notice may be given by a Member of Congress within 6 months after the date of enactment of the pending bill, or within 6 months after any date on which he takes an oath as a Member of Congress.

Election could not be made by a former Member of Congress unless and until he again takes oath as such Member.

Paragraph (2)—contribution rate: Provides that each Member who elects to come within the retirement law shall contribute 6 percent of his basic compensation for all service after the effective date of the pending bill.

All others subject to the Retirement Act now contribute 5 percent of basic pay.

Purchase of past service: Deposit for the purpose of purchasing credit for past service performed prior to the date of enactment of pending bill would be at the same rate as required of all others subject to the retirement law, as follows:

Two and one-half percent of base pay for service August 1, 1920, to June 30, 1926.

Three and one-half percent of base pay for service July 1, 1926, to June 30, 1942.

Five percent of base pay for service from July 1, 1942.

No deposit is required for service before August 1, 1920, but credit is automatically granted therefor in all cases.

Paragraph (3), requirements for annuity: Requires that a Member of Congress shall have served at least 6 years as such and have reached the age of 62 before he shall be entitled to receive an annuity except, that if a Member becomes disabled, a minimum of 5 years of service shall be required, irrespective of age requirements.

For all except Members of Congress, at least 5 years of service is required for a discontinued service benefit at age 62.

Members of Congress and all other members of the retirement fund must have a minimum of 5 years of service for a disability benefit and there is no age requirement in any disability case.

Paragraph (4), must contribute for at least 5 years for annuity benefit: Provides that a Member shall make contributions to the fund for at least 5 years, or deposit the equivalent thereof with interest, to be entitled to any annuity benefit.

No such requirement for other members of the retirement fund.

Paragraph (5), annuity rate: Assuming deposit for all past services as a Member of Congress subsequent to July 31, 1920, the annuity would be 2½ percent of a Member's average basic salary as such Member, multiplied by the number of years of such service, but no annuity shall exceed an amount equal to three-fourths of the salary received at the time of his separation from the service.

If a Member of Congress fails to make deposit for all his years of congressional service—beyond the 5 years actually required—the years for which he did not contribute or make a deposit would be counted in computing his annuity, but the annuity would be reduced by the amount of annuity purchasable with the deposit not made.

See chart of comparative rates of annuity payable as proposed to Members of Congress and to those under the regular provisions of the Retirement Act.

When regular annuity begins: If a Member of Congress is age 62 or over when he leaves office, his annuity would begin to accrue on the 1st of the month following the month in which he separates.

If the Member separates prior to attaining age 62 his annuity would become effective on the 1st day of the month following the month in which he attains age 62.

Interest on deposits between separation and date of annuity: In the case last mentioned above, his contributions would draw interest from the date of separation, to beginning date of annuity, at the rate of 3 percent compounded annually.

Types of annuity: A Member of Congress could elect any one of three kinds of annuity as follows:

Life annuity with return of any unexpended balance in case of death;

Increased life annuity with forfeiture of any unexpended balance in case of death;

Joint and survivor annuity by which the Member may share his annuity with a survivor either in an equal amount or one-half of the Member's annuity. Most persons name the spouse under the Civil Service Retirement Act.

Paragraph (6), refunds: A Member who elects to contribute to the retirement fund and is separated before becoming eligible for annuity would be entitled to the return of his credited contributions with interest at the rate of 4 percent compounded annually.

No Member who receives a refund as provided above may subsequently become eligible for annuity as such Member, unless he redeposits the refund with interest, but no interest would be required during any period of separation from the service.

Paragraph (7), reelected Member drawing annuity: If a retired Member of Congress, drawing annuity is again elected to Congress he may either (a) have his annuity suspended during his subsequent service and resume the same annuity when subsequently separated, or (b) elect to become again a member of the retirement fund and contribute 6 percent of base pay, during his subsequent service so that his annuity would be recomputed, with the inclusion of the additional service upon subsequent separation—annuity to be suspended.

Paragraph (8) certain congressional service under pending bill not creditable toward annuity for service in the executive branch: This section is designed primarily to prevent a continuance of existing practice under which a Member of Congress after separation as such may receive appointment in the executive branch of the Government and be accorded credit toward annuity for all his service as a Member of Congress.

Under S. 2177 a Member of Congress who has served for at least 6 years, any part of which occurs after the enactment of the bill, may not have credit for his service as such Member toward regular civil-service annuity.

If, however, the Member of Congress has less than 6 years of such service, or if all of his service was before the effective date of the pending bill, such service may be credited toward any annuity under Civil Service Retirement Act for which he may be eligible.

No service is creditable toward an annuity for a Member of Congress, under the bill, except the service as such Member.

No period of service creditable for the purpose of a congressional annuity computation shall be used also for the purpose of a regular annuity computation under the Civil Service Retirement Act.

Paragraph (9) no separation age: All laws relating to automatic separation from the service on account of age are waived for Members of Congress.

Paragraph (10): Defines the term "Member of Congress."

Cost figures: It is estimated that the normal cost for the retirement benefits of the pending bill will be $198,000 a year.

Normal cost is that figure resulting when both the Member and the Government contribute their shares of the cost currently.

The deficiency cost, or accrued liability, would total $3,000,000. If this cost be amortized over a period of 52 years—following the procedure of the Civil Service Retirement Act—there would be an annual cost of about $136,000 until the liability be liquidated.

The deficiency cost or accrued liability arises because of credit allowance for past or previous service.

The above figures are in line with those arrived at by the Retirement Division of the Civil Service Commission

If we take into consideration that a Member of Congress may now, upon failure of reelection, secure an appointment in the executive service, and upon retirement therefrom secure credit for his congressional service, the figures given are an overstatement because the practice would not obtain under S. 2177.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks so that Members will have for their information in the RECORD, my discussion of the retirement pay provisions as contained in this bill so that the material appears in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I have long felt the need for a reorganization of the committees of Congress, as well as the procedure of the House. Streamlining of Congress is long past due. I feel that the provisions providing for congressional reorganization, as provided in the committee amendment will bring far greater dispatch and efficiency in the handling of legislative matters. I am also convinced that the consolidation of committees with more efficient staffs, will make possible closer scrutiny of all legislative proposals, which will result in the saving of billions of dollars annually for American taxpayers. I shall vote for the rule to bring this proposal up for consideration.

I cannot agree to the provision which increases the salary of Members up to $15,000, and I will, therefore, vote for the amendment to retain the present salary. I do not feel that Congress should increase the salary of its Members until the budget has been balanced. While the proposed salary increase does not affect the Members of the present Congress, it is my opinion that a mistake will be made to take such action now. We should take the leadership in keeping expenses of government down.

I recognize that many Members are interested in the retirement fund proposed in this legislation. I want to hear the proposal fully discussed by the members of the committee. If the retirement fund is established, I suggest that all Members desiring to join should be required to make full payment retroactively for the number of years of service, in order that the system may be considered in accordance with sound actuarial principles. No Member of Congress should receive anything for nothing after his service has been terminated. He should be required to pay the same as though he purchased an annuity from a private insurance company.

The reorganization of Congress should not be a personal matter with any of the present membership. We are legislating for the future. Congress needs streamlining now. We are dealing with the largest business in the world, and our constituents expect us to handle their affairs in a businesslike manner, with the realization that we are the official representatives selected by them to protect the economy of our country and safeguard their interests.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, no informed person presently contends that the Congress is adequately organized or equipped to perform the duties which the framers of the Constitution anticipated it would perform. The framers of the Constitution thought in prospect and showed marvelous vision in what they wrought. It was impossible, however, for them to even visualize, much less contemplate, the duties of the legislative branch of the Government in the year 1946. They provided for changes in the Constitution and in the law of the land. They expected coming generations to keep abreast of the times. Their plans have worked well. Needed changes to the Constitution have been made; however, the Congress has been derelict about improving its own procedure. We are naturally conservative people, and it is well that we are that way. Any changes made should be of a progressive nature, inspired by necessity and not the result of emotional or radical appeal on the part of that minority which feels that our form of government has outlived its usefulness, and which is sympathetic to foreign ideologies.

The bill which we bring you today had its genesis in study on the part of students of government, political scientists, efficiency engineers, and Members of Congress. It is not a hasty conclusion inspired by any particular pressure group of our people. It reflects the considerate thought and almost unanimous approval of all of these groups.

I do not agree with those sincere and enthusiastic pessimists who believe that Congress must be modernized if we are to avoid an imminent break-down of the legislative branch of the National Government. It is not as bad as that. Present laws, rules, and regulations governing the Congress are the result of trial and error. The rules and the regulations of the first Congress are not at all like those of today. Congress after Congress, appreciating the experiences of the past, has yielded to progress but has made only such changes as were imperative.

There is a difference between that which is essential to function and that which is advisable in order that functioning may be more effective. Congress has stumbled along during the last few years when the shackles of outworn precedents should have been removed. The purpose of this proposed legislation is to remove these shackles and not only to make it easy but to make it possible for the Congress to fulfill the duties for which it was created. During the last 10 years the legislative picture has become extremely involved. The Federal Government is participating in an alarming extent in State, local, and community affairs. The present committee system is a glaring example of the horse-and-buggy days brought up to date, but still using the horse and buggy. There are three times as many committees as there were a few years ago. Additional committees are added, while useless committees are continued. We all know the primary reasons for the continuance of these unnecessary committees. I think the people are beginning to understand the facts and, when they are fully advised, will insist upon doing away with this inefficiency. The fact that it does reflect glory on needless committee chairmen and on the membership of outworn standing committees does not warrant its perpetuation.

Every committee in a way is a miniature legislature where policies are considered, determined, and the pros and cons of legislation evaluated. If this is true, then these committees should be active, representative, and as large as possible in keeping with accomplishment. This bill envisions such a condition. Who can justify the present jurisdictional committee set-up where four House committees deal with public works, six deal with public land problems, and three with veterans' affairs, and so on down the list. None of these committees dealing with like subject matter has any contact with or knowledge of similar matters being worked upon by the other committees. This is not only committee inefficiency but, as a rule, militates against the best interests of the groups primarily affected.

It is hoped by the proponents of the bill to correlate the legislative activities of the House and the Senate to avoid duplication, conserve time of the Members, as well as the time of innumerable executive and agency representatives, who spend weeks appearing before different House and Senate committees dealing with the same subject, and are compelled to tell their stories and make their cases over and over again. Mr. Speaker, all of this just does not make sense. This bill will not cure all of the evils, but it will help. Neither the Senate bill nor the House bill were hastily prepared. For more than a year the joint congressional committee, assigned the task of making this study and reporting to the Congress, has worked at that job. As a member of that committee I know whereof I speak. The committee has had the very able and enthusiastic assistance of Dr. George Galloway, the committee counsel, who has pioneered in this field for a number of years. The legislative counsel of the House and the Senate has given generously of its time and knowledge, and is entitled to much credit for the form in which the committee's views are brought to you.

Time for general debate is limited, and I can render no better service in explaining the bill than by adopting as a part of my remarks an excerpt of the committee report, which reads as follows:

At present the combined membership of all the standing committees in the House is 908 and of the 10 exclusive committees is 291. In addition, there are 6 special committees of the House, with a total membership of 62. Altogether the 439 Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of the Seventy-ninth Congress occupy 970 seats on its standing and special committees, an average of 2.2 seats per Member. Under the bill, Representatives would serve on one standing committee each and no more, with the exception of the District and Un-American Activities Committees, whose members would serve on two committees each, and of the Expenditures and Administration Committees, whose majority members would serve on two standing committees each.

The bill would also define the jurisdiction of each reorganized committee so as to avoid jurisdictional disputes between them. It would expand the present meager staff facilities of our standing committees, which are the real workshops of Congress; permit each committee to appoint four experts in its field; and strengthen the legislative reference and legislative counsel services which are our own unbiased research and legal arms.

As further steps toward improving the policy-determining machinery of Congress, the bill would regularize committee procedure as regards hearings, meetings, and records. It would expedite the reporting of bills. Committee powers are defined, and permission to sit while the Senate is in session is restricted. The bill also seeks to confine conference committees to the consideration of matters in disagreement between the two Houses and outlaw legislative riders on appropriation bills.

In the last analysis, Congress is the center of political gravity under our form of government because it reflects and expresses the popular will in the making of national policy. Too often, however, the true attitude of public opinion is distorted and obscured by the pressures of special-interest groups. Beset by swarms of lobbyists seeking to protect this or that small segment of the economy or to advance this or that narrow interest, legislators find its difficult to discover the real majority will and to legislate in the public interest. As Government control of economic life and its use as an instrument of popular welfare have increased, the activities of these powerful groups have multiplied. As the lawmaking, money-raising, and appropriating agency in the Federal Government, the acts of Congress affect the vital interests of these organized groups, many of which maintain legislative agents on or near Capitol Hill. These agents seek to transform the aims and programs of their groups into public policy by having them embodied in general legislation, by changing the tax laws to suit their own purposes, by using their influence to reduce or eliminate the appropriations for agencies they dislike and to increase the appropriations of agencies they favor, and by pressing for the ratification or rejection of treaties. Presidential nominations, and constitutional amendments. A pressure-group economy gives rise to government by whirlpools of special-interest groups in which the national welfare is often neglected. The pulling and hauling of powerful pressure groups create delays and distortions which imperil national safety in wartime and threaten paralysis and bankruptcy in time of peace. The public welfare suffers in the warfare of private groups and Congress becomes an arena for the rationalization of group and class interests.

Without impairing in any way the right of petition or freedom of expression, the bill provides for the registration of organized groups and their agents whose principal activity is seeking to influence legislation. It also requires them to file detailed quarterly accounts of their receipts and expenditures. Full information regarding the membership, source of contributions, and expenditures of such organized groups would prove helpful to Congress in evaluating their representations and weighing their worth. Publicity is a mild step forward in protecting Government under pressure and in promoting the democratization of pressure groups.

IMPROVED FISCAL PROCEDURES

A second set of provisions is designed to strengthen Congress in the performance of its appropriating function for the administrative establishment. Hitherto the efforts of Congress to compel compliance with the laws making specific appropriations have been too often frustrated. Congress has permitted transfers between appropriations, authorized the unlimited use of departmental receipts, and set up credit corporations with separate budgets. The executive has mingled appropriations, brought forward and backward unexpended and anticipated balances, incurred coercive deficiencies, and otherwise escaped the rigors of congressional control.

To correct these conditions, at least in part, the substitute provides for several improvements in the legislative phase of the budget process. It would provide for open hearings on appropriation bills and require all such bills to be fully and carefully considered by the entire Appropriations Committees of both Houses. It would allow Members time to study the committee hearings and reports on appropriation bills before their floor consideration. It would provide each appropriation subcommittee with a staff of not more than four qualified specialists in its particular expenditure province with a view to making a more thorough scrutiny of departmental estimates and to serve both the majority and minority members. The substitute would also forbid the reappropriation of unobligated balances except for continuing public works, which were estimated at $12,300,000,000 for the fiscal year 1946; and take steps toward limiting permanent appropriations which amounted to $5,600,000,000 in the fiscal year 1946.

Although Congress is charged by the Constitution with the power of the purse, there now is no correlation between income and outgo. Control of the spending power is divided between the Senate and the House of Representatives, and within each House between its revenue and appropriating committees. Taxes are levied and appropriations made by many separate committees. The right hand does not know what the left hand is doing.

To strengthen budget control, S. 2177, as it passed the Senate, provided for the adoption of annual Federal Budget totals by joint action of the revenue and appropriating committees of both Houses. If total estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year exceed the total estimated Federal receipts, Congress would be required by record vote to authorize the creation of additional Federal debt in the amount of the excess. If it appeared midway in the fiscal year that the total appropriations would exceed the total approved Budget figure, the President was directed by proclamation to reduce such appropriations by such amounts (to be fixed by him) so as to bring total expenditures within the limit previously set. These limitations would not apply in time of war or during a national emergency.

The substitute strikes out the provisions contained in the Senate bill explained above and inserts a provision requiring the same committees to meet jointly at the beginning of each Congress and after study and consultation report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year. Such budget will include the estimated overall Federal receipts and expenditures for such year and will contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year. Within such maximum amount it is contemplated that the committees will reserve a sufficient amount for subsequent deficiency appropriations as the need becomes apparent. It is realized that such amounts that may be reserved for deficiency will, of necessity for a few years, be on the trial and error method; however, it is believed that with a few years' experience such amount will be susceptible of definite determination in advance under ordinary circumstances. If said committees estimate that the receipts will exceed expenditures, the report will contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. A concurrent resolution will accompany such report and will contain language adopting such budget and fixing the maximum allowance to be appropriated for expenditure in such year. In addition, if an estimated deficit will result, the concurrent resolution will also include a section stating that it is the sense of Congress that the public debt shall be increased in an amount equal to such deficit.

OVERSIGHT OF ADMINISTRATIVE PERFORMANCE

A third group of provisions in the substitute is designed to strengthen congressional surveillance of the execution of the laws by the executive branch. Congress has long lacked adequate facilities for the continuous inspection and review of administrative performance. We often delegate the rule-making power to administrative departments and commissions, without making any provision for follow-up to see if administrative rules and regulations are in accord with the intent of the law. Several of the postwar acts, for example, require certain agencies to submit quarterly reports to Congress, but assign the responsibility for scrutinizing these reports to no legislative committees.

To remedy this situation, the substitute would authorize the standing committees of both Houses to exercise continuous surveillance of the execution of the laws by the administrative agencies within their jurisdiction. Staffed with qualified specialists in their respective provinces of public affairs, these committees would conduct a continuous review of the activities of the agencies administering laws originally reported by the legislative committees. The reconstructed standing committees will, it is hoped, roughly parallel the reorganized administrative structure of the executive branch of the Government and will be utilized as vehicles of consultation and collaboration between Congress and the corresponding administrative agencies within their respective jurisdictions.

As a further check upon the financial operations of the Government and its care in handling public funds, the substitute authorizes and directs the Comptroller General to make expenditure analyses of each agency in the executive branch, including Government corporations. Such analyses, with those made by the Bureau of the Budget, will furnish Congress a double check upon the economy and efficiency of administrative management. Reports on such analyses would be submitted by the Comptroller General to the Expenditures, Appropriations, and appropriate legislative committees of the two Houses.

SAVING CONGRESSIONAL TIME

Congress is overburdened by many local and private matters which divert its attention from national policy making and which it ought not to have to consider. It functions as a common council for the District of Columbia. It serves as a tribunal for the settlement of private claims. It spends much time on pension bills, the construction of bridges over navigable waters, and other private and local matters. The substitute bans the introduction in either House of private claims and pension bills, bridge bills, and other local and private legislation. Title IV provides for the administrative and judicial adjustment of tort claims against the United States which Congress is poorly equipped to settle. Title V grants the consent of Congress to the construction of bridges over navigable waters, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Self-government for the District of Columbia—a reform long overdue and a step toward reducing the legislative work load—is separately provided for in legislation introduced by Senator MCCARRAN and pending on the Senate Calendar.

These time-saving devices will not only make for a more efficient use of congressional time, they will also enable the Congress, which has been in almost continuous session since 1940, to take a regular annual recess. The substitute provides that, except in time of war or national emergency, the two Houses shall stand adjourned at the end of July each year. Such a regular adjournment at definite annual intervals will insure the return of Members to their constituents for that refreshment of contact and exchange of opinion and experience so essential to responsive representative government.

The substitute also provides the Senate and House caucus rooms, for the more efficient assignment of available space within the Capitol, and more convenient dining facilities.

The usefulness of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to all its readers would be increased by the printing in it of a daily calendar of legislative events, together with a résumé of congressional activities and an index of its contents.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, provision is made for increased compensation for the Members of the House and the Senate. It is also provided that Members, if they so desire, may take advantage of a retirement system; that is, under certain conditions, Members of Congress may contribute toward an annuity to be paid when they retire, but not before they reach the age of 62 years. This feature is entirely optional. In order to get the benefit of this retirement provision, the Member must pay 6 percent per annum on his salary, and the amount of the annuity is based upon this feature. There is no need in taking time to explain the provisions of this section because every Member here is familiar with it. Suffice it to say, that there is no apparent reason why Members of Congress should not be permitted to purchase annuities when they retire, the same as are now available to all civil service and other employees. No retirement or pension, or whatever you want to call it, should be allowed except by contribution by those who desire to purchase this type of security.

This bill may be amended in any way a majority of the House desires. No limitations are placed on amendments. A free and open discussion will be had and the House will be permitted to work its will for or against any provision or amendments. That is fair, and it is to be hoped that the membership will forget any prejudices or personal interests and in the final analysis vote for that which they believe to be in the best interests of the country as a whole.

The entire bill will be read during its consideration and will be printed in the RECORD so that no further explanation of the terms is necessary at this time. I shall vote for some amendments and shall then vote for the bill.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the reorganization of the Congress is long overdue. I think it would be a mistake if the House failed to go along with the Senate in the matter of the reorganization of both the Senate and the House. I have been a Member of the House for a good many years. I speak from my experience.

The fundamental thing that influences me in the consideration of this bill is the consolidation of the committees of the House so that every Member may be given an important assignment. It is a matter of common knowledge that there are many similar functions considered by different committees. The consolidation therefore of the committees and the consolidation generally as provided in the pending bill will make for efficiency and will promote morale and better service in my judgment in the discharge of our official duties.

In respect to the increase in the salaries of Members I should like to say that personally I oppose the increase from our existing salary of $10,000 to $15,000. I am unable to square an increase now of 50 percent in our salaries, when I maintain it would be unwise for such a general increase in wages or salaries to be made in industry, manufacturing, and agriculture. Personally, I favored increasing salaries within the Little Steel formula, but, inasmuch as wages and salaries have been increased about 30 percent, I now feel salaries should be increased to $12,500.

I do believe, however, that there should be an increase in the aggregate of approximately $5,000 in the total compensations of Members. I think it would be wise for $2,500 of that amount to be for the payment of our expenses of living that we duplicate in being required to maintain residences in our districts and in Washington. I therefore favor an amendment that our salaries be increased to $12,500 and that in addition thereto there be allowed a definite stipulated amount of $2,500 for each Member to provide for the duplication of our expenses. I think that would be preferable to a straight-out increase of $5,000, as provided in the bill. I have insisted for years that rent and similar expenses be allowed as deductions, as Members have homes in their districts and must duplicate home expenses in Washington.

Another matter—it is rather minor—is the so-called stenographic pool. There are a number of details in the bill about which I am in doubt. I speak, therefore, with respect to the over-all matter of reorganization, but I do not believe that any Member of the House should be given an advantage with respect to additional stenographic assistance that is not accorded to every other Member. We provide for the chairmen of committees and we provide for staffing those committees, but I urge on the special committee in charge of the bill that there ought to be one yardstick with respect to salaries and with respect to stenographic allowances that is applicable to every Member of the House.

If that provision is not made definite and certain in this bill, the provision or section should be eliminated.

Personally, I oppose retirement benefits for elected public officials, whether those officials be the President or Vice President of the United States, Senators and Representatives of the United States, or senators and representatives in the State legislatures. I advocate eliminating the retirement section, which is 602, from the bill.

Under the terms of the proposed bill there will be congressional retirement benefits. It is said they are optional, but that is no answer. We merely put ourselves in the same category that our clerical help is now in with respect to the optional feature. Favoring as I do the principle of retirement in business and in the Government services where there are careers, I cannot bring myself to believe that that principle could be applicable with respect to elected public officials. Members of the Senate and Members of the House must pass upon all legislation for the retirement of other Government employees. If the President and the Vice President are to be eliminated from retirement benefits, as provided in this bill, in my judgment, in principle, I believe that retirement benefits should not be made applicable to elected public officials, including Senators and Representatives, and I therefore oppose that provision in this bill and favor its elimination. Retirement benefits for elected officials is contrary to sound public policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman for Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a member of the joint congressional committee and one who has given much attention to this whole matter over a period of years.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois to take the time while he is addressing the Committee to explain title III, particularly the section with reference to legislation concerning lobbyists.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Chairman, open confession is good for the soul and I do not mind indicating to the House that the particular measure before you today has been of extremely high interest to me for a great many years. I have never felt, and I came here nearly 14 years ago, that I should permit myself to become so inert in my thinking that the old-time religion of congressional procedure was good enough for me if it was good enough for those who antedated me in service; that if there was some improvement we could make in efficiency and economy, if there is some little thing we can do to retrieve the esteem in which this body ought to be regarded by the people in a constitutional, representative democracy, I felt I should lend what feeble talent and zeal I might have to that cause. I have been at it now for about 6 years. The fruition of that feeble effort and even more so the undiminished efforts of the gentleman from Oklahoma, MIKE MONRONEY, who early and late has carried water and done chores to help bring this about, is before you today.

The joint committee had long hearings and heard many witnesses. Finally a bill was drawn. It received thorough discussion on the floor of the United States Senate for 4 days, and was concluded on the 10th day of June 1946.

When the roll was called the vote was 49 to 16, meaning that, by a vote of 3 to 1 of the Senators who voted, this measure was adopted. Well, of course, our hopes were high and we looked forward to the day when action might be gotten on this measure before the curtain of the Seventy-ninth Congress might be pulled down.

Here and now I want to pay testimony to the beloved Speaker of the House of Representatives. We have had some conferences with SAM RAYBURN—and I call him SAM affectionately—and sitting in those conferences were the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the minority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the Parliamentarian, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] and myself. I shall be everlastingly grateful to SAM RAYBURN for the great interest that he has manifested in this matter for a long period of time and for his anxious desire to see that action was taken thereon before this Congress expires. So, Mr. Chairman, speaking as a member of the joint committee, and speaking as one who has been so vitally interested in this matter, I accord you my personal gratitude, and I think the House and the Senate of the United States also owe you a debt of gratitude for the splendid and fine way in which you have looked upon these efforts.

It was with a sense of distress that I read an editorial in one of the newspapers this week that so indefensibly and so unwarrantably attacked the Speaker of this House on the theory that he was the one who occasioned the deletion of one portion of this bill. That is an unconscionable distortion of the facts, for when we were sitting in quiet fellowship in the Speaker's office we explored every item in the bill. We wanted to get a bill that we thought would be given consideration and receive favorable action by the House. So, what was finally contrived was contrived out of a rare and understanding fellowship. So, I salute the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN, the beloved Speaker of this House, for having helped to give direction and help to pilot this thing so that before this Congress expires some final action can be had on this bill and, I hope, on the conference report that will follow.

Now, Members of the House, it is a question of the approach to this thing. I have not the slightest doubt that you can find lots of things in this bill that can be attacked. Obviously, no finite minds, if they were imbued with all the wisdom of 10 Solomons, could bring a bill of such magnitude, with so much detail and modification, to the attention of this House but what some item would be subject to attack.

We have tried to carry out a basic and fundamental premise. The first part of that premise or formula is to save and economize on time for the Members. I have emphasized and echoed and reechoed in the well of this House the need for more time so that you can get your feet on the desk, so that you can reflect, free from the pressure and the chores, and do a responsible legislative job. I know that when you get to your offices in the morning the telephone rings. There is a pile of mail, there are callers from here and everywhere. Everybody is interested in the operation of government, and if this is in the early season of the Congress, by the time your committees begin, has there been any opportunity to reflect? You hear witnesses, and in the afternoon you are on the floor trying to digest the legislative proposals that come before us. What time is left, when night after night you have to lug your brief case full of legislation to your hotel room or apartment or to your home, and there find a little time free from the jingle of the telephone bell that strikes like, oh, some great discordant note in your reflections when you are trying to piece out a little something by way of legislation for the country.

What is done here with respect to banning private bills under a residual clause, those that are not covered by the tort claims title, by title can go to the Judiciary or Foreign Affairs Committee. On the average, about 2,500 private claims are introduced in every session of Congress. Somewhere between 250 and 300 get action. But there is a committee that has to go through all that matter. You as a Member representing a constituent must do it. Could we devise any better program, for instance, than to draw a line and say, "Now, look. In connection with tort claims, where money and property are involved, and personal injury and death, why not confer upon the administrative heads of the departments the authority to consider that matter where not more than $1,000 is involved"? Let him wrestle with it and let him make a report to Congress. In other cases, what better than to endow upon the citizen of the country the right and the authority, notwithstanding the old doctrine under which the king could not be sued by a subject, to go into the district courts? We confer upon the district courts of the country the right to hear these suits, and that immunity is waived. Let the district judge do it. After all, it is his responsibility. So that is the essence of the tort claims title that is here. I think it is very good.
